Mr. Zukor said that at the same time the plans for distribution were under discussion, the work of synchronizing the four big studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been perfected by Jesse L. Lasky, who is now in California. The Eastern studios will be under the supervision of Messrs. Hugh Ford and A. A. Kaufman, and the Western studios at Hollywood and Los Angeles under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille and M. E. Hoffman.

Announcement was made by Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, that complete information concerning the new booking plans may be obtained by all exhibitors from the Paramount exchanges throughout the country on and after May 15.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Houses.

"The Valentine Girl" at the Strand.

MARGUERITE CLARK was seen at the Strand theater the week of April 22 in "The Valentine Girl." The play tells an interesting story. Prominent in the supporting cast are Frank Losee, Richard Barthelmess, Katherine Adams, Maggie Holloway Fisher, Adolph Menjon and Edith Campbell Walker. Another attraction was Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle's initial appearance in the Paramount comedy, "The Butcher Boy." One of Raymond L. Ditmar's interesting Animal Life Pictures was also shown, and the Topical Review.

The soloists were Auguste Bouilliez, Rosa Lind and Andre Enrico.

"In Again, Out Again" at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks in his first Artcraft comedy, "In Again, Out Again," was the chief pictorial attraction on the program with which the Rialto celebrated its first anniversary. A new scenic setting painted by Joseph Urban was revealed in the theater for the first time, with special supplementary light effects.

Rex Beach among the hostile Indians of the San Blas Islands was shown in the final and most interesting installment of the pictures taken by the Salisbury expedition to the Spanish Main. A series of pictures taken in Glacier National Park and loaned to Mr. Rothapfel by Louis Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, supplied the scenic portion of the program. The Rialto Animated Magazine was introduced for the first time with titles done in "Plastique" by Ashley Miller. The magazine combined news, comedy, cartoons, patriotic scenes and other material. A special musical program was given.

"The Deemster" at the Broadway.

The Hall Caine picture, "The Deemster," in which Derwent Hall Caine, son of the novelist, is featured, is in its final week at the Broadway. This is followed by a two-part Chaplin, "The Cure."

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater for the entire week William S. Hart was the attraction in "The Desert Man."

GAIL KANE IN "WHOSE WIFE?" APRIL 30.

Gail Kane will appear in her first American-Mutual production, "Whose Wife?" a five-part drama, April 30. This is Miss Kane's first screen appearance for nearly a year.

Unusual effort has been put into this picture, according to the producers. Miss Kane and her director, Rollin S. Sturgeon, have been at work on "Whose Wife?" at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company for nearly three months.

"Whose Wife?" is a picture rendition of a play by Cecil Henry Bullivant, an English playwright and author of note.

THE GELAPHOTE CO. IS JENNETTE COHEN.

Jennette Cohen, one of the busiest and pleasantest little women we have met in the motion picture business, announces that she has secured full control of the photogelatine plant formerly operated by the Rotograph Company, and is now ready to supply the trade with photo reproductions for lobby displays and other purposes. It is Miss Cohen's intention to add many new and attractive features of interest to the trade and guarantees the best work and prompt delivery of all orders at the right prices. The Moving Picture World wishes her success in the new venture.

BROOKLYN LEAGUE MEETING.

Listen to Talk on Triangle Bonding Plan and on Better Picture Alliance.

THE Brooklyn Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors held its regular meeting at the Triangle Theater on Saturday night, April 21. Wm. Brandt, the newly-elected president, occupied the chair. After the reading of the minutes of the preceding meeting, Mrs. Clarence Waterman, president of the Better Moving Picture Alliance of Brooklyn, was introduced and given the privilege of the floor.

As an introduction she said the Alliance was a society of over one thousand Brooklyn women who, without monetary consideration, devoted their time and efforts to the betterment of motion pictures, posters and advertising. Within the past few months the Alliance had stopped twenty-one pictures, either for correction or withdrawal. Among these were "The Unborn Child," which was changed to "Her Child." The Brooklyn Eagle withdrew the "ad" from its columns at the request of the Alliance. Also "Warfare of the Flesh," "Price of a Soul," "Motherhood," "Sin Mother," "Blue Streak," "Sex Lure" and "Libertine." Mrs. Waterman was very outspoken and said she made her complaints to License Commissioner Bell and always found him ready to co-operate. She did not blame the exhibitors, unless they persisted in showing objectionable film; she blamed the producers. She also said producers were not capable to judge the moral theme of pictures. She said the National Board of Censors is a farce, absolutely no good. Another very pointed remark she made was: "You can't get away with the same things in Brooklyn you can in New York."

One of the league members asked her if she believed in having a one-man censorship like the one proposed in the Wheeler tax bill. She said: "If they can get one like Commissioner Bell, yes. I think he's all right."

G. F. Paine, representing the Triangle distributing company, addressed the meeting on the deposit system and the policy abolishing it by substituting a bond covering the amount of the old cash deposit by paying a premium of two dollars a year for the minimum and one per cent. on large amounts. One member of the league asked Mr. Paine how the old contract cash would be disposed of. Mr. Paine said they would be worked out.

Rudolph Sanders asked why not one bond covering the whole league, instead of with individual exhibitors. Mr. Paine thought it practicable, but the matter would have to be taken up with the officials of the Triangle Co. for an answer.

A motion was made and carried to prohibit all "song pluggers" singing in motion picture theaters for the purpose of advertising music publishers' newest songs and latest hits, if such publishers were members of the Music Publishers and Authors' League, who threaten to tax theaters yearly for playing their music. This was done as a fair and just retaliation for the prohibition placed on the exhibitors.

President Brandt appointed a committee to rent a meeting room for the league in Manhattan, where they expect to have headquarters about May 1.

The Brooklyn exhibitors will give a banquet to its outgoing and incoming officers at Stauch's Pavilion, Coney Island, on Wednesday evening, May 2. About three hundred are expected to participate, including Mayor Mitchel and many other public officials. W. A. Brady will officiate as toastmaster. The affair is to be an informal one and ladies are to be included. Each plate is three dollars and a half. The dinner will be served in the new banquet hall recently added to the pavilion.

LONG HIKE FOR HERRINGTON.

National League Organizer Will Make Tour to the Coast and Back in Behalf of the League.

THE need for impersonal service in behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is about to be supplied. As against the spectacle of the present executive and his personal henchman campaigning for re-election and in behalf of a business enterprise in which he is interested, the National Organizer of the League has at last been started upon his legitimate mission of arousing the exhibitors of the country to a recognition of their duties to the trade. This annual campaigning of some ambitious person seeking office has been the curse of the exhibitors' organization for some time. Now that the duly constituted officer has taken the road to further something beside his personal interests effective results may be expected.

National Organizer Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, long held in leash by certain interests who did not want real organization work done, has at last started out on his proper mission. He left Pittsburgh on Wednesday, April 25, and will make a trip extending to the coast and back. All the principal centers will be visited and there should be a hearty welcome awaiting him at all points. The official itinerary is as follows:

Cleveland, April 25; Chicago, April 27; Milwaukee, April 28; Minneapolis, April 30; Fargo, N. D., May 4; Bismark, N. D., May 4; Billings, Mont., May 6; Butte, Mont., May 7; Spokane, Wash., May 8; Seattle, May 9; Tacoma, Wash., May 10; Portland, Oregon, May 10; Sacramento, Cal., May 13; San Francisco, May 14; Fresno, Cal., May 16; Los Angeles, May 17; San Diego, Cal., May 21; Los Angeles, May 22; Tucson, Ariz., May 24; El Paso, Texas, May 25; San Antonio, May 26; Houston, May 28; Galveston, May 28; Houston, May 29; New Orleans, May 30; Jackson, Miss., May 30; Memphis, May 31; St. Louis, June 2; Indianapolis, June 3; Cleveland, June 5; Pittsburgh, June 5.

OKLAHOMA EXHIBITORS MEET.

Go on Record as Being Allied with Washington and Oregon in Deposit System Fight—To Send Large Delegation to Chicago Convention.

AMOBILIZATION of their forces in the war against the deposit system was further crystallized by members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oklahoma at a meeting held in Oklahoma City on April 10. The Oklahoma men went on record as being adhesively allied with the States of Oregon and Washington in the deposit-system fight. Also enthusiastically considered was the matter of sending a representative body of delegates to the Chicago convention in July.

The meeting was presided over by President A. B. Momand, of Shawnee. He introduced to the gathering Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

W. Wilson, the attorney of the organization, explained the Sunday closing situation in Oklahoma. He gave it as his belief that there was little danger of Sunday closing in the State. He said that there were no laws on Oklahoma's statute books which would permit the authorities to close picture theaters on Sundays.

The most important resolution passed follows:

"Resolved: That we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oklahoma, indorse the action taken by the States of Washington and Oregon pertaining to the deposit system, and that drastic action be taken at our next meeting, which is to be held on the first Tuesday in June."

After the meeting a dinner was held at the Lee-Huckins Hotel. Many of the wives of the exhibitors were in attendance.

The names of the attending exhibitors, their theaters and cities follow:

H. W. McCall, Liberty theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; H. C. Brice, Strand theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; L. W. Brophy, Yale theater, Muskogee, Okla.; H. W. Beddoe, Killarney theater, Shamrock, Okla.; L. H. Jones, Altus theater, Altus, Okla.; B. H. Powell, Folly theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; J. W. Lowenstein, Majestic theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; George A. Pollard, Gem theater, Guthrie, Okla.; Thomas H. Boland, Empress theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; C. D. Jackson, Camera theater, Stillwater, Okla.; Art S. Hamley, Yale theater, Pauls Valley, Okla.; Peter Sinopoulo, Lyric theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.; C. C. Bradford, El Reno, Okla.; D. M. Kramer, New Yale theater, Yale, Okla.; John Brown, Lyric theater, Tulsa, Okla.; W. H. Frame, Postmon theater, Woodward, Okla.; John S. Slocum, Woodrow theater, Mangum, Okla.; J. L. Carr, Electric theater, Kingfisher, Okla.; A. B. Momand, Odeon and Savoy theaters, Shawnee, Okla.; C. R. Croak, Powell-Croak Amusement Co., Oklahoma, Okla.

Schindler Picking Up New York Contracts

General Manager of the Seventh Annual Exposition and Convention of the League Visits Metropolis.

LUDWIG SCHINDLER, general manager of the seventh annual exposition and convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which will be held in the Chicago Coliseum, July 14-22, is in New York for ten days on business connected with the big show. Mr. Schindler is stopping at the Astor. He had not been in town an hour before he had secured a $2,500 contract for space from Lewis J. Selznick. The Chicago man thought that was "going some" for a day following the Albany hearing on the Wheeler bill.

Mr. Schindler reports that contracts are coming along in good shape. He said the Coliseum, which contains 150,000 feet of space available for exposition and convention purposes, will afford abundant room for the two important factors of the exhibitors' annual get-together. As previously pointed out in these columns, the exposition begins on Saturday, July 14, and the convention on the following Tuesday.

While in New York Mr. Schindler will get in touch with William Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and complete arrangements for the annual session of the trade organization, which will be held simultaneously with the meetings of the league. Mr. Brady will be offered the use of the Coliseum for his associates.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers also will hold a stated meeting during the convention.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS MEET.

The Indiana exhibitors' state meeting at Indianapolis on April 18 was a very successful gathering. The plans and work laid out for the different committees will result in big things being undertaken on behalf of the Indiana exhibitors and their organization. Fred J. Herrington, national organizer, was present and received an enthusiastic welcome.

As a result of this meeting the Indiana exhibitors voted unanimously to get into closer touch with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and to take a larger share in the work of that organization. Indiana expects to send a record breaking delegation to the national convention in Chicago next July.

This was one of the first meetings Organizer Herrington has attended on his present tour of the Middle West. If the spirit of the exhibitors of the Hooser State is any criterion, there will be a renewed interest in the national league and a taking hold from the inside by men actuated by no selfish motive, but only the best interests of exhibitors everywhere that augurs well for the future.

What Happened in Florida

Censorship and Sunday Closing Bills Die Natural Death in State of Florida—Helen Duey and Rev. W. H. Jackson in at the Death.

AT THE recent discussion of the State Censorship and Sunday Closing bills at Tallahassee before a combined committee from the Senate and Legislature of Florida, Rev. W. H. Jackson, of the Moving Picture World, and Helen Duey, of the Woman's Home Companion, representing the opposition, helped to drive the nails that secured the coffin lids of both bills.

A chat with Miss Duey on her return divulged the fact that little or no interest was manifested in the censorship bill, which, by the way, was introduced by Senator Fogarty and follows along the lines of the Wheeler bill. In fact, the lack of interest was so marked that no one appeared in support of it. The result of the discussion was that the Senate committee reported both bills unfavorably, while the House committee reported without comment. It was decided, however, to introduce a bill making the exhibition of obscene pictures an offense, the punishment of which shall be the revoking of license. The administration of this law will be left to the police and city officials.

Miss Duey in her address explained the work of the National Board of Review, of which she found practically little was known by the members of the committees. To a statement made by a member of one of the committees to the effect that 36 states now have censorship she replied that this was not the case, but that in three states only was the exhibition of moving pictures governed by state censorship, in two of which there is a strong opposition. She also stated that in these three states it was most difficult to arouse interest in the Better Film Movement because of the fact that they felt that state censorship was sufficient to their needs.

The result of Miss Duey's convincing remarks was a shower of questions, all of which we learn from other sources she was able to answer intelligently. Miss Duey herself states that the discussion was conducted in the most dignified manner, and that there seemed to be uppermost an intense desire for information along the lines of discussion. The Woman's Club did not indorse the bill, and Mrs. Jennings, president of the club, expressed herself verbally as being opposed to it. The Florida women in general were not interested in the censorship bill, according to Miss Duey; nor did the clergy exhibit any great interest in the Sunday Closing bill.

The Sunday Closing bill was opposed by Rev. W. H. Jackson on the ground that "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." A clergyman of the Methodist faith upheld the bill from the angle of remembering the Sabbath day and keeping it holy. The sentiment of Mr. Jackson's remarks were supported by a number of others, among them Mayor-elect Martin, of Jacksonville, who felt that the Sabbath should be a day of rest and recreation for the working people. Mr. Cooley, an exhibitor, from Tampa, spoke against both bills; and with regard to the Sunday Closing bill stated that he had a large patronage among the laboring classes and that the passing of the bill would work a hardship both to his patrons and to himself. Other speakers were Mr. Terry, secretary of the State Federation of Labor; Mr. Keep, also a representative of the labor element, and Mr. Leonard, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

Miss Duey's impressions of the exhibitors whom she had the pleasure of meeting in Florida are interesting. She says they were a revelation to her, that she found them to be not only men who thoroughly understood the picture game, but men of education and polish. In Jacksonville, where there are somewhere in the neighborhood of eleven moving picture theaters, she found that a state of harmony prevailed among the managers. She also found that the classification of moving picture theaters which she had prophesied some time ago had actually taken place. She found that, for instance, in the best house cultured people and people who were able to pay the price demanded the highest type of program. In the next best house she found the family group, with the program suited to their tastes and pocket. This would be probably the same sort of program as ran in the highest priced house, but probably not always first run pictures. The next house would in all probability have the regular program and had also a different class of people neatly dressed and respectable, and so on down the line. The negro houses interested her tremendously; and there she found the same conditions as with the white houses. In Tallahassee there is but one moving picture house, Miss Duey believed. This house also was run on a high-class plan. And so as the pictures have gradually classified, so also have the moving picture theaters.

Richardson Looks Over Three States

Arkansas, Oklahoma and Missouri Feed Him and Hear Him—Loses Goat in Vinita.

Fort Smith, Ark.

FORT SMITH, Ark., proved to be a genuine surprise in several ways. Not knowing the operators to be organized, I had written W. W. Stoppeman, manager of the Princess theater, regarding a visit to Fort Smith, but had received no reply. I concluded to stop over anyhow, and in the published itinerary gave Fort Smith one day, intending merely to visit the theaters and then hold a lengthy session with a stenographer. To my surprise the union secretary at Little Rock handed me a letter from E. P. Barber, secretary, Local Union 455, Fort Smith, informing me that the union (a mixed local, too, by the way), having noted my intended visit in the published itinerary, had arranged a banquet at the Hotel Main, and would have about thirty-five exhibitors and managers from Fort Smith and surrounding territory present to hear the lecture.

Right here let me pay a deserving tribute to a gentleman of ability, J. H. Crowley, manager Fort Smith Universal Exchange. Neighbor Crowley, being one of those individuals who are "on the job" instead of asleep at the switch, instantly grasped the idea that a lecture on practical projection could but be of vital importance to his exchange. He therefore got busy and sent out letters to all customers, managers and operators in his territory. To the manager, he said, in effect:

"F. H. Richardson will be in Fort Smith April 5, to deliver a lecture to such operators as are present at the banquet to be held at 11:30 P. M. in the Hotel Main. You should by all means find some way of sending your operators to hear him. I am sending your operator an invitation and telling him the Universal will pay for his plate at the banquet, if you will pay the expense of sending him here, which is ample proof that we realize the good which will accrue to both yourself and the Universal."

Mr. Crowley also sent a strong letter to the various operators along the same line. The result was not what it should have been, because as a rule neither the average theater manager nor operator has any adequate conception of the benefit which will come to him through hearing the message I have to deliver, but quite a number did respond. I had luncheon with Manager Crowley, in company with C. B. Smith, operator at the Princess theater, Fort Smith, and L. Stoffer, operator, member of Local Union 539, Fayetteville, Ark., and enjoyed a lengthy discussion on various matters with neighbor Crowley, both then and later.

During my stay in Fort Smith it was my good fortune to meet and have quite a long talk with C. A. Lick. Mr. Lick is president of the Weldon, Williams & Lick printing company, which corporation does the major portion of the theater ticket printing business of the country, the output approximating one million tickets a day; also Mr. Lick is general manager of the New Theater, a 1,200 seat house, which plays an occasional road show, but runs pictures the rest of the time.

Mr. Lick is an unusual type of theater manager, particularly as applies to small cities, in that he makes a close and exhaustive study of the finer points of the business. I am really astonished at the knowledge Mr. Lick has of the nicer points of theater management, particularly when one considers that he has only been connected with the business for two years, prior to which he knew absolutely nothing about the exhibition of moving pictures.

The average theater manager, particularly in small cities, has but a hazy, nebulous idea of the proper lighting of the auditorium, but Mr. Lick and his house superintendent, H. A. Scholze, had acquired an idea that the lighting of the auditorium of the New theater was not all it should be. We went down to the theater and I was able to make some suggestions which all hands agreed would probably remedy matters. I also suggested that the clock face be painted black, with white figures and hands, and that the light be confined to the face of the clock, all of which Mr. Lick assured me would be done, within forty-eight hours at the very latest (later in the evening he told me the dial was already made), and this brought out some very interesting ideas which Mr. Lick had reasoned out for himself.

"I have a basic objection to the clock, but unfortunately my patrons demand it," he said. "My objection is that John

Fort Smith, Ark., Managers and Operators.

Jones and his wife come to the show and are thoroughly enjoying themselves when suddenly Mrs. Jones happens to see the clock. It is 10 P. M., and immediately Mrs. Jones remembers that grandmother is at home tending to the baby. Presto! Chango! All the joy of the rest of the evening is destroyed for Mrs. Jones, who immediately proceeds to communicate her restlessness to her spouse. This is simply one of the many things that may ruin the remainder of the evening for a patron who happens to glance at the clock. And on these grounds I seriously object to the placing of a clock within view of the audience."

And let me tell you, Mr. Lick is right. The man who inaugurated that clock idea thought he was doing a wonderful stunt. The public grabbed the idea and now demands a clock, but the advent of the time recording mechanism was by no means an unmixed evil, as Mr. Lick very ably points out.

Mr. Lick also remarked that he would no more allow an usher to call for a physician in the auditorium, announcing that he was wanted at the phone or elsewhere, than he would allow the announcement of the death of a child of a patron. "Again," said he, "Mr. and Mrs. Jones are enjoying the show until an usher comes in, and in strident tones demands if Doctor Killemquick is present, in which case he is wanted at the phone. Presto! Mrs. Jones remembers that Mary Jones, her daughter, was not feeling well when they left home, and it takes just about two shakes and a shiver for Mrs. Jones, through the subconscious M. D. idea, to imagine that Mary, the daughter, is right next door to the Grim Reaper. Of course, all the rest of the evening is spoiled for Mr. and Mrs. Jones, until they finally arrive home and find that Mary has gone out to the corner drug store with friend George to get a dish of ice cream." Again, Mr. Lick is right. It is refreshing to find a small city theater manager who thus studies the fine points of his business, and is able to reason from cause to effect, eliminating some of the petty annoyances which infest the theater business, both legitimate and moving picture. My compliments to Mr. Lick. He is a progressive manager whose tribe I sincerely hope and trust will increase.

The New theater is a large modern house, seating probably 1,200 to 1,500 people. It is tastefully decorated and has the screen set well back and bordered in black. I was able to offer Friend Lick several suggestions for improvements in his auditorium lighting, and, unlike the average theater manager, he didn't say: "Um, yes, I guess maybe that would be a good scheme," but immediately got busy, and before night some of the improvements had been put into effect, to the decided benefit of his audience. Projection in the New is in charge of E. P. Barber, who has a small but well located room. Such Fort Smith operating rooms as I saw are, aside from Brother Barber's, of ample dimensions, but they have light walls and a flood of light. Ports are of goodly size, but in at least one instance poorly located. The men themselves for the most part own Hand Books and have studied them, though not nearly enough. Auditorium lighting is not bad, but in all cases I saw it might be materially improved by careful, intelligent attention to the piano light and exit signs.

When Brother Barber wrote that there would be thirty-five managers and operators present I was frankly skeptical, Fort Smith having but three shows, but I was agreeably fooled, because at 11:30 P. M. even more than that number gathered around the banquet table. In fact, so unexpectedly large was the attendance that at the last moment it was necessary to bring in a good sized extra table. The lecture lasted until 3:30 P. M., and if expressions of hearty approval and hearty handclap indicate anything my audience was well pleased. Unfortunately, I did not secure the names of all out-of-town men present, but among them were those already named and H. L. Henderson, owner and manager of Electric theater, Lamar, Ark.; Ed. Z. Storie, of the Electric theater, Mulberry, Ark.; E. B. Bugher, manager Wonderland theater, Salliaw, Okla.; W. T. Blair, manager Photoplay theater, Poteau, Okla., and E. C. Levess of the Dallas Metro Exchange.

I desire most cordially to thank the Fort Smith men, operators, managers and exchanges, for their kindness and courtesies to me, and to assure them it will not soon be forgotten.

Muskogee, Oklahoma.

From Fort Smith to Muskogee, 105 miles, I was to travel by the Midland Valley Railway. In Fort Smith I started to ask a prosperous looking citizen whether or not the Midland Valley had a parlor car on the morning train. "Has the Midland a ————" and there I hesitated, to think of the word "parlor car," upon which he cut in with: "I don't know what you are going to ask, friend, but the Midland hasn't got it."

At the Muskogee station I was met by one of the products of the factory of Mr. Ford, loaded to the gunwales with the following assortment, and lemme inform you that, for good fellowship and what goes with it, it's some considerable assortment: H. M. Marsh, financial secretary, Local Union No. 246; Milo Miller, business representative; B. H. Jameson, recording secretary, and Brother McAdams and Carm Briner, members of Local No. 246, who naively described themselves as "flicker artists"; also there was Brother M. B. Watson, Local Union No. 399, Bartlesville, Okla., who made a railway pilgrimage of several hours in order to be present at the "Big Doings."

During the afternoon we gasolined around the city, viewed its many beauties (every time we passed one there was a chorus recitation: "Some wren, that."), and finally got tangled up in a patriotism procession, in which most of the inhabitants of the fair city were taking part. In the evening we visited several theaters, and made the following once-over observations: The Strand, Dan Myers, manager, Claud McAdams, operator, has very nearly perfect auditorium lighting. It is an auditorium in which horse sense and scientific principles of auditorium lighting have been applied. My compliments to friend Myers. The operating room is excellent, and I want to say right now that all Muskogee operating rooms I have visited were as clean as a new pin, and I am told that this is the usual condition. The Strand operating room has fuse links over the projection machines, and over the rewinding table, supporting the port fire shutters. Two Simplex machines are used, taking current through a Westinghouse motor generator set.

At the Yale theater, L. W. Brophy, manager, Lyman Whitlock, operator, I found two bright exit signs, one on either side of the screen, and a very muchly illuminated clock at the right. Very bad, indeed, friend Brophy. The operating room had light green walls, and in one corner stood a mercury arc rectifier of G. E. vintage. The green light from the tube, plus the color of those walls, certainly did make a symphony in green; also it absolutely prevented the operator from having the sharp view of his picture which he ought to have. The revolving shutter of his Power machine is cutting a very high precentage of the light. It's up to you, Brother Whitlock—get busy.

One machine was a Power's 6 A, and the other a composite, consisting of a wooden table, with the old fashioned spider legs of light tubing; an Edison lamp and lamphouse and a Power's 6 mechanism. Quite some considerable combination with which to project the art of a great photoplayer in a fifty thousand dollar photoplay—don't you think? Far be it from me to butt in Brother Brophy's affairs and tell him what he ought to do. Still, I really don't believe Brother Whitlock would go mad, bite himself and get a case of hydrophobia if he were to be supplied with a new, up-to-date projector to match the Power's 6A on the other side of the room. I noticed in this room a fresh air intake duct near the floor—something all operating rooms ought to have. This thing of pulling in through the ports the second-hand, onion-scented air with which the audience has got through is just a little bit out of date. The operator of today is at least sufficiently human that he breathes like other people, and I would therefore suggest that theater managers, while they are supplying their audience with all kinds of fresh air, arrange to bring in a little bundle of it for the operator.

At the Broadway, Dan Myers, manager, Hugh Marsh, operator, I found about 60 candle power of light glaring balefully at the audience from the orchestra pit. That, Brother Myers, isn't exactly the proper respect to show for the eyes of your patrons, especially when it can all be so easily remedied by means of a carefully constructed opaque screen. The side lights in this theater were also objectionable and altogether unnecessary. Brother Myers impressed me as a man of brains, and there isn't any doubt at all but what he is. I would, therefore, suggest to him that he apply a part of his mentality to the auditorium lighting. Don't use it all up on the selection of film service and other products, because, no matter how perfect your film service may be, if the auditorium lighting condition is not right you can't put that service on in the best possible way.

The screen sets back at the rear of the stage, in a deep shadow box of black, and that part of it could hardly be improved. The operating room is excellent, thought not very well located, and I believe the "Gold Dust Twins" must live just next door, because it is all so spick and span. The incandescent lights were all out. The room has fine ventilation and the outside windows were painted black, as was the glass of all the other rooms I visited. The incandescent lamps were hung over the machines on swinging-crane arms, and suspended on a counterbalance, all of which enabled the operator to move them around to any desired position. Current is taken through a Westinghouse motor generator set.

Springfield, Missouri.

At Vinita, Oklahoma, I was obliged to change from the M. K. & T. Railway to the "Frisco Lines," and in the process lay over two and one-half hours. At Vinita I spied a theater, the Lyric, and having oozed myself between the cheap-looking posters with which its front was almost completely submerged, and contributed one dime toward the support of the proprietor and his family, I entered its portals and viewed the performance, or part of it. One reel was quite sufficient, thank you. But that reel was a wonder. First off, before we could read the title, the film broke, and bing! the screen went dark again. First round: Time 2 1/5 seconds. It required three minutes to make repairs, and then we were left to guess what it was all about, for the title was all in the discard.

But in one reel I got my dime's worth in the weird and marvelously varied assortment of shadows presented. Sometimes it was the top part which was a rainbow, and the actor's heads disappeared therein; then their feet waded in it. Next it would be to the right and then pretty near all over. I did catch an occasional glimpse of what was presumably Mexican soldier villains continuously heating irons with which to torture the madly struggling, extremely heroic hero and the perfectly lovely heroine.

One reel was plenty, and when the "operator" ran a slide promising (or threatening) another "In just a moment," the writer deployed his forces, retreated to the "lobby," advanced to the box office and asked for the manager, to be informed, with an airy wave of the young woman's hand, that he was "up in th' coop." So up we went, via a rickety stair. The operator-manager was making good on his threat, and starting another reel. Just at the moment he was busier than a chipmunk, trying to make the take-up take up, and keep at least a couple of rays of light on the screen, all at one and the same time. Apparently, by strenuous effort, he succeeded with the take-up end of it—the screen I could not see. I handed him my card (Moving Picture World). He looked at it, and after a long pause asked: "Are you a feature man?" Such is fame!

The machine was a Power's 6, driven by a motor belted to the fly-wheel with a tight belt about one inch in width. Its intermittent sounded like a young steam hammer working overtime to catch up on war orders. I said to the M. O.: "I guess you don't read the Moving Picture World, do you?" Having had my suspicion confirmed by his reply, I again remarked: "If you did, friend, you would not, for instance, be pulling the very heart out of the intermittent of your machine with that big belt on the fly-wheel."

"Why, what has reading got to do with that?" was his come back.

Now I suppose I should have patiently explained to Mr. M. O., and have cajoled or bullied him out of a subscription to the World. I am not, however, a subscription agent, nor am I a good cajoler; also I simply have not the patience to talk to a man who is putting on such an utterly impossible performance under the guise of a motion picture show. Had Vinita been a village of a thousand people, it might have been a little different. But Vinita is a fair sized town—five thousand at a guess.

I take the position that no man has the moral right to thus outrage the photoplay. Before attempting to collect money under the guise of giving a "show" a man should either have an operator on the job, or at least learn the rudiments of projection. So instead of trying to help the man, as I probably ought to have done in the interests of the people of Vinita, I backed out, took my life in my hands and retreated down that stair in utter discouragement.

At Springfield, Mo., I found conditions "not so bad." Auditorium lighting might, in some cases, be very largely improved along lines already pointed out. Some of the Springfield operating rooms are too small—much too small. Some of them have light walls and altogether too much light is used. In some of them, I am told, there is some very old equipment, which is, in the long run, an expensive condition.

The men of Springfield, both managers and operators, were very courteous and kind. We were automobiled over the city, given the freedom of its theaters, and Brother P. H. Brown took us to his home for his dinner—the first dyed-in-the-wool, home-grown meal I have eaten since March first. I came near biting a piece out of one of the plates.

There was a banquet at the Springfield Club, but the lecture was in the Jefferson theater. The Springfield men are progressive. They mean well, but, like too many others, have very largely neglected the study of the technical end of their business. I saw at least one very excellent operating room, at the New Princess, S. E. Wilhoit, manager, R. Wilhoit, operator. The walls were slate black, of good size and well located. The only fault I observed was the G. E. Rectifier, with its light flooding the back end of the room. Due to the black walls and size of the room, however, the rectifier light was not doing much harm.

My compliments to Springfield managers and operators. I enjoyed my brief visit among you, and hope it will prove to be of at least some benefit, both to you and to the motion picture industry of your city.

Joplin, Missouri.

I had written the Operators' Union and the exhibitors of Joplin, but had received no reply from either. The City of Zinc being an important one, however, I decided to stop over and spend one day, visiting the shows and at least becoming acquainted. My first stop was at the Ideal Theater. E. M. Chapman, manager. I found Business Agent Roy Moss working under very bad conditions. Brother Moss and I had talked but a few moments when several of the other men appeared, among them J. N. Clutts, president of Local Union 465. A conference between Messrs. Chapman, Clutts and Moss quickly brought about decision that a lecture would be held at 11.30, Mr. Chapman deciding that it would be in the Electric Theater, Messrs. Clutts and Moss agreeing to get the operators together. Mr. Chapman agreed to notify all managers. I also saw Mr. Ballard, manager of the New Joplin Theater, and secretary of the Exhibitors' League. He also agreed to notifv all managers.

Supposing that all was well, and with considerable evidence in hand that there was great need for the lecture in Joplin, I retired to the depths of the hotel to write and rest. At 11 President Clutts came to inform me that Mr. Chapman had failed to notify the manager of the Electric Theater of his having given its use for the lecture, and that the manager of the Electric objected (very naturally, I thought) to the use of his house being donated without his knowledge. President Clutts informed me that he had thereupon changed the place of meeting to Labor Hall, and had stationed a man at the Electric to notify everyone of the change.

We went down to the Electric only to find it closed and locked, with not a soul in sight. Presently, however, a man came, who proved to be the manager, and when matters were explained he volunteered to take myself and President Clutts to Labor Hall, and to himself attend the lecture there. So we motored to the place, only to find it locked and no key in sight. We finally adjourned to the Royal Theater, where six Joplin operators were assembled, but no managers, the Electric manager having departed (again, I did not blame him). The writer sized up the situation and made a very brief address, promptly at the close of which one good brother arose and moved that the meeting adjourned and take a drink. The assemblage promptly adjourned to a convenient bar.

In Joplin we found Brothers H. J. Kearney, Los Angeles Local Union No. 150, and E. R. Sandler, San Diego Local Union No. 297, who are on the road running "Intolerance." Brothers Kearney and Sandler are high-class men. They expressed themselves as deeply disappointed at there not being a lecture, but perhaps our routes may cross again.

I am indeed sorry that Joplin proved to be such a fluke. I believe there are some men there who mean well, and only lack technical knowledge to make them a credit to the profession. This is proved by the fact that I showed the operator at the Royal a few errors he was committing, and in less than an hour found him busily engaged in remedying them. Of course, it is true the Joplin men were not entrely to blame for what happened. They had no time to prepare, claiming to have received no letter from me. Part of the fault was chargeable to Mr. Chapman, who balled things up nicely by failure to notify the manager of the Electric or presumably anyone else. Also part was chargeable to President Clutts. The business agent did not show up at all.

Fort Scott, Kansas.

Down in this territory the railway service is something fearful and wonderful to contemplate. You ride in a sort of replica of Noak's Ark, pulled by a second-hand Charter Oak Range, which every time it comes to a hill seems to set down on the end of its tail and bark like a dog. However, patience will accomplish wonders, and it actually secured my transport from Joplin to Fort Scott. There is no organization either of managers or operators in Fort Scott, but Mr. D. F. Filizola, manager of the Theaterette, and C. Blubaugh, manager of the Vaudette theater, had arranged for the lecture and had gone to the trouble and expense of sending letters to all managers throughout the surrounding territory. They had also arranged for what proved to be a good spread at one of the local restaurants.

There are only three theaters in Fort Scott, namely, the Theaterette, the Vaudette and Pictureland, the latter managed by Miss M. L. Smith and her brother, L. W. Smith. In Fort Scott I met one of the surprises of my young, more or less innocent and unsophisticated life, for, although the city is small, it contains some high-class operators in the persons of Fred Wood, Ivan Blubaugh, A. Walker and Claude McMillan. Particularly must I give credit to Brother Wood. Working under difficulties, with a very small operating room, I found everything to be strictly up to date in so far as had to do with the operator's work. The lights were out; the walls are black; there is an extremely clever framing lamp—a lamp which lights the interior of the lamp house—and various other things. Wood is my type of man; he studies his business, and studies it to the limit. He is far better posted on the technical end of projecton and operating room practice than are four out of five large city operators.

Projection in Fort Scott was good, though the auditorium lighting might in some instances be improved. While in Fort Scott it was my privilege to meet G. E. White, who for eighteen years flirted with a projection machine crank. According to Brother White's claims, he began in the days of the spool-bank. He was for five years operator at the Theaterette. Mr. White is sixty years old and has recently given up operating. He now operates certain handsaws, jack plains, chisels, etc., used in the construction of the white man's wigwam. At the banquet and lecture were several women, who remained to the finish; also there was Miss Filizola, age about ten, who, although the lecture lasted until 2:30, seemed to be very much interested, and certainly she did not, at any point, look the least bit sleepy. At 2 o'clock I asked the assemblage whether or not I should proceed or close, and Miss Filizola, aged ten, was the first one to pipe up, "Go right ahead."

My compliments to the Fort Scott managers and operators. They are of the right sort, and I am proud to enroll them in the register of my personal and professional friends. There were some out-of-town men present at the lecture, but I only secured the name of one—R. C. Welborn, R. and W. theater, La Cygne, Kan.

Wichita, Kan.

Something like 150 miles of Missouri Pacific rough riding brought me to the portal of Wichita, Kan., where I found a committee of welcome at the station with a "bubble car." The aforesaid committee consisted of the officers of Local Union 414, plus the Universal exchangeman and special representative. The writer had had a grave suspicion for several days that something wasn't exactly right with his internal arrangements, and having retired to the depths of the hotel room proceeded to have a go-round with himself, and up until 11 o'clock a three-year old kid could have licked the tar out of Richardson. Oy! Oy! Was your humble servant sick? Answer: He was, good and plenty. I learned that the Wichita local had arranged for a banquet in Labor Hall—time 11:30—and that there were 72 reservations. The weather was what Mr. Englishman would term "narsty"—decidedly so. Rain came down in a chilly, disagreeable drizzle.

As a rule, banquets served in other than a hotel or restaurant don't amount to anything, and I mentalized to myself as follows: "Heavens only knows whether I will be able to lecture tonight or not—probably not—but thanks be to fortune the rain will cut down the attendance and the banquet won't be much anyhow, so the damage at least will be minimized." All of which is another evidence that no man is wise enough to be right all the time, for, aside from a few out-of-town exhibitors and operators who had intended driving in in cars, the rain didn't cut down the attendance at all; and as for the spread, well, you may accept it from me as a fact that it was a very real banquet, beautifully staged, served to a queen's taste, and the serving, incidentally (by a large corps of uniformed waiters and waitresses), occupied about one and one-half hours. And there we sat passing up all that perfectly scrumptious repast, for we couldn't eat or didn't dare to eat a bite.

The banquet was accompanied by a really beautiful orchestra (this doesn't refer to the lady member thereof, though it might, but to the harmony produced), the same being the orchestra of the Princess theater. There were exhibitors from as far as 100 miles away, a 100 per cent. attendance of Wichita operators and managers, and most of the operators were accompanied by their wives. When I arose to speak I had no idea I would be able to complete the lecture, but I did allee samee, and wound up at 4 a. m.—all in and mighty near down and out.

Those assembled were enthusiastic in praise of my humble efforts, and I was assured that what I had said would bear fruit in Wichita and surrounding territory. If it does I shall be amply repaid for the tremendous struggle made in the effort to avoid disappointing the men who had been enterprising and friendly enough to make all those arrangements. The affair was called the "First Annual Banquet of Local Union No. 414." I would suggest that something of this kind be held every year as a sort of get-together meeting of managers, operators and exchangemen in Wichita territory. Among those present were:

Don Powell, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Chambers, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Hicks, O. H. Mason, Miss Ivey Rutledge, Roy L. Matson, Albert Neses, George Case, Lewis S. Duckworth, William Hapgood, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Simpier, Mr. and Mrs. Albert N. McLain, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Finney, Frank Welsh, W. S. Roberts, L. R. McMillen, Seth E. Barnes, Mrs. W. M. Titus, Fred Fiske, Chas. D. Peck, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Hodges, H. E. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Holwagner, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pickrell, Earl Bookwalter, Mr. Doty, Mr. Haggarty, Frank Garety, John Fields, Mr. and Mrs. Shupp, Mr. Harris, Carl Olson, Mr. Hedges, Miss Avis Volmer.

All Praise Richardson

Letters from Correspondents Speak in Most Flattering Terms of Projection Man's Lecture on Better Pictures.

ALL ALONG the route taken by F. H. Richardson, the projection expert of the Moving Picture World, those who have heard the lecture he is delivering to managers and operators on the subject of better projection unite in praising the work he is doing and are glad that the opportunity has been given them to obtain the instruction that Mr. Richardson has given them. Among the letters that have come to headquarters from the towns touched by Richardson's tour we have selected a few for publication. Read what they say:

"Has Won Everlasting Gratitude."

Cincinnati, Ohio, March 22, 1917.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir: On behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, I desire to thank the Moving Picture World for the valuable address delivered to the membership of both organizations and their operators at the Cuvier Press Club on Wednesday, March 21, by Mr. F. H. Richardson, editor of the Projection Department of your publication.

Through the address of Mr. Richardson the Moving Picture World has won the everlasting gratitude of those who were fortunate enough to hear him. Mr. Richardson has the happy faculty of pointing out phases of lost motion in the moving picture industry which I am positive will be the cause of saving a great sum of money for those exhibitors and exchangemen who were present at our meeting last night.

The writer has devoted considerable time to the organization of the motion picture industry in the Cincinnati district, and through Mr. Richardson's straight-from-the-shoulder talk I see that I have a mission to perform in getting our local exhibitors, exchange managers and operators busy discussing ways and means of proper projection and proper handling of the high-class present day productions.

Again expressing our deepest gratitude,

Very truly yours,

H. SERKOWICH,

Managing Secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Associated Film Exchanges.

Owes Debt of Gratitude.

Owensboro, Ky., March 26, 1917.

The Moving Picture World, New York.

Gentlemen: The writer owes you a huge debt of gratitude for having made it possible for F. H. Richardson to visit my town, as I feel that much benefit has been derived therefrom.

His advice on corrections I need to make in my theaters is worth much. His lecture that I listened to in Evansville, Ind., before the operators and managers of that city opened my eyes to many things that I needed to know.

This is certainly a splendid thing you are doing through Mr. Richardson. Something that will benefit the entire industry. You deserve great praise, and you ought to reap a rich reward ultimately.

Yours truly,
GEO. A. BLEICH.

"Richardson's Lecture Awoke Our Boys."

New Orleans, April 5, 1917.

Dear Sirs: We wish to express many thanks for the honorary presence of your representative, Mr. F. H. Richardson. We are proud to say that a great majority of the managers of our local theaters were present at our banquet and lecture, and the reception was cordially welcomed by all those present.

Mr. Richardson's lecture on the better care of projection apparatus, handling of films and lens, awoke many of our boys to the conclusion that if his suggestions were properly carried out not only the film exchanges would profit by it, but the public as well, as a reel of film well taken care of and well handled by a competent operator would be shown more clearly on the screen, thus deriving more patronage for that theater and a better name.

We wish to have you thank Mr. Richardson for the good results obtained by his lectures and personal conversations with managers during his stay in New Orleans regarding our interest.

Yours very truly,
TOURO GLUCKMANN,
For Local 293, I. A. T. S. E.

Richardson's Lecture Well Received.

Fort Smith, Ark., April 6, 1917.

Dear Sir: We had with us last night Bro. F. H. Richardson, Projection Editor of your paper, who gave the exchange manager, exhibitor and operator a lecture with the view of bringing them to a better understanding among themselves in the relation to the fifth industry in the United States.

Mr. Richardson's lecture was well received. Thanking your paper for sending him and himself for the lecture.

Thanking you in behalf of all present, I beg to remain,
Fraternally yours,
E. P. BARBER,
Sec.-Treas. No. 455, I. A. T. S. E.

Value of Work Fully Realized.

Memphis, Tenn., April 12, 1917.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir: We wish to express our appreciation for the visit of Mr. Richardson to our city, and assure you that we fully realize the value of the work undertaken by Mr. Richardson and what it means to every branch of the motion picture business. His lecture was both interesting and instructive, and greatly appreciated by all who attended.

Aside from the fact that some of us knew Mr. Richardson personally, as above stated, his visit was much appreciated, and trust that may have him with us again.

Thanking you very kindly for putting a man of Mr. Richardson's ability in the field,

We are very truly yours,
MAJESTIC AMUSEMENT COMPANY,

UNIVERSAL'S SIDE OF MacLAREN CONTROVERSY.

The published reports to the effect that Mary MacLaren, the film actress, had been freed from her contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by default misrepresent the case, according to Universal's statements. The facts of the case, the Universal company states, are that through an agreement with the court, counsel for the Universal refused to amend his pleading in the case and a judgment was entered on the understanding that an appeal could be immediately taken on the merits of the case.

Miss MacLaren, who is but seventeen years old, was under contract with the Universal for four years and brought suit to be freed from the terms of the contract, which was signed by her mother, Mary Ida MacLaren.

The procedure of the attorneys for the Universal was followed that the higher courts of California might render a decision on the validity of the contract, which is unprecedented in California.

NEW STAGE SETTING FOR STRAND THEATER.

The Strand theater, New York, is soon to be equipped with a new stage setting which, it is announced, will be the last word in beauty and harmony with the theater's interior. Messrs. Gates and Morange have completed the design for the new setting, which will be a domed interior of festival Romanesque design, and rich in the color and atmosphere of the East.

The high domed ceiling will be supported by marble columns with gold inlaid capitals, and will form a sounding board for the music of the orchestra. The treatment of the setting shows a studious avoidance of any striving for the bizarre.

For the decorations in the three larger lunettes of the scene, suggested by Mitchel H. Mark, the designers have selected the subjects, "The Arts of War," "The Arts of Peace" and the "Glorification of Eternity." The openings in the scene, draped with a soft rose colored velour, will show, when the draperies are drawn, a lake of cerulean blue surrounded by mountains. Various effects on the scene will be obtained through light manipulation.

Dorothy Phillips Makes Progress

Bluebird Star Player Wins Favor With Screen Fans Everywhere.

THE past three months have been a period of remarkable development for Dorothy Phillips, a young actress who has in that time won a place of conspicuous popularity with devotees of the screen throughout the country. Miss Phillips had appeared in numerous stage successes before she turned to moving pictures, two years ago, and in her work for the screen played in many types of photoplays.

Dorothy Phillips.

It was her clever portrayal of the heroine in "If My Country Should Call" that turned her efforts in one given direction last fall, when she was working in Universal productions. The management of Bluebird determined to attach Miss Phillips to their program, assigning Joseph De Grasse to her direction. It was Mr. De Grasse who brought Louise Lovely to Bluebirds, and in directing Miss Phillips he has made an unqualified success.

"The Price of Silence," issued December 4, brought Miss Phillips to Bluebirds. Since then she has appeared regularly at stated intervals, and plans are formed to present her every month if productions can be completed with regularity for some time to come. "The Piper's Price," "A Soul's Redemption" and "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" have been Bluebirds of excellence in which Miss Phillips won praise from the reviewers and applause from the public.

An interesting and important incident in Miss Phillips' screen progress attaches to the presentation of "The Flashlight," Bluebird for May 21, when Ida May Park comes into the situation as one of Miss Phillips' directors. Miss Park has prepared scores of scenarios and has assisted her husband, Joseph De Grasse, in directing, but with "The Flashlight" Miss Park became a full-fledged director, and will alternate with Mr. De Grasse hereafter in producing Bluebirds with Miss Phillips leading.

On June 11 Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House" will be presented for the first time on the screen by Mr. De Grasse with Miss Phillips playing the role of Nora Helmer, a part that has added luster to the stage careers of Mrs. Fiske, Eleanor Duse, Nazimova and other talented women of recent periods. Assigning this role to Miss Phillips is proof of her artistic development under Mr. De Grasse. It is declared to be the most intensely dramatic and force presentation ever programed by Bluebird.

Early in July Miss Park will present Miss Phillips in "Fires of Rebellion," and there will be other plays, as has been said, to keep this really pretty and genuinely talented actress among Bluebirds for months to come. In private life Miss Phillips is the wife of Allen Holubar, who joins the flight of Bluebirds May 14 as producer and the featured one in "Treason."

RAY BROWN METRO FILM EDITOR.

Raymond Brown, formerly of Universal's film editing department, will hereafter hold forth in a job of similar nature, but of greater magnitude in the B. A. Rolfe studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York. Mr. Brown, who is a newspaperman of wide acquaintance and a magazine writer of some note, will wield the scissors and pencil on Metro-Rolfe productions.

New Universal Brand

"Butterfly Pictures" Is the New General Title—First Release "Eternal Love."

EXTENSIVE plans are being completed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in connection with the new feature brand productions bearing the attractive trade mark, "Butterfly Pictures," the first of which, "Eternal Love," will be offered exhibitors on May 7th. A definite standard of quality has been established by the Universal officials for Butterfly Pictures, and in case a picture upon trial showing does not meet this standard it will not be released under this brand.

These features will be placed in the hands of the most competent and experienced directors in the Universal force. A number of noted players who have proved by their ability their position in the film world both from the standpoint of acting and with regard to their popularity among picture-goers have already been assigned to Butterfly productions. Original scripts from well-known writers both in the picture world and in the magazine circle are being considered for their adaptability for the screen, and only stories of the highest type will be used.

There will be wide variety of subjects offered in Butterfly Pictures, but uppermost in the mind of the producers will be themes that are interesting and clean. There will be nothing of any nature in a Butterfly photodrama that will offend the most fastidious. Good taste will predominate in every respect in these pictures, which promise to be the most successful features ever presented by the Universal.

The first of these releases is "Eternal Love," a charming romance of Brittany. It tells in an appealing manner of the love of an artist for a simple peasant girl. Her sacrifices for him when he engulfs himself in a compromising situation in Paris and the subsequent realization of the artist of the meaning of true love constitute a decidedly fresh and fascinating film drama. Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard are well cast in the leading roles and give excellent performances. They are supported by a strong cast.

The second Butterfffly release will be "The Phantom's Secret," with Mignon Anderson, Hayward Mack and Molly Malone as the principals. This will appear May 14, and is an entirely different type of story from the first. It is replete with thrills, excitement, dangerous situations, and as full of suspense as a motion picture serial. It tells of a girl who is the daughter of a nobleman who leads a dual life. He is a respected member of the nobility during the daytime, but at night the dark side of his character is exposed, and he is seen as the leader of a band of criminals. The daughter is raised in a convent and kept in total ignorance of her father's dual personality. She is forced into an unhappy marriage with a member of her father's band upon his death and her trials and adventures make a thrilling story.

The surprise at the end of the picture when the band is foiled as they are about to perpetrate a big robbery gives this photodrama a decidedly novel twist. It is exceptionally well acted and the settings and photography are of unusual quality.

As proof of the variety of themes to be offered under the Butterfly brand, the third release scheduled for May 21 is "Like Wildfire," a five-act comedy drama with the most amusing plot ever offered on the Universal program. It was directed by Stuart Paton, who produced such well-known screen successes as "The Voice on the Wire," the big Universal mystery serial "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and others. Herbert Rawlinson is the star and appears in a role best suited to his pleasing personality.

Four other Butterffy Pictures are in the process of production and their release dates and titles will be announced at an early date.

Brooker Head of War News Syndicate

IN a recent interview Frederick W. Brooker, head of the Cinema War News Syndicate, presented some very sound ideas in outlining the policy of the new concern. They are given below as of interest to the industry. When asked of his distributing plans Mr. Brooker said:

"I have been following the trend of the film world for several years, and after considering impartially all distribution methods I arrived at the conclusion that open booking, or something very like it, will eventually be the rule. Of course, there is much to be said for the program from the exhibitor's viewpoint, but its disadvantages are greater than its benefits to him. A producer cannot do his best every day in the year, and when he does not do his best it leaves a bad taste in the exhibitor's mouth. Open booking sells each film on its individual merits, and makes it necessary to produce good films to be successful. The real arbiter of an overstocked film market is the exhibitor, and his slowness in realizing it does not mean that he will continue to ignore his power forever.

F. W. Brooker.

"Concerning our own plans for the Cinema War News Syndicate, we have no idea of revolutionizing the industry or of teaching it how to run its business. We merely hope to succeed by following sound principles. Releasing on state rights, we shall back up our state right buyers by a continuous live advertising campaign to individual exhibitors; and we shall back up the exhibitors by a publicity campaign to further popularize Captain Reynolds. He will be the special camerasponden of every house showing these pictures to the public.

"By this plan of helping every purchaser of our service to market it profitably we shall succeed."

Essanay Reopens Niles Studio

Will Produce a New Line of Western Subjects—Good Titles Announced.

ESSANAY has reopened its studio at Niles, Cal., and has launched into the production of a series of photodramas of the red blooded West. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, took this step following a careful study of the present problems of exhibitors. His decision was that the popular demand for pictures of this type was steadily growing, instead of decreasing.

For the past three weeks an army of carpenters, electricians and property experts have been at work rejuvenating the huge studio at Niles, which has been closed for more than a year. In addition to practically rebuilding the structure, new properties and modern electrical appliances have been installed. The studio was formally opened with elaborate ceremonies, which were attended by many motion picture celebrities and officials of the town and state. Work immediately was launched on the first production of the forthcoming series.

In this series Mr. Spoor announces that he will endeavor to give the public a conception of West different from anything vet placed upon the screen. This does not mean, he added, that the pictures will be lacking in thrills or settings less picturesque than those which the average photoplay patron is accustomed to view. But these thrills and real Western settings will be incorporated into stories of startling originality.

"The Land of the Long Shadow" will be the title of the first production. Filming of this picture already is under way. "Open Places" will be the second and "Vigilantes" the third. These will be followed by more, the exact number of which has not yet been decided upon.

The series, which will be known as Essanay-Niles features, will be an extensive one.

Mr. Spoor has contracted with Jack Gardner to portray the leading roles in the Essanay-Niles features. Mr. Gardner has been one of the best known actors on the speaking stage for the past several years, and has won a big following throughout the country. As a musical comedy star he scored big hits in "Madame Sherry," "The Chocolate Soldier," "The Yankee Prince," "The Belle of Mayfair," and also in New York's latest musical riot, "Oh Boy." For four years he was one of Frohman's principal satellites.

The reopening of its Niles studio now gives Essanay five big studios, all of which are going full blast. Max Linder at the Culver City, Cal., studio is working night and day producing his celebrated Essanay comedies. And at the Chicago plant, which includes three studios, Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton and Mary Charleson are being featured in productions of a general nature. Essanay is breaking its record in the production of motion pictures.

"I believe," said Mr. Spoor, in commenting upon his increased activities, "that the next year or so will see the most rapid strides ever taken in the motion picture industry. Within the past very short time photoplays have won a permanent popularity among classes and sections wherein they had never before been sustained. These gains, being substantial, cannot help but assure the future, both for the manufacturer and the exhibitor. All that is needed now is for the manufacturer to continue producing better and better pictures and for the exhibitor to continue striving to give his patrons more conveniences and comforts in showing them. Co-operating thus, neither the manufacturer nor the exhibitor—nor the patron, for that matter—can fail to gain."

The release date of the first of the Essanay-Niles features will be announced shortly.

VIRGIN ISLANDS IN PICTURES.

Maibelle Heikes Justice, well-known novelist and photodramatist, completed some time ago the first photodrama to be laid in the Danish West Indian Islands, lately acquired by the United States. This is not simply a sea story cast in the Danish Isles to be timely, the same as it might be cast in Florida for local coloring, but is a virile eight-reel drama, with its romance embracing all the beauties of the Carribean Sea and plantation life as it is really lived in this West Indian group. Barbara Yechton, the well-known novelist, who was born and lived upon the island of St. Croix for many years, has furnished Miss Justice the true local coloring for the story and detail of correct island life, so that the feature promises to be one of the noteworthy productions of the year.

Sam Kramer's Leap for Life

ONE of the most popular men in the younger generation of motion picture executives joins the ranks of the benedicts next Thursday evening, when Rabbi Steven Wise will unite in marriage Samuel B. Kramer, manager of the New York Bluebird Exchange, and Mamie Spiesberger, of Omaha, Neb. In anticipation of the coming event the Film Club turned its recent social session into a series of gentle reminders to Mr. Kramer that the course of his life would be changed, and made him the center of a number of pleasant little "stunts" to mark his farewell to bachelorhood.

Sam B. Kramer.

While Mr. Kramer was in Omaha, associated with his uncle, Sol J. Berman, in the exchange business, he met Miss Spiesberger and decided then to make her a member of the Kramer family. Exhibitors in the West will remember "S. B." as manager of the Mutual Exchange in Omaha, after he terminated his association there with Mr. Berman. Later he went to Indianapolis as exchange manager for Warner's features and then to Pittsburgh as exchange manager for Louis H. Selznick.

His entry into New York exchange business was made two years ago as manager of the Universal's Mecca Branch. When Sol J. Berman resigned as manager of Bluebird's New York Branch, Mr. Kramer was transferred to his present position as Mr. Berman's successor. Although Bluebird was well established when Mr. Kramer took hold of the New York territory, his efforts have resulted in a great increase in business for that brand. It was Mr. Kramer who interested S. L. Rothapfel in the Bluebird product, and his salesmanship has, in consequence, landed several of Bluebird's program features in the New York Rialto.

Following the marriage ceremony, which will be celebrated at the Biltmore Hotel, Thursday evening, April 26, Mr. and Mrs. Kramer will leave immediately for the West for a honeymoon trip extending as far as Omaha and scheduled to consume a fortnight.

FRANK BRUNER WITH REX BEACH PICTURES CO.

Frank V. Bruner has resigned his position as publicity director with the General Film Company to take charge of publicity and advertising for the Rex Beach Pictures Company. Although comparatively new in the motion picture field, Mr. Bruner has been signally successful in handling the publicity for the General, and is leaving that concern for the Rex Beach Pictures Company in order to have a broader field for publicity effort, as the latter concern will do big features only, "The Barrier," the most successful big picture of the year, being its first. "The Auction Block" is now being filmed at the company's Weehawken studio, and work will be started shortly on another of the Rex Beach novels, all of which are to be made into ten-reel features by the Rex Beach Pictures Company. Before entering the picture field Mr. Bruner was identified with many theatrical concerns, and has handled important attractions for Charles Frohman, Oliver Morosco, Henry B. Harris and Selwyn & Co.

SIGNAL PLAYERS ANSWER COUNTRY'S CALL.

The players at the Signal-Mutual studio stand ready to leave their screen profession and join in the fight against Germany when their Government needs them.

J. P. McGowan, director, has enrolled in the Los Angeles aviation squad, to be held in reserve. G. H. Wischussen, a former United States Army officer, is at work with several men of the Polo Club of Los Angeles organizing a regiment of infantry for service at the front. F. L. Hemphill, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, is also listed among the reserves.

EXHIBITORS' EXCHANGE ELECTS OFFICERS.

New Co-operative Association Holds First Meeting in New York City—List of Members and Territory Apportioned.

THE first get-together of the exhibitors composing the First National Exchange Circuit was held at the Hotel Astor on Monday, April 23. The object of the new association, as was outlined in the Moving Picture World last week, is, among other things, the elimination of the middleman in the distribution of state right subjects. The organization was the conception of J. D. Williams, who submitted his plans to T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles. Mr. Tally had had something similar in mind for years, and he gave his approval. The project was then submitted to Turner & Dahnken, of San Francisco. E. B. Johnson, secretary of the company, examined it from the legal angle and he and Mr. Dahnken suggested changes, which were promptly accepted.

The meeting at the Astor was for the purpose of ratifying the preliminary agreements, electing officers and generally putting the plans in operation. The directors were chosen in the forenoon, and are T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles; Fred Dahnken, representing T. & D.; Harry Schwalbe, of Philadelphia; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; E. A. Hulsey, of Dallas; Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago, and S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater Corporation, New York. The election of officers was to be held in the afternoon.

Present besides those elected as directors were E. B. Johnson, Mr. Von Herberg, of Oregon; Thomas Saxe, of Minneapolis; E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland; J. H. Kunsky, of Detroit; J. Eugene Pearce, of New Orleans; William Sievers, of St. Louis; Colonel Fred Levy, of Louisville; Tom Moore, of Washington; S. L. Rothapfel; N. H. Gordon, of Boston; Jake Wells, of Richmond; W. H. Brouse, of Toronto; N. P. Nolan, of Salt Lake; Frank G. Hall, of Newark, and Richard A. Rowland.

The firms comprising the association and their respective territories are: T. L. Tally, Southern California and Arizona, Turner & Dahnken, Northern California and Nevada; Greater Theaters Company, Washington and Alaska; Jensen & Von Herberg, Oregon; Silver Bow Amusements Company, Montana and Northern Idaho; Robert Lieber, Indiana; Thomas Saxe, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota; E. Mandelbaum, Ohio; J. H. Kunsky, Michiigan; Josiah Pearce & Sons, Louisiana and Mississippi; William Sievers, Missouri; E. H. Hulsey, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Big Feature Rights Company, Kentucky and Tennessee; Tom Moore, Maryland, District of Columbia and Delaware; Rialto Theater Corporation, New York, with the exception of Rochester; N. H. Gordon, New England; Jake Wells, Inc., Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida and Alabama; W. H. Erouse, Canada, east of but not including Port Arthur and Port William, Ontario; W. H. Swanson, New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and South Idaho and all counties south of Idaho County; Frank G. Hall, New Jersey; Howland & Clark, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; A. H. Blank, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska; Harry Schwalbe and Stanley Mastbaum, Eastern Pennsylvania.

France Opens Film Office Here

To Edmond Ratisbonne It Has Intrusted the Distribution of Official Still and Motion Pictures.

THE French Government has appointed Edmond Ratisbonne as its agent for official French films in the United States. Mr. Ratisbonne, who is a French soldier incapacitated for active service, has taken temporary quarters with Claude Patin in the offices of Beacon Films, at 220 West Forty-second street. To Mr. Ratisbonne will be intrusted not only the distribution of motion pictures, but of all still prints sent to this country by his government. These latter, which mainly are for distribution among newspapers and magazines, will include in scope such subjects as French industries during the war, paintings and sketches made by soldiers at the front and in hospitals, series of posters connected with war activities and photographs of well-known statesmen and officers, etc.

The entire proceeds from the sale or lease of still and motion pictures less the cost of operation will go to the French war office, which will make the best possible use of the money for the benefit of wounded soldiers.

Mr. Ratisbonne says he will receive from France at least one large subject a month. These will not be straight scenes of battle or of preparation for battle, but will be leavened by dramatic incidents, intended to heighten the human interest phase. Committees may be formed in the larger centers with the object of giving the French pictures wider exploitation. Following these exhibitions the subjects may be disposed of to booking organizations or sold on state rights.

The work in which Mr. Ratisbonne is now engaged is not new to him, as for nine months prior to coming to the United States he was engaged in a similar way in London. In that city, by the way, Mr. Ratisbonne was on familiar ground, as before the outbreak of the war he represented the Eclair company in that city.

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation

New Organization Incorporated in New York to Handle Product of Goldwyn Pictures.

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, has been chartered at Albany to operate and maintain the branch offices and handle the releases of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation throughout America.

The incorporators are Samuel Goldfish, Archibald Selwyn and G. L. Hess. The formation of this distribution mechanism will now be followed by the immediate organization of the Goldwyn branches in the principal cities of the United States.

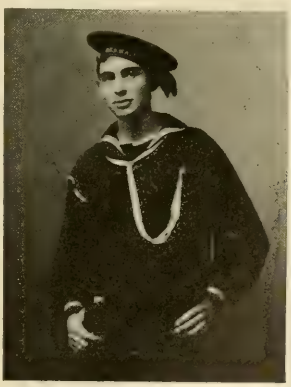
Goldwyn's methods of film salesmanship will be a radical departure from those practiced throughout the industry in that for the first time the selling methods of the nation's greatest industrial corporations will be introduced into the rental of motion pictures.

The Goldwyn owners have felt that the selling methods employed by the steel or automobile industries, for example, could be paralleled successfully by film distributors and all of the preliminary work for the installation of this type of organization is well under way.

The officers and directorate of the distributing unit of Goldwyn are to be elected in a few days.

Mitchell Lewis a Jack Tar

ALTHOUGH prominent for years as an interpreter of the spoken drama and known universally as a successful screen actor, few of Mitchell Lewis' friends and admirers know that he has done his bit for Uncle Sam and has seen actual service as one of the crew of the Wasp during the Spanish War and also as one of Admiral Sampson's crew on the flagship New York.



Mitchell Lewis.

Unusual attention has been attracted to Mitchell Lewis recently by his splendid character drawings in "The Bar Sinister" and "The Barrier," both of which were staged by Edgar Lewis and caused considerable comment because of their evenly balanced casts. In both pictures Mitchell Lewis shows a splendid grasp of the character he portrays and recalls his work on the stage in "The Squaw Man," in which he appeared in America, with William Faversham, and in England, where the play was called "The White Man."

Before going upon the stage Mr. Lewis not only served in the navy, but was also a schoolmaster at the Naval Training Station at Newport. His motion picture activities were begun at the old Reliance studios on West Twenty-first street, New York, where he labored with Marion Leonard, Henry Walthall, Arthur Johnson, James Kirkwood and Philip Simally, whose names are now a by-word in the art.

That he gave up his stage work reluctantly and that his roving sailor spirit has never left him is shown by his return at intervals to the "stage" and the "road." Between pictures he has appeared in stage versions of "The Squaw Man" with Dustin Farnum, "The Servant in the House" and "The Njgger," alternating between New York and London, where he made his last appearance as "Nobody" in a burlesque on "Everywoman."

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

McDOWELL, Claire. Born in New York City. Her parents were Americans of Scotch and English descent. Is five feet two inches tall and weighs 115 pounds. Dark complexion, brown hair and eyes. Miss McDowell made her stage debut about fifteen years ago and played with the Charles Frohman and Brady productions. She was in the stage production of The Clansman, from which The Birth of a Nation was evolved, and with William Faversham in Herod. About 1910 she became connected with the Biograph and for several years she was one of the most valued members of that famous company recruited by David Griffith. She left when the company permanently located on the coast, but she could not stay out of pictures and soon became connected with Universal. To mention notable parts would be to list most of the old Biographs, but His Trust and The Female of the Species will be recalled vividly.

Claire McDowell

BENSON, Patrica (Pat). Born in San Francisco. Norwegian-Danish parentage. Is five feet six inches tall and weighs 135 pounds. Light complexion, light brown hair and dark brown eyes. Miss Benson, who prefers to be called Pat, has had no stage experience and, as yet, rather a limited studio career, for she made her debut with the Balboa company in September, 1916, in Told at Twilight. She is one of the three women players in the Los Angeles district who is neither lead nor heavy. She plays ingenues and plays them well. She was the veiled woman in the Pathe serial The Neglected Wife. Miss Benson is unusual in other ways, for she does not write it down that she loves all outdoor sports. Her diversions are more quiet and restful, for she divides her spare time between painting and music, but she'll get the habit in time and rubber-stamp "all athletic sports" like the rest of the players.

Pat Benson

LORRAINE, Leota. Born in Kansas City, Mo. Her father was of German birth and her mother of Scotch-Irish descent. Is five feet six inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion, blond hair and blue eyes. Miss Lorraine has had no stage experience, but she has played with the Essanay, Metro and Morosco companies and is at present a member of the Balboa forces. Her screen debut was made in March, 1915, playing opposite Bryant Washburn in George Ade's fable of The High Roller and the Buzzing Blondine. Other roles were leads or heavies in A Bunch of Keys, The Promise and Giving Becky a Chance. Miss Lorraine, of course, loves all sorts of outdoor sports, but she is also domestic in her tastes, for when she gets the chance she loves to sit down with her sewing basket at hand and make pretty things. She is fond of dancing.

Leota Lorraine

HALE, Creighton. Born in Cork, Ireland. Irish-English parentage. Is nearly five feet ten inches tall and weighs 138 pounds. Fair complexion, blond hair, blue eyes. He made his stage debut when he was but five years of age and has had long experience. Was with John Mason in Indian Summer and with Holbrook Blinn in Moloch. Made his picture debut in 1913 and has played with Pathe, Famous Players, Solax, Eclair, Edison, Rolfe-Metro and other companies. At present he is filling a two-year contract with Pathe, playing juvenile leads and light comedy. He was Jameson in The Exploits of Elaine, Davy in The Iron Claw, Prince Charming in Snow White, Clem in The Three of Us, Reuben in The Old Homestead and Jimmy in Charity. Mr. Hale is devoted to motoring and aviation, having been a member of the Aero Club for the past two years, swims, is a tennis player and plays poker.

Creighton Hale

TALMADGE, Constance. Born in New York City. American parentage. Is five feet six inches tall and weighs 120 pounds. Fair complexion, golden hair, brown eyes. Miss Talmadge made her debut in April, 1915, in Vitagraph's Uncle Bill, remaining with that company until she went to the Fine Arts. She had had no stage experience, beginning directly with pictures. She was the Mountain Girl in the big production of Intolerance and among other parts likes best The Girl of the Timber Claims, The She Devil, Betsy's Burglar and the Matrimaniacs, in which she was featured with Douglas Fairbanks. Her early Vitagraph work was almost wholly in comedies, but she has run the gamut of the emotions. She is a sister of Norma Talmadge, also a Vitagraph debutante. She has no fads, but she likes all outdoors and is fond of dancing, driving her own car, walking and swimming.

Constance Talmadge

LEBRUN, Mignon. Born in New York City. French parentage. Is five feet three inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion, auburn hair and deep blue eyes. Miss Lebrun passes over her stage career with the non-illuminating remark that she had too little experience to relate anything of general interest. She made her picture debut in Balboa's Pay Dirt in 1916 and has remained with that company ever since, playing heavy parts. One hundred and thirty pounds does not seem to be a very good foundation for a line of heavy roles, but this is where her French ancestry comes into good service, for she makes up in fire what she lacks in avordupois and she does vampiring or the less exacting general meanness with conviction and effect. Outdoors she devotes her interest to blooded bulldogs. In the house her preference is for good literature, and she knows what good books are.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

A SPLENDID representation of Hub business and professional men making up the City Club were edified the other night with the new film "How Uncle Sam Prepares" shown at their new clubhouse. There was the utmost enthusiasm and the picture compared favorably with those on "How Great Britain Prepared," seen here earlier. Local picture houses are quite in line with matters patriotic and no program is complete without "The Star Spangled Banner" being played and sung by the house, standing at attention, while Old Glory is inspiringly shown in action on the screen. Managers too are admitting men free who wear uniform and they serve to dress up the house when they are off duty. All the short reels picturing events in our present history get a good hand, and in this way the motion pictures more than come into their own in being enlightening, inspiring and educational for those in front who do not, maybe, see the up to date papers. There was a special military showing of the first named picture in Tremont Temple, Monday the 16th, thanks to the courtesy of Mr. Samuel Grant, who is handling it here. This was of additional interest, as several local men posed, Leon J. Dadmon head of the Atlas Film Corporation, impersonating Uncle Sam, and Frank J. Howard, a pioneer in the film business here, made up as President Poincare of France.

Most entertaining picture since last letter? "Broadway Jones" by all odds the best in its line and a credit to Artcraft as well as to the author—George Cohan—who offers "his first offense" here. I like it far better than the play which opened with the entrance of "Broadway" in an intoxicated condition. This picture, taking up the small home town first, then evoluting to the white lights and back to the simple life, was one to enjoy more than once, and it is so free from horse play, grimaces, grins and all else peculiar to some comedians. Hats off to Joe Kaufman for his mob scenes, usually a mass of waving arms, but all right here and sanely shown. Ida Darling in a thankless part was an improvement over Ada Gilman, who created the part in the speaking version. Marguerite Snow, the dainty heroine, is a member of the Film Club, which turned out in large groups to see the star and his opposite. Wasn't that last scene artistic with the young couple in silhouette? I have rarely heard more applause over a picture than this elicited from capacity houses at the Exeter, which means much.

I would place "The Price of Fame" pretty well up, and it had some cast with Marc MacDermott playing double. Mary Maurice, the veteran Vitagraph mother, Naomi Childers and L. Rogers Lytton were in support. The double exposures and the political stuff furnished good entertainment anyhow.

Can you point out anything better done by Mary Pickford than "The Poor Little Rich Girl?" I have seen all her pictures and rank this as a topnotcher, better even than the play.

"Filmland City" is the new name for the exchange district, now complete with the addition of the Mutual Film Exchange, which occupies 10,000 square feet on Church and Melrose streets. Manager Roth is being congratulated on the completeness of the building in every detail. Stanley Hand has departed from the World Film much to our regret, for he was one of the "live wires" and always a delight to meet. It was my pleasure to meet the new manager of the Greater Vitagraph Company. L. M. Watrous went over for a runoff at his neighbor's exchange. He is a clean-cut man, affable, businesslike and evidently the right one for the position.

It was my misfortune to see a picture Sunday evening at a high class house putting women in a ridiculous light when they were doing their little stunt in aiding the cause of preparedness and duty. Something which looms up large is the part women are taking in this war, notably, across the water. Titled ones are working alongside those of the humblest classes, indulging in equal self-sacrifices, doing their best with little training, and so it may be here. To ridicule them on the screen is an offense as unpardonable as it is to caricature the President at this time. These pictures are permitted by a few Hub policemen to be shown Sundays, which goes to show that they do not possess one spark of patriotism. It was gratifying to hear a few hisses. At another theater a different brand of pictures are shown illustrating woman's part, and they are inspiring in their dignity and manner of presentation on weekdays. I don't mind saying that they bear the name of Hearst-Pathe—all clean cut and up to date.

I feel sorry for those who cannot enjoy real comedy such as the Drews continually give us, and so diverse in title and action. We had this week "Putting It Over on Henry," a domestic little offering most edifying to the married ones in front, and full of tips for those who may fall for the altar later on.

"The Spirit of Romance" gave us something a bit new without any overdose of the sentimental. Herbert Standing had a part quite compelling in its intensely human side, disclosing, too, his versatility. Diminutive Vivian Martin caught the house especially when she ordered a roundup of the kiddies in the slums and fed them with candy—some kids they were! In this we have George Fisher in a part wholly beneath his ability, but he is good to look at all the same. Somehow I cannot keep from my mind his part in "Civilization," his remarkable impersonation of Christ. Little Abby Lou in this play is a sort of Pollyanna and her work goes with young and old alike. This is a splendid offering.

We are anticipating. Fatty Arbuckle's first release by Paramount, "The Butcher Boy," already seen by readers doubtlessly. Mrs. Ayer is also giving us the first picture with Fairbanks done by the Artcrafts, "The Sacrifice," with Margaret Illington in her initial picture, two new ones with Marie Doro and Pauline Frederick and a repeat of "The Argyle Case," one of the best detective plays of the year, so well done by "Bob" Warwick. Speaking of this sort of play, many here enjoyed "Arsene Lupin," the Vitagraph offering, with Earle Williams and Ethel Gray Terry, the young daughter of Lillian Lawrence, one of the local favorites of stage and screen.

What a lot of fun when Burton Holmes uses his "speedo" camera even in classic Greece. I have seen staid old men and women of the blue blood stock laughing heartily at the rapidity of the camera. These same good folks thoroughly enjoy the Bray cartoons, and as to Mutt and Jeff there is continuous laughter, and this is good, wholesome fun, as well as a diversion from the many war pictures thrust upon us.

Some who saw the runoff of "To the Death," a Metro offering, featuring Petrova, writes me that it is quite her best effort. She is a Corsican and vendettas rule. The play was written by Mrs. L. Case Russell, who wrote "The Black Butterfly," which was changed from the original so much so as to make it hardly recognizable by the author.

Two Boston people have entered the picture game. One is Christie MacDonald, the clever stage star and erstwhile wife of Thomas Jefferson, eldest son of the late "Joe" Jefferson, and now Mrs. H. L. Gillespie. She has formed a corporation under the laws of New York and opened an office in Saratoga. Her pictures will be viewed with great interest here, where she was born and won her first stage success. The other no less renowned person in another line is John L. Sullivan, of fistic fame, now a motion picture magnate with a chartered company here, with Lawyer Clarence Rowley, treasurer.

Well, I have seen four of the deadly sins, Envy, Pride, Greed and Sloth, by all odds the best, since it has features which set one thinking. The first reel opens with the heroine in bed at noon, and with her are two animals—a most unsanitary thing, and it arouses disgust in the minds of all in front, however well they love dogs. My neighbor punched me and said, "The idea of sleeping with dogs, who always have fleas and are germy as a rule." The little heroine too had a big comforter over her entire body and no window open. To most of us the idea of cats and dogs in bed with human beings is disgusting to a degree. In this picture we have a pretty good lesson worked out when sloth took a back seat and patriotism its place. What a finished actress Helen Strickland is, and so graceful! Note her gestures and natural dignity. We liked the Molly Pitcher stunt despite some bad directing of the battle scene. A big redeeming feature to this episode was Molly on the gun kissing Old Glory. This brought down the house and is a saving grace. The earlier "sins" were certainly deadly, though Nance O'Neil did fine work in "Greed" and will serve to put over any picture through her personality. George LeGuere struggles bravely in all these, but we will be glad to have him return to pictures less melodramatic and messy.

Jack Pickford seems to have scored well in "The Dummy," an intensely human play. Little Ethelmary Oakland, the wonderfully beautiful child actress, got the house at the start, and then there was Frank Losee, the dependable, playing a detective. I did not see the play, but feel that this adaptation cannot be improved upon. "Pots and Pans Peggy," a wholesome play with a lot of kid stuff, went well also. "Out of the Wreck" was distinctive and well done by Kathlyn Williams, who is doing her best work with the Moroscos. She is made to tell a big story of murder, and this is well done and convincingly. "Sapho," made so familiar to theatergoers, is no Sunday school tale, yet wins by its presentation in the hands of Pauline Frederick supported by big players like Thomas Meighan, Frank Losee, Pedro de Cordova and others.

Fanny Ward in "Betty to the Rescue" made a hit with us all and was like a Dresden doll in "The Winning of Sally Temple," both plays shown at several theaters. In the latter she wears some of her best jewels and looks the part to perfection. The Laskys have given some splendid settings and provided atmosphere to burn. The titles were not up to mark.

Frank G. Hall

FRANK G. HALL, who has just purchased the world rights to "The Bar Sinister," Edgar Lewis' new master production, is a young man who in a few years has made himself one of the most powerful state rights men in the country. Up until the present time Mr. Hall has confined his activities to New Jersey, but intends to expand his efforts world-wide with "The Bar Sinister," which was given a trade showing at the Broadway theater, New York, on Wednesday morning, April 18, at ten o'clock. Mr. Hall has not as yet definitely decided whether he will handle the production as a road show or whether he will dispose of territorial rights to it. In all probability he will reserve the New York and New Jersey rights for himself.

Frank G. Hall.

Already there has been spirited bidding for rights to The Bar Sinister," which, Edgar Lewis asserts, is better than "The Barrier," which he also produced. The new feature is in nine reels and relates to life in the turpentine country of the South. It contains a fight scene which is said to rival that in "The Barrier."

Frank G. Hall is the president of the Civilization Film Corporation, the offices of which are in Newark, N. J. He is also president of thirteen other picture and theatrical corporations and is living up to the sobriquet applied to him by New Jersey exhibitors and theatrical men—"the man of surprises." Among the productions at present controlled by Hall in New Jersey are "Joan the Woman," "Civilization," "War's Women," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "The Whip," "The Garden of Allah" and "Beware of Strangers."

TOO MUCH IN HER NAME.

The time honored question, "what's in a name," has been agitating the lovely brow of Miss Lehua Waipahu, the talented Hawaiian actress who made such a distinct hit in the Lasky-Paramount adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Bottle Imp."

After hearing various admirers endeavor to whistle and sing her name, all with no success, she decided that if the name was worth anything at all it would have to be one which some one other than herself could pronounce. Miss Waipahu has therefore decided that she will hereafter be known both in private life and upon the stage as just plain Margaret Loomis. This is not an American translation of Lehua Waipahu, but it is simply a name which she has taken in honor of her American relatives.

Movie Charity Ball

Triple Triumph Registered by New York Branch of Exhibitors' League—Ball for Red Cross Benefit.

CHARITY begins at home, but it did not stay there Monday evening, April 16—it came out in force to Terrace Garden, New York, borne on the shoulders of the more than two thousand persons who attended the Movie Charity Ball, given for the benefit of the American Red Cross by the New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. That the affair was a triple triumph—financially, socially and patriotically—was attested by the receipts, attendance and enthusiasm registered.

It would be easier to tell who was not there than who was. Of motion picture stars there was a veritable skyful; of New York's society there were many; of exhibitors there was a full complement; of producers, exchangemen, scenario writers, film cutters, publicity men, etc., there were scores; in fact, every branch—every twig, even—of the industry answered "here" to charity's call.

To the various individuals and committees who "did their bit" toward the success of the affair much credit is due. The arrangements as planned were carried out as smoothly as an aeroplane flies.

The auditorium was gorgeously and gloriously mantled in a cloak woven of thousands of American flags and miles of bunting. This riot of lovable color was set off like a gem in a Tiffany setting by the line of boxes on the balcony, which were filled with beautiful women, beautifully dressed.

Dancing did not begin until almost midnight. From early evening until about 11 o'clock those present were entertained by selections played by an augmented orchestra of many pieces. Shortly before 11 o'clock there was a patriotic demonstration that by mental and spiritual enthusiasm alone would have killed any enemy that might have been lurking within a mile of the place. It was precipitated by a spirited rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." At the psychological juncture at which patriotic fervor was at its hottest a large American flag was unfurled from the rafters. The big place was dim, and as the battery of spotlights caught Old Glory in a bath of radiance, making it stand out like a rifle-sight against a white target, the assemblage lost itself in a patriotic frenzy.

Then came the introduction of the players to the audience. The onlookers registered their approval and appreciation by square after square of applause.

The grand march followed. It was led by Leah Baird and Earle Williams, and was one of the prettiest and most impressive, from the standpoint of beauty and symmetry, ever staged. The marchers trod over the glazed floor to martial strains. Playing upon them were the vari-colored lights that spelled carnival more clearly and convincingly than do the letters themselves.

Dancing was next in order, and, as has once or twice been said before, was enjoyed until a late hour.

N. B.: The bar reported exceptionally good business.

MAXINE ELLIOTT PICTURES AT RED CROSS BENEFIT.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has offered its first Maxine Elliott picture to the American Red Cross organization for its first presentation on any screen under the auspices of a group of famous American social leaders.

This offer has been eagerly accepted and therefore it may be announced that the first audience anywhere in the world to see Miss Elliott as a heroine of the cinema will assemble in Newport in late June or early July and pay $5 a seat as the minimum price for the privilege.

The entire receipts of the Newport presentation are donated by Goldwyn and Miss. Elliott to the American Red Cross, as well as the receipts of two similar performances under similar auspices that will be arranged in Bar Harbor and at Narragansett Pier. If possible, Miss Elliott will defer for a week or ten days sailing for England to attend the initial presentation.

Program or Open Booking

By S. A. de Waltoff

Practical Exhibitor Points Out Advantages of First Plan—Blames Latter Method For Small Profits

TAX legislation, censorship and other vital problems of the motion picture industry may be discussed pro and con for hours, days and weeks, and yet there is one subject which is of tremendously more importance to the industry than either of these—and it is the question of program booking or open booking.

Should I book my pictures from the open market, or should I stick to the program? This is the question which every exhibitor has, or will have to answer in the future. Why should the exhibitor book a program in preference to obtaining the pictures the open market offers? The reasons are many, and each is sound, practical and business-like. No exhibitor today should use his community influence toward assisting in the presentation of "special" pictures. Why? Because it will prove his ultimate decline.

A short time ago a man came to New York after a trip through Canada, looking over the motion picture field there. He announced that the Canadian exhibitor was "milked dry" through the use of special pictures and by supporting the open market. The program was being entirely subordinated. He is signed to a program, as most all exhibitors have to be, but each special picture which comes near his town he must "grab" and pay just a little more than his competitor in order to get it. Then he must shelve his regular pictures while paying for them and run the special attraction at an increased admission price, to get back the money expended. Fluctuating box office prices never did do a theater any real good. He is, as it were, caught coming and going. And a short time of this sees him either a failure or a mediocre exhibitor.

A special picture goes on the open market; what is the manner of sale as compared with the sale of program pictures?

The open market producer compels the exchangeman or exhibitor to pay the highest price obtainable for the picture. He doesn't care what, as long as it is the most that can be obtained. The exchangeman or exhibitor is compelled to pay this exhorbitant price in order to keep the picture from competitors. When the picture is shown, it necessarily follows that increased admission prices must be charged to offset the great price of the film. The open market man cares nothing for the exhibitor's good will. He does not know the word "service." All he cares for is the price he can secure for his picture.

Contrast this with the methods of the program producer. He knows that success in the motion picture business for him means that he must make the exhibitor a "partner," so to speak. He sells his program to the exhibitor, not one picture, but many, and he knows that unless the exhibitor makes money with them, he will not renew his contract. Therefore, he does everything in his power to aid the exhibitor to make money with his pictures. He sells his program at a price which every exhibitor can afford to pay, and at a price which will not compel him to raise the "ante" at the box office. The program producer must sell the exhibitor his pictures every week in the year—the open booking producer must sell his second pictures all over again, so why worry about the inflated price of the first?

The exhibitor who books a good program—and there are many good ones today—knows that he will receive consistently good pictures the year round. He is enabled to determine his costs, and he can distribute other finances over the other angles of his theater business. And the most important thing is, he can set an admission price, one which will afford him profit, and STICK TO IT! He can build up a trade just like the grocer, butcher and baker does.

Another important consideration—in one way the most important. Take for example, the Paramount, Triangle or any other good program. Out of 104 pictures a year which they produce few are "lemons." Then consider some of the open market pictures. One is led to expect great things from them. Audiences are expected to "go wild" over the "stupendous, magnificent productions," but many times these much heralded open market pictures have proved "fizzles." Money which the producer of programs would spend on his production, the open market fellow spends on publicity, advertising and salaries for stars. The program picture is consistently of better value all around than the open market feature.

The open market people claim the stars of the motion picture world. And yet there are many more honest-to-goodness stars, with box office pulling power, today in the program than are released with special fancy prices.

Any and every real live wholesaler today is anxious to co-operate with his jobber and retailer. Business demands it. Wise producers are always eager to give the utmost co-operation. With motion picture producers, the men who want the exhibitor to "make good" and stick, so that he will show pictures and make money for the producing industry, are the program producers. The open market men care nothing about co-operation. When their pictures are sold, there ends their responsibility. The program men must feel responsible for their pictures, if they care for the future business of the exhibitor.

The program producer offers you protection, along with good pictures.

The open market shark takes your money and leaves the rest to you.

Which policy should be encouraged by every exhibitor in this country?

Which course is the most beneficial?

The answer is written on the wall. How soon the exhibitors will see it is entirely up to them. Can YOU read?

Pictures in Ecuador

Complaints of Poor Translation in Titles of American Pictures.

SEVEN places in which motion pictures are shown are operating in Ecuador, says U. S. Consul General Frederic W. Goding, stationed at Guayaquil. One of the most important is at Guayaquil, and two are at Quito. The seating capacity of these three averages about 600. The admission price at the Guayaquil shows is 10 cents; at Quito 25 cents, and at the smaller shows the price is 20 cents for the evening. Dramatic pictures are in greatest demand, and comic ones are appreciated, but scenic films do not appeal to patrons of these houses.

One man enjoys a monopoly of the motion picture business, including the films and theaters where they are shown; hence, he is the only renter or purchaser of films. Practically all the pictures shown in Ecuador are from France, Italy and Spain, with an occasional one from the United States. No information is given as to the agencies supplying them or the prices paid. Users here complain that in American pictures the change from scene to scene is made too quickly, and that translations are badly made, which is annoying to the patrons.

[The name of the renter or purchaser of films mentioned in this report may be obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, its district or co-operative offices. Refer to file No. 85223.]

ROSENBERG RE-LEASES THE SAVOY.

Messrs. Sullivan & Farrell and Saul J. Baron, owners of the Savoy theater, situated at 112 West 34th street, New York, have leased to the present tenant, Walter Rosenberg, for a term of five years beyond the present lease at an approximate rental of $40,000 per year. The tenant intends to remodel these premises and thoroughly embellish them by removing the stage, renewing all seats throughout, thereby increasing the capacity. Premises will be devoted to motion picture performances entirely. A pipe organ will be installed and an entrance built into the premises on the 33d street side. The property now runs through from 33d to 34th streets and it is the intention of Mr. Rosenberg to sell tickets on both the 33d and the 34th street side.

McCONNELL TO WRITE CHILD WELFARE SUBJECTS.

Guy McConnell, the well-known magazine writer and author of "Pearl of the Army," Pathe's successful preparedness serial, the first to be released, has been selected to write the stories and scenarios to be filmed and released on behalf of the International Child Welfare League, Inc., of which Mrs. Mary Austin, known as "the most widely interviewed woman in America," is president.

"Feeding the Odd Animals" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

AN ATTRACTIVE number of the Ditmars "Living Book of Nature" brings us in close touch with a number of small animals, principally of the fur-bearing class. The raccoon in one of the opening scenes investigates the camera outfit, displaying considerable sagacity in his handling of same. He also begs in the most appealing manner for food, and is treated for his pains to a basket of clams, of which he is especially fond, and quarrels with his companions over the largest share. He receives a helping of corn for dessert. We also see a mother raccoon with her three-month-old babies, and note her anxiety over the operations of the camera man. The Brazilian coati, a first cousin of the raccoon, is also introduced, followed by the Argentine armadillo, the Tasmanian Devil, the ground hog, the Texas badger, the porcupine, who performs a grotesque dance while begging for food, and the Florida skunk. Information concerning the principal characteristics and foods of these animals is given.

"In and Around San Diego" (Pathe-Combitone).

The sixth of the Combitone series presents some well-photographed and interesting views in and around San Diego. The opening scene gives a view of the city from Point Loma. Scenes in the city are also shown. An interesting feature of the picture is an illustration showing the gathering of kelp and seaweed with a specially constructed machine, for the purpose of converting it later into potash. The gathering, ginning and baling of California cotton, a long fibred specimen which is adapted to use for the making of fabric for automobile tires, is also of interest. Scenes at the Coronados Islands, 25 miles south of San Diego, showing groups of sea lions in their native haunts, sunning themselves on the rocks, rolling off into the water and playfully plunging about are interesting.

"Parks and Gardens of Paris, France" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 23" have been illustrated the beautiful parks and gardens of Paris. Among these are the Monceau Park, the Queen's Walk, which is in the heart of Paris, the beautiful gardens of Luxemburg, and the Luxemburg palace, which is now used as a museum, the Champs Elysees, the Bois De Bologne, the Trocadero gardens, and the Bois De Vincenne. While only glimpses of these beautiful parks can be had in the pictures, a good general idea of what they are can be gained.

"Volendam, Holland" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The scenes descriptive of life in and about Volendam, Holland, and which are contained in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 23," are informational and entertaining. We learn that the town of Volendam on the Zuyder Zee is reached by canal, and that the steamers approaching it must enter through locks which separate the canal from the sea. These canals also intersect the town. Street scenes present quaint types in picturesque costumes. These include glimpses of shops, children coming from school, and the residents returning home from church. A view of the harbor is also given showing a group of fishing boats.

"Lisbon, Portugal" (Mutual-Gaumont).

From "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 23" we learn that Lisbon, the capital of Portugal, is built on a series of terraces of low hills, that it is backed by the Cintra mountains, and that the city exends five miles along the Tagus river. Among the public buildings and places shown are the municipal palace, the beautiful garden of Dom Luiz, and the Rua Aurea, a street occupied principally by goldsmiths. The traffic policemen of Lisbon are included among the sights; also the street venders, and the milking of a cow in the streets. Fishing smacks and the wharves are also shown.

"Paper Bag Cooking" (Universal).

Mrs. A. Louise Andrea demonstrates in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 17 how to properly cook food by the paper bag method, by which it is claimed flavors can be retained and weight and food values saved. The lesson delivered in the picture teaches us to first grease the inside of the bag with melted butter, after which we learn that chops can be beautifully cooked in this way. Also fish on bacon strips, or peas and potatoes, which will be found to be splendidly flavored, and rhubarb will stew in its own moisture. To find whether or not the food is thoroughly cooked the top of the bag can be punctured. Charred bags are thrown away and thereby the usual washing of pans is done away with.

"Turkey Hunting in South Carolina" (Paramount-Bray).

Illustrations secured by the camera man while accompanying a party of wild turkey hunters will be found in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 64. We learn through this picture how the hunters line up along a turkey path in the woods, where the birds come to dine on beechnuts. They hide themselves behind a screen of boughs, coax the birds by blowing on a reed, which makes a sound similar to that made by the female turkey, and when the turkeys are sighted on the path or flying through the air they are shot by the hunters.

"An Ostrich Ranch" (Universal).

Interesting views taken at the Cawston Ostrich farm near Los Angeles will be found in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 17. This farm takes care of some 300 ostriches, which yield a goodly income from the beautiful plumes clipped periodically from tail and wings. In the picture we learn that the ostrich is a good sprinter, that he is fond of oranges, and that he could if necessary be used as a means of transportation.

"Manufacturing an Automobile" (Universal).

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 17 contains instructive views photographed at an automobile manufactory. In these pictures we see the body builder at work, the carvers routing out the designs, the fitting of hinges and locks, the setting up of the body, the preparing of the glue used in the joints, the skeleton body ready for mounting, the fitting of the aluminum overcoat, and the beating of the metal; and finally the painting, finishing and placing of the body on the chassis and the upholsterers at work.

"The Poison Doll" (Paramount-Bray).

Unusually valuable by way of information is this subject contained in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 64. The picture demonstrates the result of an investigation made by Prof. D. R. Hodgdon into the materials used in the composition of cheap candies sold to children at a penny apiece. His discovery is a startling one, and reveals the fact that not a single nourishing element is to be found in these candies, but that on the contrary the principal ingredients are carpenter's glue, talc, aniline dyes, lamp-black, parrafine and varnish. Prof. Hodgdon demonstrates his subject by means of a doll in the manufacture of which he has used the various ingredients found in these cheap candies. This doll coupled with a chart serves well the purpose of illustration.

"Salvaging the Submarine's Prey" (Paramount-Bray).

In the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 64 will be found illustrations explaining the character and manipulation of a remarkable device invented by an American, W. D. Sisson. This device is capable of making possible the removal of the cargo from sunken ships, and also the raising of the vessels themselves. The machine is in the form of a large globe, made of steel plates, and roomy enough to hold several men.

The instruments used in connection with this device are compressed air, powerful electromagnets and cylindrical water tanks, hooks and cables. The method used in carrying forward this work is clearly illustrated herein by means of photographs and diagrammatical drawings.

Salisbury-Beach at Rialto

Mary Roberts Rinehart Fishing for Tarpon in Panama and the Cultivation of the Cocoa Plant Interesting Features.

A NEW face is evident in the sixth instalment of the Salisbury-Beach series of picures of the Spanish Main, which are being shown at the Rialto. It belongs to Mary Roberts Rinehart, the well-known writer, who in company with Rex Beach and party, is seen landing several huge tarpon in the vicinity of Panama. Considerable information in connection with this exceedingly gamey fish is given in the subtitles; and we enjoy watching its frantic efforts to make good its escape, jumping at times many feet above the water.

Another feature of this instalment is the cultivation, and gathering of the cocoa bean.

Teachers' Association Demonstrates

Lasky Adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's Story, "The Bottle Imp," Used as Demonstration Feature at Meeting at Strand Theater.

THE New York City Teachers' Association has been for some time working on a plan whereby they might do their part toward making the moving picture theater a place of clean entertainment and moral impetus. The plan under consideration is that the teachers of New York City should adopt and publish the basic standards governing desirable moving picture entertainments; that through their voluntary organizations they prevail upon the moving picture producers and theater managers to accept these standards wholly or in part. It embodies an appeal to theater managers to set aside at least one evening each week for the presentation of entertainments entirely in harmony with the teachers' approved standards. It is also the intention of the association to request the Board of Education to authorize this effort on the part of the teachers to improve moving picture entertainments for the family group and permit them to advise the parents through the medium of the schools where and when standard entertainments may be seen.

In order that those interested might have an opportunity to judge of the class of films which they deem desirous for exhibition before the family group a demonstration was held on Saturday morning, April 14, at the Strand theater. The films exhibited by way of example were the Lasky adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's story, "The Bottle Imp," and a Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, which included a delightful "Bobby Bumps" animated cartoon comedy. Other subjects of the pictograph were "An Industrial Paradise," consisting of views photographed at the Roycroft Shops at East Aurora, established by the late Elbert Hubbard, and "A Birdland Romance," in which the domestic life of a mallard duck is laid bare. Both of these films are samples of the best that the screen has to offer, and were suggested by the National Committee for Better Films.

A statement regarding the standard which the Teachers' Association believes should govern the presentation of moving pictures in public places is embodied in the following:

The presentation of the ideals of patriotism, heroism, happiness, right-living and accomplishment, should always be uppermost, and should occupy a major portion of every picture. Moving pictures should draw their themes, situations, characters and action from literature, plays, adventure, news, fine arts, industries, science, nature, history, biography, stories, romances, humor, pathos and all worth while activity and achievement. It is desirable to employ only moving picture actors of good character and standing in their communities. The legends should be clear, expressed in good English, and the grammatical and rhetorical forms should be correct. The most effective moving picture is that based on stories of home life, showing its joys and its sorrows, its triumphs and its virtues, bearing in mind the fact that the story attracts rather than the delineation of horror and crime. The tragic element may be found in the more common disappointments of life such as sickness, accidents, weather and the like, while humorous situations are always possible of development without offending good taste. Clothing worn by characters should always be in keeping with the part to be enacted, and everything approaching vulgarity and obscenity should be avoided. The most flagrant abuse of the moving picture at the present time is the delineation of crime.

Club Women Inaugurate Unique Plan

Commonweal Club of Syracuse Go Usual Method One Better by Indorsing Exhibitor's Best in Place of Selecting Own Programs.

THE COMMONWEAL CLUB of Syracuse, which is composed of no less than 1,050 business women and other eligible female citizens, has according to Miss M. E. Paddock, an officer of the club who, during the past week spent some time in New York, bent on matters connected with Affiliated Committee work, inaugurated a unique method of helping the cause along.

Miss Paddock is a member of the Advisory Committee of the National Board of Review, and on her visit to New York was prevailed upon to tell us something of interest on moving picture affairs as they progress in her city. While not posing as a representative of the Commonweal Club she revealed a rather unusual step which they had taken, its secondary object being that of helping to stimulate an interest in the better class moving picture program.

The fact that community work in Syracuse has been somewhat neglected has inspired the club to its present effort. The necessity for funds with which to carry on community work is being aided by the sale of tickets for ten of the regular programs of the Savoy theater, which has a seating capacity of from six to eight hundred persons. Of the tickets sold outside of the theater half of the receipts go to the Commonweal Club, and half to the house. The tickets in groups of ten sell for one dollar and are printed by the Commonweal Club, with individuality of wording, coloring, etc. The programs, as regularly supplied from the exchanges, are submitted to the Commonweal Club, are carefully considered by them, and are indorsed or not according to their moral and entertainment values. By this method the exhibitor's regular booking plans remain undisturbed, while he gains patronage and encouragement in the exhibition of the better class program. In this manner also the cause of the moving picture in Syracuse is aided by establishing a confidence on the part of individuals who have felt a hesitancy in attending the regular moving picture show.

Safety-First Railway Picture

Film Shows Canadian Transportation Employees How to Prevent Accidents.

A MOTION picture car is to be put in service by the Canadian Government railways, to demonstrate the principles of "safety first" in their application to modern railroading, writes U. S. Consul E. Verne Richardson, Moncton, New Brunswick, in "Commercial Reports." Built under the authority of the Minister of Railways, the car is now well on the way to completion at the Moncton shops.

The exhibition will consist of pictures dealing with the danger of taking unnecessary chances in the performance of railway duties, and will be of value to employees over the entire system. It is expected that a week will be spent at each of the divisional and terminal points, and as the seating capacity of the car is limited to 48 persons, it may be necessary to spend more time at some of the larger points.

The pictures will be shown at 4, 7.30 and 8.30 p. m., though arrangements will be made to exhibit them at any other hour which may suit the convenience of ten or more employees.

The title of the film that has been purchased for use in the new safety car is: "The House That Jack Built." It is a story of the results that follow carelessness on the part of railway men. The pictures are not confined to operation and transportation, but deal with shop conditions as well.

Interesting Series for Pictograph

"Unmasking the Mediums" Demonstration by Hereward Carrington Contains Valuable Information for Gullible Public.

THOSE interested in psychic research will no doubt welcome the series of pictures soon to be included in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, in which Hereward Carrington, who for years has made a study of such matters, reveals much of the trickery resorted to by so-called mediums. This series will be entitled "Unmasking the Mediums," and should be of unlimited value in educating the credulous masses to a realization of the effort which they should exercise in restraining themselves from being drawn under the influence of fake seances. In the pictures Mr. Carrington will explain the phenomena of the mysterious halos, vapor forms, the double envelope fake and various other misleading practices of the ordinary clairvoyant or medium.

The Pictograph containing the first of this series will be exhibited at the Strand theater, New York City, the week of April 22. The regular release date of this number of the Pictographs will be April 28.

National Academy Views Prizma Pictures

Exhibition of Prizma Natural Color Pictures Viewed by National Academy of Sciences at Smithsonian Institute.

BEFORE members of the National Academy of Sciences in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C., Monday night, Prizma, Incorporated, exhibited several reels of motion photography in natural colors, the first of their kind ever shown before that distinguished body. A varied program set forth the possibilities of color and motion applicable to the screen and proved highly entertaining to the scientists who were gathered at Washington in annual meeting.

American Pictures Popular in British Guiana

Dramas, Comics and Topical Subjects Constitute Most of the Programs—Growing Demand for Serials.

SIX motion picture theaters are in operation in British Guiana, says Consul George E. Chamberlin at Georgetown, writing in "Commerce Reports." The principal ones are in Georgetown, and the others are branches which are supplied with films and accessories from the local houses. The Olympic theater, on Middle street, Georgetown, has a seating capacity of 1,520, including 300 seats at 24 cents, 220 at 12 cents and 1,000 at 4 cents. The London Electric theater, on Camp street, accommodates 2,000, including 150 seats at 24 cents, 600 at 12 cents and 1,250 at 2 cents. The company owning it recently took over the Royal Palace theater and changed its name, while the original London Electric theater has been dismantled and removed to New Amsterdam, where it will be reopened with a capacity of about 1,000, at the usual prices—24, 12 and 4 cents. The other theater at New Amsterdam has a seating capacity of about 800, with the same range of prices. Two houses are at Plantations Rose Hail and Skeldon, in Berbice County, and each has a capacity of about 600. All the theaters have daily performances, except on Sundays, from 8.30 to 10.30 p. m., and semi-weekly matinees from 5.30 to 7.30 p. m.

All makes of films (chiefly American) are used. The Olympic theater receives its supply through a company in New York City, and the London Electric theater through a film exchange in Trinidad, B. W. I. The price of the service ranges from $5 to $12 per reel of 1,000 feet, and the films are usually in the hands of the local houses from 2 to 6 weeks, which does not include time to transit. American films and accessories generally give satisfaction, and the local managers have no suggestions as to improvement.

The films shown are chiefly dramas, comics and topicals. There is, however, a growing demand for serials in 20 to 40 parts. Those recently shown drew crowded houses. Industrial and travel pictures do not appeal to the British Guiana public. Picture plays are popular, but a large portion of the patronage is from the laboring classes, which usually pay the lowest prices of admission—2 and 4 cents. When pictures of special merit are shown the class of patronage is raised and the houses are well filled from the pit up.

Panama Has Big Picture Theaters

The America at Colon Seats 1,200, the Broadway Accomodates 1,000—Admission as High as Thirty Cents.

IN "Commerce Reports," Consul General Alban G. Snyder at Panama writes that the city of Panama has only three motion picture theaters of any importance. These are the Amador, the Aurora and El Dorado. The Amador and Aurora have seating capacities of 600 and 300, respectively. El Dorado theater seats about 600. It shows Spanish and Italian films exclusively. The prices of admission to the Amador and Aurora are 10, 20 and 30 cents, while prices at the El Dorado vary according to the features shown.

The manager of the Amador and Aurora also has two theaters in the city of Colon—the America, with a seating capacity of about 1,200, and the Broadway, seating about 1,000. Prices at these theaters are 10, 15 and 25 cents. This manager imports all of his films from the United States through New Orleans, his service comprising most of the well-known American makes. The cost ranges from $75 up.

The post exchanges and the Y. M. C. A. clubhouses on the Canal Zone also give motion picture entertainments from time to time, the former generally obtaining their service from the manager mentioned, while the clubhouses get some from that source, but also at times import special features direct from the States, including such productions as "The Birth of a Nation" and "Civilization."

Millicent Fisher

IN MILLICENT FISHER, who plays the role of "The Girl of the Vision" in Metro's wonder serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars, Director Wm. Christy Cabanne believes he has found an ideal screen face. About a year ago Miss Fisher came to New York to visit friends and one day visited the Metro-Quality studios. There she saw the initial chapter of "The Great Secret." Her pretty and unusually expressive face attracted the attention of Director Cabanne, and needing just such a type for one of his characters, he offered the part to her. She refused.

"Don't be afraid, I have never made a mistake in selecting screen types, and right here I prophecy a success for you," persisted the director.

"I admit, after what I have seen, that the motion picture has a positive fascination," replied Miss Fisher, "and I may say further——"

"Say nothing further," continued Mr. Cabanne, "until you have had a screen test," and forthwith Cameraman Fildew was brought into action.

Millicent Fisher.

But Miss Fisher would not yield until her mother had come to New York and looked over the situation from every angle. The persuasive Mr. Cabanne had won. She scored an immediate success in "The Great Secret" as a young mother living in the Klondike, and Director Cabanne has made great prophecies as to her future.

Miss Fisher is a native of Greenboro, N. C. Her father, now dead, was a captain in the English army and a man of wealth and distinction. He married into an exclusive set. After private tutoring the only daughter, Millicent, was sent to the Greenboro Women's College, and later to Penn Hall, Chambersburg, Pa., where her educational finish was attended to. She specialized in music, literature, vocal culture and domestic science. After her graduation, a year was devoted to travel and sightseeing and then followed her debut in Southern society. Upon her return home she applied herself to music and art. Miss Fisher lives at the Hotel Rutledge and is considerable of a social favorite. She is fond of outdoor sports and is a fine horsewoman.

Australian Notes

THE new Federal Government Film Censorship promises much trouble for Australian film importers. For every film that comes to this country, a permit must be secured from the Minister for Customs, at a cost of five shillings, with the application for the permit a synopsis of the film has to be supplied, and if the Board of Censors does not approve of the plot, a screening of the picture is demanded. As the board is located in Melbourne, this is likely to cause much trouble, 95 per cent of the imported films coming through Sydney, and being released there first. Therefore, if the board does not approve of the synopsis of any picture, the film has to be posted to Melbourne—582 miles—reviewed there, and if passed, returned again by post —which cannot be done in less than seven days. Just at present stocks of film are very low in several of the Sydney exchanges, and one has been unable to meet release dates owing to the censors demanding a screening of two productions. A deputation of film importers has been in Melbourne during the past week interviewing the Minister for Customs, in an endeavor to get several points conceded, and so far they have been only partly successful. The Minister has refused to allow scenic or industrial pictures into the country without a permit; will not change the location of the Board of Censors, who will remain in Melbourne. Several minor applications, however, were granted.

Film exchanges, and consequently exhibitors' programs, have been considerably dislocated during the last few weeks, owing to interruption in the shipping of films from the U. S. A. One exchange has received no supplies by either of the last two American mail steamers, while others have only short supplies. Shipments by the last steamer arrived without bills of lading, and were consigned to the manager of the shipping company. It was evident that they had been rushed to the ships side at the last moment. The shipping company allege that part of the trouble is due to the unbusinesslike methods of the manufacturers, who seem to believe that they can put their cases on board the ship at the twelfth hour.

"Intolerance" is undoubtedly the greatest photoplay attraction that has been shown in this country. It is now in its fifth week at the Theater Royal, Sydney, and is playing to capacity every night with prospects of still several weeks' run. In Sydney, a "legit" attraction has to be extraordinarily good to enjoy even a four weeks' season.

The Premier of New South Wales has had under consideration a recommendation that the picture theaters should be utilized on Sunday evenings for the benefit of the Soldiers Repatriation Fund. He has, however, decided not to entertain the proposal. At present the only Australian town with Sunday picture entertainment is Hobart, Tasmania.

Next month the stately Sydney Town Hall is to succumb to the popular demand and become a photoplay theater. Such is the announcement made by Alec Lorimore, of Australian Feature Films. This concern has secured the lease of the building for every Saturday night during the winter, and a full program of Paramount productions will be presented each week.

The Town Hall has been used as a picture house before, though only for special pictures, and it remains to be seen how the new order of things will succeed. It will undoubtedly be the largest picture theater in Australia, if not south of the line, as it has seating accommodation for 3,500.

W. Barrington Miller, managing director of Union Theaters, Ltd., controlling picture theaters in all the capital cities of the Commonwealth, left for the U. S. A. this week on a business trip, which will last for several months.

At the present time there are no less than six Australian productions under way, five of which are feature productions. W. Franklyn Barrett is approaching the last stages in the making of his six-reel patriotic drama, "Australia's Peril," which is being made with the help of the New South Wales Recruiting Committee. This will, in many respects, be one of the most interesting films yet made here, as all settings are on lines similar to those used in America, instead of the painted canvas walls and doors usually seen in Australian pictures.

Raymond Longford is getting ready to start on the filming of "Church and the Woman," a picture that is to be the forerunner of three.

Charles Woods, one of the pioneer Australian producers, is also at work on a five-reeler, as yet unnamed, which he says will be one of the biggest sensations the local market has ever seen.

A two-part comedy, "The Reformer," a burlesque on the would-be reformers who have been endeavoring to get film censorship for some time past, is also due for early release, and should prove highly popular.

The Daylight-Saving period finishes for this season during the last week of March, and picture showmen will be much relieved. It has undoubtedly done them an enormous amount of harm, attendances being hardly sufficient to pay the film rental in many instances.

It is considered doubtful that the scheme will come into use next year, as the public are much against it, and a motion for the repeal of the bill has been brought up in the House of Representatives.

Argentina Imports of Our Pictures Growing

American Productions May Be Seen in Nearly All Theaters —Films Rented from Firms Which Buy Outright from Manufacturer.

AT THE close of October, 1916, there were in Buenos Aires 130 motion picture theaters, of which 117 were in daily operation during that month, according to Consul General W. Henry Robertson, stationed in that city. They gave a total of 6,000 performances to more than 1,500,000 spectators, which is slightly below the monthly average for the year. Besides these, nearly every inland city has one or more picture shows.

The average seating capacity here is from 150 to 200, although there are several larger houses seating 500 and even more. The ordinary shows last three hours and are divided into sections of one hour each. Tickets may be purchased for the entire program or for one or two sections only.

Although American films have always been very popular here, they had considerable competition from the European makes, especially French, prior to the European war. Since then the use of European pictures has declined and their place has been taken by American products, so that the imports for 1915 and 1916 include an even greater proportion of American pictures than those of previous years. Today films from the United States may be seen every night in nearly all the theaters here.

Motion pictures are usually supplied to the theaters through contracts by importing and distributing houses in Buenos Aires. The majority of these houses purchase films outright from the manufacturer, maintaining an agreement with the latter for exclusive business. These concerns often handle a number of different makes. It is customary for them to rent the films to the theaters, often supplying the requirements for each evening's entire program. Other theaters, working on an independent basis, receive their films from several distributors.

One large importer here owns half a dozen theaters in Buenos Aires, and leases as many more, thereby exclusively supplying his houses with the films that he handles. The rental price varies in accordance with the character of the picture, the order of precedence in exhibiting, and the number of exhibitions.

During the past two years several films with Argentine historical incidents, customs of the rural folk, or events of current interest as their subjects have been produced here. The manufacture of films in Argentina, however, is not a settled industry.

If American exporters desire to establish commercial relations with this district apart from connections with supply houses, it would be necessary to establish a rental depot here, carrying a heavy general stock of films, as delivery on mail order can not be counted on in less than ten weeks, and business in this way would be unsatisfactory.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Udells.

DAVE UDELL takes the floor to talk about suiting the type to the type of picture and other things. Generally you get two Udell advertisements at a time, but here are a lot to illustrate his material, and they are worth while keeping and studying. Mr. Udell admits that we have often thought that he used to be a printer's devil. It did not seem to us that he got his knowledge of type from the theater. He says:

"Printers are O. K. if you handle them O. K., but there's the rub. A printer will either try and give you too much display or else none at all. Since A. D. 1917 I have given the printer a complete layout, naming the styles and sizes of type, borders, etc., I want used in all my advertising matter. In a small town all they have is a little Caslon and a few old worn out families which needed a shave long before Cheltenham became famous. The office here, however, has plenty of Cloister! But if you ever catch me running Cloister or any other ecclesiastical faces in my stuff telegraph me at once C. O. D. Nevertheless, Caslon is all right. It is a pretty face and the family has enough variety to make a wide range from light medium to bold condensed.

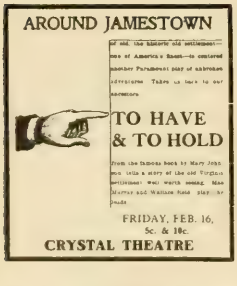
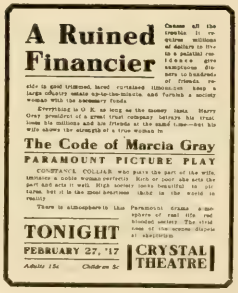
"You will notice in lot of my ads that I use Caslon profusely for display, the main reason being that I cannot secure anything else except Caslon. They have some fairly good Post and Bradley, which I also use extensively; howbeit, the small town exhibitor who is trying to be progressive in the display line will find himself handicapped on every side.





"The inclosed layout on 'Ben Blair' is a sample of my instructions to the printer. The only thing I don't do is set the ad for him. I even measure the space for body type so that he will not mistake even a pica and run out too far in the margin. By the way, a margin is as big an asset to an advertisement as the type itself. It gives distinction to the letters if handled correctly. Ben Blair is a strong bold man and the film play 'Ben Blair,' is a heavy drama. Therefore, it is only harmonious to use strong, heavy display type. I selected Post. Different type should be used for different plays. For 'To Have and to Hold' I used a lighter face because the play is taken from past history and is of a light nature. Caslon and Jenson were my choice, but I would have used Bulfinch to better advantage. The index finger adds to the effect, pointing to a clipping from 'Ye Olden Time' around Jamestown. It

Nice Comedy
We find that most people want to laugh nowadays. There is so much destruction followed by ruthless tragedies now-a-days that people the world over are looking for a comedy and reality gets the preference in choosing for a diversion. The saying goes that we all have our standing agents. Some people seem luckier than others, though, in being protected from the evils and hardships of the world. Our duchess here in "The Shielding Shadow" is protected by a mysterious stranger who always shows up just in time. It seems that this artful way purposely created to appease the amusement appetites of that class of people not wishing to be overstimulated with amusement. This has the desired effect. The other pictures like Henri-Pathe Pictorial and the cartoon comedies add variety and wholesome entertainment to any program.

distinctive individuality. There is nothing distinguished looking about most of the theatrical claptrap we see every day. I am not hypersensitive nor a crank on advertising, but the sooner the present system is isolated with censorship and thrown into a bottomless pit the more hopeful will be the present situation.

Serious mistakes can be made by writing ads hastily. I heartily advise all exhibitors, large or small, to make ad-writing joint partner to their other duties and not condemn a beautiful theater by putting gaudy borders and bold faces, wrong screen cuts, etc., in the papers and programs. To prove my point why does Henry Ford, American Tobacco Co., Marshall Field & Co., and thousands of others spend millions of dollars annually in circulating beautiful, rich and nicely displayed advertising matter if it doesn't pay? Is the theatrical business so stupendous a money maker that it can afford to disgust even a tin-horn printer with its sloppy style of attracting attention? Time, study and judgment should be used in laying out programs, etc., as much time as in arranging the music. I have spent as many as three hours on a little 2 by 6 ad. Does it pay? Demand a proof. Don't let the printer misspell words and turn cuts topsy turvy. What kind of yokels will the public consider the exhibitors that spell Pickford, Pitchfork, and Theda Bara, The Bare?

The word, "BEST" and many other wornout superlatives ought to be canned and soldered. "Quality," although good, is seen too frequently. The words, commendable, superior, or the phrase, excellence in pictures, character, nature, etc., may be used instead. The dictionary is full of synonyms suitable for spicy advertising of the right sort. Moving pictures are not as a whole "beautiful." Some exhibitors tie "beautiful" on the end of everything. "Beautiful" admits of no defects. A scene may be beautiful, but for the love of himmel not half of the powdered and painted stars are. Elegant, fair, lovely, handsome, pretty, fine and the like can be used oftener at present.

There are people in this world who don't know the difference between a quoin and a quad, neither do they know up. from l. c., which is quite necessary to know. I was a printer's devil once and a devil of a printer; I wouldn't part with the little I learned while feedin' the press and cleanin' the type. It serves its purpose better now than I little dreamed of then.

Another thing I have let loose of is the meaningless heading. What does it profit the exhibitor to talk about something which does in no way relate to the subject he is advertising? Large 72-point "if's" "ands," "thes," "becauses" for headings, like I formerly worshipped, don't sell film. It didn't bring anyone to my theaters, so I stopped it and commenced telling the people the real dope, not imaginary stuff.

In answer to your questions on "Preparedness" of the March 24th issue will offer the following: Satisfactory results cannot be secured in a house of small capacity by running a five-reel feature and additional single reels. Our house is always packed after the fifth reel and to add a longer show would be to send people home. To break the monotony we always try and secure features with plenty of comedy in them, for example Mary Pickford in "The Eternal Grind," John Emerson in "The Flying Torpedo." Serious dramas like the above are great entertainments with a little comedy. To add more comedy to the above would be folly. So it is not extremely difficult to find the right plays by reading the criticisms in the "Moving Picture World." People are undoubtedly growing weary of the slap-hand piano and trap-drummer. It can be abolished easier in a small theater than in a large one by using an Edison talking machine or any other good make with an educated drummer for accompaniment. We are possibly the only people in the world utilizing this opportunity, nevertheless our patrons are hearing the world's latest orchestra selections synchronized with the most noted picture plays, and it takes an expert to tell whether it's an Edison or a real orchestra. The reason we use a drummer is because the drums do not recreate well in a talking machine, but all other tones do. This is a simple and inexpensive way of abolishing the piano and a greater variety of music can be played on the Edison: instrumental, vocal, effects and all. We have been using the Edison for a month with increasing results, patron after patron giving unsolicited praise to our music. This would not be practicable in a large theater, however, as the delicate tones could not fill such large auditorium.

Of course features grow monotonous, day after day. As you say, the majority like to come any old time without missing half the show and seeing a picture wrong side out. We will be glad when the mixed program comes back, but for the present we have three nights a week for variety programs. We always give a mixed program on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays. So we give a feature family and the program family all a chance to enjoy themselves at our show and the average person does not attend more than three a week, so we are striking a happy medium with our present policy. The saying goes anyway that "There's always a good show at the Crystal or Majestic." In advertising, generally we advertise both star and play, with the most copy about the play. The star is merely an additional teaser on the end of most of our ads.

Most exhibitors use either all body matter or all display. One is as tiresome as the other. Lots of nice crisp argument in body with a few lines of display will attract more attention. I haven't seen many theater advertisements with enough argument. They depend too much on cuts and borders. Cuts and borders have only a little effect in convincing the public that you have a good show. Henry Ford, Willys Overland, Marshall Field & Co. never became rich by surrounding a few cuts with a heavy, gaudy border and telling the public to buy their wares. These and all famous advertisers that are making real money out of advertising argue with the public. They print long, well displayed articles, ads., etc., concerning the subjects advertised.

The small town is all right. In fact it's a mighty big place for a small man. I like a small town. My ambition is to get bigger some day, but for the present I am satisfied with the town, but not myself. The time was when I sneered at myself for being a small-town theater manager. I thought I was too big for my job, but after looking my job over carefully I found to my sorrow that the job was too big for me. Since then I have been striving to get as big as my town. When I do there'll be plentyo f room to grow larger on the outside.

You speak of mailing lists. The people we want in our theaters are those who are living, not the dead ones. That sounds funny, but it's true. The dead ones are those who will not and positively refuse to attend picture theaters. So why waste good money in trying to coax them to come? The most fruitful way of securing a mailing list is to advertise a limited number of star photographs to be given away to all who send for same by giving their name and address. The addresses of those who are really interested and are possible customers are thusly obtained with very little trouble.

Ralph Ruffner is the livest wire in the business, but I would like to drop a case of Gothic on his head just to disgust him with a type not suited to the cause. It's the only thing I have against Ralph and I wish you would please tell him that his ads would be in the 100 per cent. rank if he used Century, Caslon, Post or John Hancock, etc., and to set his display line in u. c. and l. c. The reason, and only reason, I offer criticism here is because Ralph's work is so darn good I would like to see him put the finishing touches on. You can't do it with Gothic.

A large advertisement doesn't necessarily mean that the theater using it is going to sell more film than the one using a smaller space. A well displayed ad, cleverly written, if only 2 col. by 6, will attract more attention than a poorly displayed full page ad. The majority of quarter, half and full page theater ads I have seen are not advertisements. They are crimes committed against the moving picture and advertising profession.

Keep It Going.

Jimquin, of L. A., who has been up in the Northwest lately, tells of a Seattle house that sends the orchestra home before the last show and shuts down right in the middle of a five-reel feature. Apparently the show had run behind the schedule and when closing time came they shut down with the story half done. That would be bad enough in "the sticks," but this is a big house in a city. No wonder people get tired of picture theaters and the way they are run. And he bubbles over about the Lyric, in the same town. He writes down our own idea of a real house when he says: "There is no fuss to make you feel uncomfortably taken care of, neither is there any kow-towing as though your admission fee were a charity instead of for value expected and received." It is possible to overdo the courtesy and become insincere. One of the big Broadway houses is completely spoiled by the see-how-nice-we-are-to-you air. It is as hurtful as incivility in the long run.

No Plagiarism.

L. F. Eick, of the Fenray, Martins Ferry, Ohio, writes in part:

> Enclosed find the first number of our weekly house organ. As you will note, we have plagiarized somewhat from your "Picture Theater Advertising." We are new at this form of advertising; in fact, we are practically new at the picture business, having been connected with it for but a little over a year. As our foreign advertising grows we expect to make our house organ grow also, eventually having an edition of sixteen or twenty pages. We cannot afford to make it any larger and pay it out of our own pockets.

In the first place, there is no plagiarism from P. T. A. It was compiled for the guidance and use of those who run picture theaters, and the best compliment we can receive is to see the stuff used. That is what it is there for. The issue to hand is eight pages, the page six by nine inches, good wood stock, well printed. The front page title drops a little low to give space for the address, the page carrying the printed postoffice permit for mailing in bulk, unstamped, after the manner of the Rowland and Clark theaters. The heading is well drawn (other than that the title is so badly sunk into the design that it scarcely shows), but it is nearly half an inch too narrow to fit the page. It would be well to have a new cut made, the outside edges of which will be flush with the type page. Before doing this the name of the house should be done over to give a solid black letter instead of one in outline as shown here. Then, if still desired, the lettering The Fenray Index should be done with a letter more easily read, not as severe as the Gothic faces and yet something not requiring study. The article can be dropped.

The second is the editorial page, with a full column of house news, well laid out. Every detail of information useful to the patron is given clearly and in full. The second column is devoted to an article on the pictures by F. X. Bushman. In the six pages following two-thirds of the space is laid off to the foreign advertising, with one day to a page, but for some reason the Thursday announcement falls upon the back page instead of in its regular position. This may be because of the fact that Thursday is "de luxe day," but even at that, it is better to have the days appear in their regular order, even though one mid-week day may offer the strongest bill. Most of the space given the foreign advertiser is taken up and should show a profit on the cost of publication, even allowing for the present high prices. If this profit does not show, the inch prices are too low. The job composition is not badly done, but the program spaces are too full of type. More display type should be used, and smaller sizes employed to permit some spacing between the lines and not the solid job the printer has turned out. Unless he is watched the printer is apt to pick faces that will just fill, but sometimes a white spacing is better than a larger letter. The house announcements are written to go into the spaces properly. It is the typesetting that is at fault. In one instance a comedy, set in black face, stands out above the feature, though the latter takes three-fourths of the space. The added features should never be permitted to overshadow, even seemingly, the main attraction. It would be well to rearrange the layout to get that back page for some gossip of the house and players and about a third underline. The advertiser, looking at this sheet, is apt to argue that there is not enough text to carry the reader along. It may be a poor argument, but it will be used. It might be a good plan, as an alternative, to use one advertising space on each page for notes, set not less than a good six point.

When added advertising permits the size to be increased, and it rises to sixteen pages, the extra space should be divided about evenly between the advertiser and the reader, either alternate columns or alternate pages of text and advertising. It will scarcly pay to go above sixteen pages.

Taken by and large this is a good first issue, but the printer should be argued with.

Took Advice.

Mr. Upstill now dates his days on his neat program for Long Pine, Neb. It is about all he needed, and we are glad he followed our advice. But the dates would look better in a smaller type—about a ten point bold. One evening lately the show was laid off to give room for a wrestling match between local contestants. Ladies were admitted free. St. Patrick's week he printed in green ink.

A Good Form Letter.

R. E. Falkinburg, of the Majestic, Lexington, Neb., sends in a very good form letter which was mailed to all members of ladies' societies, lodge members and others who might be supposed to be interested. It runs:

> Believing you are interested in that which has the welfare of the community at heart, and realizing the educational and cultural influence motion pictures have upon the young folks, we beg to call your attention to the new program of picture plays we will start on next Thursday and Friday, March the First and Second.
> Pictures having an especial appeal to young folks, yet thoroughly enjoyed by the older ones, thru their entertaining qualities.
> Baby Marie Osborne, 4 year old star, appears as "Little Mary Sunshine." It is a beautiful and absorbing picture that parents may take their children without the least fear of anything that might injure young minds, while the children may take their parents in the certainty of their not being "bored."
> In the elimination of deep thoughted problem plays on those days most attended by young people, and by the showing of such pictures as "Little Mary Sunshine," thru which we see life in rare and beautiful tints, we hope to have your approval and suggestions in making this theater of the greatest possible service to the neighborhood.
> We trust you can attend one of the above days, and then tell us personally of your approval or criticism of this new kind of picture plays.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

Three other scripts have neither title nor author's name by which they may be identified and probably these three authors will be the first to tell all their friends how Paramount stole their idea and never sent it back. At that, we feel encouraged at the small size of the list compared to the number of submissions. There used to be a far greater percentage of careless writers.

Why They Failed.

Some time since the Pictorial Review offered a prize for the best story written by a college student. In the last issue announcement is made that none of the stories has been found to contain sufficient merit to warrant publication. The editor adds that in most instances the would-be authors endeavored to handle themes with which they, in their inexperience, were unfamiliar.

There is a lesson here for photoplay writers. Don't write about the things you have to guess at. Write of the things you know and yet which are not so close to you that you fail to see their interesting points. The chances are that if this bunch of college writers had written stories of their college life they would have failed at that, for they would have written matter of factly. College life was too close to them to be interesting to themselves, and so they would not have made it interesting to others. On the other hand deep themes were too much for them, and they could not handle them with the properly skillful grasp of the subject. In between lay thousands of stories that the trained writer could see, but which did not appeal to the novices because they saw them only as they were and not as they might have been made to appear.

Kalem Wants Ham Comedies.

Kalem wants comedies in two parts for Ham and Bud, which will be good news to those who really can write. But note that they must be Ham and Bud stories, written to fit the personalities of these comedians, and it is useless to turn in stuff that was written with no particular players in mind. Mr. Lang realizes that two-reel comedies are largely comedy melodrama in the second part if the speed is to be maintained, but that does not mean he wants a lot of silly business. He writes:

> We first require a plot. But the plot should be well connected and centered around a few characters, featuring Ham and Bud. It will be useless for anyone to send me a story which has not been written around Ham and Bud. They are such distinct characters and have so many characteristics peculiar to them that this must be kept in mind. We can put over trick stuff, but do not want to consume a lot of time with it, and it must end up with a bang.

It is not going to be easy to write that sort of stuff, but it is going to be a splendid chance for some few writers, and they will get all the chance in the world to get their ideas over, for the full continuity should accompany the synopsis. This may not and probably will not be followed, but it will permit writers to get over their ideas in the fullest and most satisfactory fashion.

And bear in mind that Mr. Lang wants stories with stunts and not merely the stunts alone. The plot must carry and be excuse for the trick work, and the trick work, when used, must be good enough to pay for the time and trouble consumed in getting the effects. Scripts should be sent Kalem at Glendale, California, until the new Hollywood studios are completed.

Getting Raw.

The crop of come-ons must be getting low, for the few correspondence schools left are getting increasingly raw in their work. One of the Chicago "colleges" writes: "The market is open for your work—yes, open and stretching out eager hands to you. The harvest is ripe and the laborers few." We wonder if that chap has tried to sell a script in the past eighteen months. If he has he is a naughty, naughty fibber, not to say what Roosevelt said. And later he tells the fascinated reader that unless they study with him their efforts will be in vain. The Postoffice Inspectors will be able to gather these chaps in yet.

Getting Ideas.

There are almost as many methods of work as there are writers. One author, when inspiration fails, sits down and imagines the most grotesque and fantastic travesties he can call to mind. Then when he gets what seems to be a good lead, he takes out the nonsense and often finds himself in the possession of an unusual idea. He cannot deliberately think up the oddity as a drama thought, but by burlesqueing he catches his imagination off guard and arrives at originality.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Has Helped Him Out.

M. D. Gant, Brandon, Man., sends $8.40 for a Handbook, both sets of questions, and renewal of subscription to the Moving Picture World—which is a pretty good financial stunt for an operator to pull off all at one clatter. Brother Gant says:

> I have the second edition of the Handbook, and can truthfully say it has helped me out many a tight corner. Am running a Motiograph 1916 model machine. The fault I find with them is the round magazine. Its inside measurement is 14⅝ inches, whereas the reel diameter is 14 inches. How, therefore, are we expected to remove a full reel, when there is no way of getting your fingers in to get hold of it? I partly overcome this trouble by riveting a small loop on two reels near the center and inserting a ring in the loop. These reels I use in the lower magazine.
> Am using National carbons, but I don't find those we are now receiving equal to the National carbons purchased in 1915. We bought one thousand at that time, and they were excellent in every way. We bought another thousand last October, and must say they are not up to the former standard. The particular trouble we find is that the core will sometimes burn out for one-quarter of an inch, and of course that means a perfectly lovely time for the operator. We also got one hundred of the Silver Tip. They give a nice, uniform light, and no trouble, except that they burn too fast, and there is some tendency of the copper to pit the condenser.
> I particularly would like to see another set of questions only have them on a lower level than the past high brow stuff. It's all right, but oh my! it's rather disheartening to the beginner. Most of the "light ray dope" would make a graduate optician cross-eyed, and if that is true what about the poor M. P. O.? This is only a suggestion, however, and possibly it is selfish. Though I have been on the job five years, I sometimes feel I know less than I did in the firts place, but that is because the science of projection is advancing so rapidly.
> I would like to have your autograph in the Handbook, if it is not asking too much. In closing, I wish you prosperity, and all that goes with it. Keep up the good work and a crown of stars will be yours.

Well, Brother Gant, at the present price of stars I don't believe I could afford one. Anyhow I'm a puffectly respectable married man.

As to the Motiograph, why the matter is respectfully referred to them for attention. There have been a number of complaints on this particular thing, and, frankly, I don't know whether it has yet been remedied or not. There should be room between the edge of the reel and the magazine for the operator to poke his digit in and get hold of the reel.

With regard to the National carbons, why I can tell you that all carbon manufacturers have their troubles. It is not always possible to get uniformly excellent materials; also, due to the war conditions, American carbon manufacturers have been tremendously rushed. I don't know that this phase of the matter has anything to do with your trouble, but anyhow you might, and very likely did, just happen to get hold of a lot of carbons not quite up to standard. I would suggest that you take the matter up with the National people, whom I feel sure will make good on any goods which do not prove to be quite right. Just address the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, marking the letter "Attention Sales Department Projection Carbons."

I do not think it would be practicable to start another set of questions at this time. In the first place I am going away for four months, and in the second place I think I have already asked questions covering almost every phase of the projection field. POSSIBLY AFTER I RETURN IT MAY BE DEEMED ADVISABLE TO REPRINT THE OLD SERIES. It is fully three years since it was started, and many new men have entered the field since that time; also very likely many of the present men who did not interest themselves in the current questions would take the matter up if they were re-asked. I would like to have an expression of ideas of operators on that particular proposition.

You placed your request for autographed copy of Handbood pretty near down the end of the letter, and I doubt if the man who sends the books out saw it. Anyhow when I got the letter the book had gone. I keep some autographed copies at the office so that such requests can be complied with, therefore if he saw your request you won; if not, well—there you are.

No. 321 Holds Election.

The I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. O. No. 321, of Tampa, Florida, held their annual election on March 25th, with the following result:

President, A. Crespo; vice-president, W. Paleveda; secretary and treasurer, M. Nosti; business agent, E. G. Kemp. H. Wegman, S. Williams and E. G. Kemp, trustees; M. Nosti, W. Paleveda and A. Crespo, examining board: W. Sullivan, Guide; Ben Lance, Guardian, and M. Nosti, press reporter.

The Local wishes the editor of this department a dandy and successful trip. Thanks, boys.

Address Wanted.

While in Louisville, Ky., I was handed a film signaling device designed to give the operator a change over warning, which I agreed to describe in the department. I made careful note of the name and address of the inventor of this device, but it was done at three o'clock in the morning, when I was very weary and my brain very nearly resembled a ball of yarn. When I looked for the address a day or two afterward, there was nothing doing.

Will the inventor kindly forward name and address to me in care of The Moving Picture World, and forgive the delay which has been caused by my carelessness.

Interesting.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, is here with another chart which is decidedly interesting. He says:

> With reference to your query "Where Are We at?" February 10 issue, am enclosing chart of what might be termed a proposed standard condenser system.
> It looks rather complicated, but is really quite simple, once understood. It is merely a diagramic representation of the possibilities of a single pair of condensing lenses. I believe we may consider the amperage in use in fully ninety per cent of cases as being somewhere between 35 and 65. If this is true, the distance between aperture and center of condenser need not exceed 24 inches. You will notice the distance between the condenser and crater is automatically taken care of by moving the lamphouse to where the right diameter of spot is had (Yes, but what about Mr. Ghost?—Ed.) the distance varying from 3 inches with 35 amperes to 3.6 inches with 65 amperes, which is better than a fixed position for all amperages.

Am not saying a word. Will our friends try this out and report? It is very easy to understand the chart. Put in a 6½ meniscus and a 9½ bi-convex lens, with their convex surfaces separated exactly ½ inch. Now if you are using 95 amperes D.C. you will see by reference to the perpendicular line over "45 in amperes D. C." and the "to aperture" horizontal scale, that you will require about 20½ inches between the center of the condenser combination and the film to get a 1¾-inch spot, and that your arc will be 3.2 inches from the meniscus side of the meniscus lens, and five inches from the center of the condenser combination. In fact, according to Brother Griffiths' plan it is only necessary to install a 6½-inch meniscus and a 9½-inch bi-convex, with a half-inch separation, and set the lamphouse at a point where the spot measures 1¾ inches in diameter, and the rest is automatically taken care of. Fine! But how about light loss between the lenses and ghost? That's what I want to discover.

Will Bet His Shirt.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says:

> Gee, there is quite a commotion in Omaha over getting a good picture with 18 amperes D. C., yet it is not a remarkable performance, when conditions are considered. Moreover they could improve matters materially by matching up their optical system according to the tables. The Marlux lens is an unknown quantity. I have no idea as to its diameter. Also, if the position of the crater be correctly stated, the focal length of the condensing lenses is likewise an unknown quantity, because they certainly are not the focal length stated; I will bet my shirt on that. And now with reference to conditions which make it possible to project a fairly well illuminated 16 foot picture with 18 amperes of current. First: A bundle of rays reaching a semi-reflecting screen are reflected back and dispersed at about an angle of 50 degrees, but a bundle of rays reaching a plain white painted screen will reflect back and disperse at an angle of about 180 degrees. In this connection be it noted, however, that a matte surface increases the angle at which the rays are dispersed when using a semi-reflecting screen. It then follows that if a person is viewing the semi-reflecting screen within an angle of 25 degrees of the center line of the system the screen will appear three times as bright as when viewing the plain painted screen, because there is approximately three times the density of rays contained in the smaller angle. Now, I do not mean by this that there are no rays outside the smaller angle, but that tests show that within the smaller angle the candle power is three times greater than outside it; also when the semi-reflecting screen is viewed from a wide angle it is not so bright as the plain white surface.
> (I would like to have an answer to this particular statement from Brother Rembusch of the city of Shelbyville, state of Indiana, if convenient.—Ed.)
> Now in the particular house in question the greatest distance a person can get from the center line is 15 feet, so that there are only a few seats, located at the extreme front end, which are outside the maximum zone of reflection, which means that for all the rest of the house the illumination would have approximately the same brilliancy that 54 amperes D. C. would give if the screen were a painted one. Eighteen amperes D. C. show by tests to be equal to 4.250 C. P., whereas 54 amperes A. C. is only equal to 4.250 C. P., and there are many operators putting up a fair picture with 40 and 60 amperes A. C.

I see you advise them to try results with a 1½ inch spot and with a 1¾ inch spot, but they should only enlarge the spot by changing the distance between condensers and aperture, since otherwise they would not get the right condition at the aperture.

All of which I would prefer to leave to the tender mercy of the screen men, particularly Brother Rembusch, with the remark that I am not quite certain whether Griffiths means crater brilliancy or something else. I would, however, remark that I do not think Griffiths' statements would apply to all types of semi-reflective screens, but the fact remains that it is quite within the range of possibility to construct a screen which will reflect a very large percentage of the light back in a narrow angle, and this is the screen which is suitable for narrow houses. The Satin Finish Mirror screen is a fine example of this type.

Wherein Are They Wrong?

D. E. Wells, Mineapolis, Kan., says:

Please examine the enclosed measurements and tell me wherein they are wrong, or may be improved. I get a good, bright picture with 45 amperes A. C., using a Gold King screen, but have a flicker which I am not able to wholly exterminate. Have studied the Handbook carefully, but still my picture is not all I would like it to be. Sometimes I have my shutter pretty good when the show starts, but after two or three reels flicker develops. At first I thought this was due to loose connections on shutter flanges, but found it was not. What can you suggest? I have operated three years, and served one year under an operator, who, although no fine artist, taught me the first steps. Really, though, my advent as an operator dates just about one year ago when I got my first peep at our department. Your Handbook is my school, as I have no chance to visit larger places to get help. I have a new Power's Six A motor driven projector, current 110 volts, 60 cycle A. C., pulling 45 amperes through a Bell-Howell compensator. Use ⅝ inch cored carbons with direct current. Two 7½ inch condensers with 20 inches between apex of the front one and the film. Objective is a Gundlach-Manhattan 6½ inch E. F.; 1 13/32 effective diameter; 5 7/32 inch back focus. Distance of projection 76 feet; size of picture 11 feet 4 inches; two blade shutter and a Gold King screen.

Well, Brother Wells, your carbon size and the set is O. K., because you have A. C. at the arc if you are using a Bell-Howell compensator. I would suggest that you try the following: Two 6½ inch condensers, with 20 inches from condenser to aperture, as at present. This should bring your arc up close to the condenser, in fact about 3 inches away, and it is a question whether you can get it that close and still retain sufficient lamp angle for best results. I am not going to guarantee results. Also the spot may not be a very picturesque affair, but that is the way the table lines up for that particular proposition, and I would like to have your report of it. Don't get scared because it don't look right at the spot, and don't expect to get just what you want the first minute you try it. You will, I think, be very much on the back focus, and you must make the white spot in the center of the blue haze cover the aperture. Try it out and let us see what happens; form your judgment entirely by screen results. If it does not work to suit you, you won't be out very much, and, on the other hand, it may help you considerably.

As to the flicker, I am inclined to believe that when you don't get a flicker at the start (but do later on) it is because your arc does not develop its maximum brilliancy at first. The brighter the light the greater the tendency to flicker, you know, and you must expect some flicker with a two-wing shutter when running films which require a normal speed of sixty. As a matter of fact, however, some of the producing companies have increased their camera speed, and this means increased projector speed, which is good so far as flicker is concerned, but is mighty hard on projection machines and the film themselves. You are not confusing flicker with travel ghost, are you? Your reference to loose shutter sounds like it.

A Genuine Surprise.

The editor is in receipt of what proports to be a semi-official communication from Local Union 110, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., of Chicago, in which some extremely gratifying information is set forth. The correspondent tells me that he has been requested, presumably by the Local, to find out if I would be willing to be friends with 110. The letter sets forth the fact that there has been a complete revolution in the affairs of the union, and that the leadership to which I have objected has been entirely eliminated.

The correspondent also asks me, on behalf of 110, to visit the Local the first time I am within reaching distance of Chicago. He also admits that my rather caustic criticism on the conduct of the affairs of 110 during the past years has been "perhaps justified." Replying to this brother, and the other brothers of 110, I want to say that nothing will or could give me greater pleasure than to be on friendly terms with the Chicago men. The only thing I have objected to has been the rough-neck type of leadership. That is something I very thoroughly don't believe in, it is something which has, in my opinion, held the Chicago Local Union back, and prevented its taking its rightful place among the high class organizations of the country. It has been a matter of very deep regret to me that I have been compelled to sharply criticize the Chicago men, and I sincerely hope that, with the element referred to eliminated, there will be no further cause for anything of that kind.

I have alway felt that I had many friends among the membership of Local 110, and I trust that from this time forward I shall be able to co-operate with the Local in every possible way, because Chicago was where I did most of my operating, and many of the old time Chicago operators were my friends in the old days, and I am sure are still.

So gentlemen and brothers, we will bury the hatchet, sod the grave over, and plant at its head some kind of a shrub which means exactly the opposite of for-get-me-not.

Chicago will lie at the very last end of the present 19,000 mile trip, and, if it is agreeable, I will be glad to lecture before the members of Chicago Local Union 110 when I reach that city, and I think, gentlemen, that after it is all over, and I have departed, you will agree that Richardson is perhaps right upon at least a good many points.

My compliments to Local Union 110.. The services of the Projecting Department and the editor are at your command at any time or in any way you see fit to use them and for anything which is for the best interest of the profession of projecting. I understand from aforesaid letter that the dual organization of operators which Local 110 has been fighting is practically a thing of the past. Let us hope that by the time this is in type it will have been completely and forever buried.

What Do You See?

What do you see, Mr. Operator, when you look into a mirror. Do you find a wide-awake face staring back, with keen eyes which look as though they might be the windows of a real soul? Or is the face unintelligent, and does the eye lack lustre? Does the face you look upon belong to a man who loves himself because he is proud of his accomplishments in the serious matters of life, or who loves himself because of his prowess with the ladies, or his ability to "lick 'em up" at the bar, or his skill at the pool table? Does the man you see in the mirror spend fifteen minutes selecting a tie to match his socks each day, and fifteen minutes every two years studying light action through lenses? Does the mirror man say to his brother operator, when asked if he "saw that article in the Projection Department about 'Relation of Speed of Intermittent to Shutter Blade Width' last week?" "Naw! I should worry about dat dope! I wonder if my skirt'll be at the show tonight?" Or does he say: "Yes," and enter upon an intelligent discussion of the matter? You being in position to analyze the mirror man, does the analysis yield results which impress you, or do you see places where your friend of the looking glass might be changed with benefit to all concerned?

Examine him well, Mr. Operator. He is an interesting subject, is this man you see in the mirror, and if your scrutiny be an earnest and honest one it may prove mutually beneficial to you and the Man Behind the Glass.

Intermittent Speed.

J. H. Bennifield, Toronto, Canada, propounds the following:

Is it a fact that all-star and geneva movements have the same speed? If not, what governs the ratio of movement, and what is the limit?

No, all intermittent movements of the type named do not have the same ratio of speed. The speed of the star may be increased by increasing the diameter of the circle in which the cam-pin moves. The possible practical increase is, however, strictly limited, as increasing the diameter named, if carried to any considerable length beyond the standard adopted by manufacturers, sets up serious trouble in other directions. I understand, however, that it is practical to make the geneva movement considerably faster than some of the movements now being put out.

The Akeley Camera.

CARL E. AKELEY, of the American Museum of Natural History, has invented a motion picture camera of a distinctly new type, which bids fair to supersede any of the models now on the market. Not only is the camera a marvel of ingenuity and a distinct departure from the conventional designs to be had at present, but it is ready to launch at the psychological moment, when it is almost impossible to obtain any sort of cinematograph cameras.

Until the present European upheaval the manufacture of cinematograph cameras was practically a foreign monopoly. Many hundreds of cine cameras of European make have been sold in this country and met with but little competition in the American market, and the few American manufacturers would cope only in a limited way with the cheaper skilled labor on the other side. A cine camera is not a product that admits of being turned out by the many thousands like sewing machines and typewriters; the demand is so limited that each one must be entirely constructed by hand labor.

The unprecedented growth of the motion picture industry has caused a great increase in the demand for these instruments that the American manufacturers have been unable to fill.

A motion picture camera is a wonderful instrument of precision that has to repeat a cycle of operations as complicated as that of the piston cycle in a gas engine, sixteen times per second, with an unvarying accuracy of less than 1/1000 part of an inch and to continue this speed and accuracy for an indefinite period.

Modern requirements in the cinematographic art have made demands upon the original design of the motion camera that were undreamed of a few short years ago, and the quality of photography that once passed muster no longer satisfies the insatiable demand for novelty and bizarre effects.

Up to the present time there have been few radical changes in the design of cine cameras. True, there have been many improvements upon the original model, and each improvement marked the previous model as incomplete, and in many cases, obsolete. It remained for Mr. Akeley, however, to bring forward a new and distinct type of motion film camera—a camera so radically different and so obviously correct that upon first observation the most natural question arises, "Why has not one ever thought of this before?"

The Akeley camera was planned and designed primarily as a naturalist's camera, for from the inventor's wide experience in the African jungle he has come to know exactly what sort of a photographer's equipment is essential in the picture taking of wild beasts in their native haunts. The inventor's idea, however, did not rest there. So complete in design is the Akeley camera that it at once takes its place among the foremost rank of professional cameras, not only for field or out-of-doors work, but for studio work as well.

The most important of the distinctive features of this camera is the fact that it can be ready for use instantly. The camera itself is a part of the panoram and tilting head operated by guidance of the hand, rather than by cranking. Panoraming and tilting are made possible by a geared arrangement controlled by two governor systems in the base, which permit the camera to swivel in any direction. For instantaneous turning these gears may be thrown out of mesh, allowing the camera to assume any position at once.

The camera is suspended from the center of the top by a universal joint and swings free at the base rotably mounted on ball bearings in a steel ring fitting into a cup shaped panoram. By raising a lever at the top the camera is swung free, when the spring is released, the camera assuming a perfectly level position regardless of the angle of the panoram. This is possible because of the gimbal joint at the top, being directly in the center of the axis of the camera.

The focusing device is direct and may be viewed through the film while the picture is being taken. The operator looks through a tube at the back of the camera. This tube or eye piece is so fitted to the eye that no light can come from the back while the picture is being photographed.

By pressing a small lever on the top of the camera, a flap is cut through the film by a curved knife, which forces the cut flap forward and downward, and automatically throws a ground glass into exactly the same position occupied by the film.

The diaphragm and focusing are controlled by two levers at the rear of the camera connected to the diaphragm and lens in the front by two bands running in grooved slots around the underside of the camera, and can be operated while the operator is looking through the focusing tube; thus the focus may be changed instantly to suit varying conditions.

The operation of the camera is noiseless; this feature appeals particularly to the naturalist, who knows from experience that the slightest noise will scare away any wild animal within many yards of the camera.

The crank handle for stop motion pictures is the same as the regular handle, and by simply turning a sleeve on the hub of the driving crank the one picture per turn is produced.

The aluminum magazines are made to take the original Eastman spool without rewinding. The film outlet in the magazine has a width of one-half inch, making scratching or static almost impossible. The film does not touch the outlet in its course from the magazine. The magazine is locked light tight until placed in the camera when it unlocks automatically, opening to the width of one-half inch, opening the camera closes and locks the retort again, so that there is no danger of light fog even in the strongest light.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

THE design of this department is to diffuse among musicians and exhibitors correct information on all important subjects pertaining to music for the film, to improve the quality of playing and to raise the standard of music in motion picture theaters.

Any question concerning music; suitable instrumentation; questions relating to the organ and mechanical players; in fact, any queries, criticisms or suggestions dealing with the musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered through this department.

Improvising (Part II).

By Clarence E. Sinn.

IN OUR last article (April 21, page 426) something was said about modulating. Now, while this is a study apart from composition or improvisation, it will be found convenient by the picture-music improvisor to memorize the examples we are here offering as a short and agreeable means of quickly progressing from any key to a remote key. Keys lying a half tone above or below are remote in that we cannot progress (or change) to them without one or more intervening chords which lead up to and connect the new key with the old. Keys a whole tone above (or below) are also remote in the same sense. Examples 14 and 15 (page 426, April 21) show a means of progressing from any key to the one a half tone above it by only one modulating chord. We first move to the dominant seventh of the new key we have in mind; the rest takes care of itself.

Moving upward a whole tone, we aim for the dominant seventh chord of the key to which we wish to change. See Examples 16 and 17.

From the key of C to that of D is a whole tone. Wishing to modulate immediately from the lower to the higher key, you first think of the dominant seventh of that key.

The dominant chord of D-major (or minor) is the chord of A-major, and is composed of the notes A, C-sharp and E. Adding the note G (which is seven notes above A) we get the chord of the dominant seventh of D. The chord of C already contains two of these notes, viz.: E and G. All we need alter is to raise our key note (C) to

C-sharp, and to add our bass note (A). See first measure in Example 16.

Readers who have not studied harmony would do well to familiarize themselves with the names of the commoner chords and why they are so named. And this will, of course, include something of chord building. Although I gave a few explanatory illustrations of this in my first set of articles last year, I am going to risk repetition. Maybe there are some who don't know but would like to.

A chord in its simple form consists of three notes, viz.: A "fundamental," from which the chord takes its name (this is often called the "tonic"); a note two degrees higher than the fundamental, and another note two degrees higher than the last. For example, the chord of C consists of the fundamental note C, the note E and the note G. But we do not say any note in a chord is "so many degrees higher." We always count the lower note as 1 and reckon upward. Thus, the note C (being our foundation note or "fundamental") is numbered 1; the next degree above (D) is 2; the degree next above (E) is 3. Consequently, we say E is a third above C. Counting on we find G to be a fifth above C. And so we say the chord consists of a "fundamental, its third and its fifth."

Look at Example 18. The first illustration (a) shows a chord of C. Being built on the note C, this note is the foundation or "fundamental." It is also called the "tonic," and the chord is known as "the tonic chord." (In the key of D the tonic chord is the chord of D; in the key of F the tonic chord is F, and so on.)

In the first chord shown in Example 18 (a) we find C (the tonic), E (the third), and G (the fifth).

This, as said before, constitutes the tonic chord, key of C.

In the next measure (b) we find two other chords. These are also built with a fundamental, a third and a fifth. The fundamental note of the second chord is four notes above the tonic. This chord is called the "subdominant." The fundamental of the next chord is five notes above the tonic. The chord is called the "dominant chord." The dominant chord is always built on a note five notes above the tonic (or four notes below; it is the same thing). Adding an F to the chord shown (F is a seventh above G) makes the chord a "dominant seventh." Look at Example 19.

Ex. 19.

The second measure shows the same tonic chord in another position. The third measure (after the double bar) shows the dominant chord of the key of C (G, B and D). The following measure shows the same chord with a note added above. This note is F and is a seventh above G. The chord is therefore called a "dominant seventh." (In Example 19 the added note—the seventh—is indicated by an x.) The dominant seventh resolves naturally to its tonic chord. When you hear this chord you expect the tonic chord to follow it. For this reason I have chosen to make these illustrations of abrupt modulations made through the dominant seventh chord. As said before, it is safe and sure.

It will not be a bad idea for readers unfamiliar with chords and chord building to write the tonic chords in all keys, then—counting upward five notes, beginning with the tonic—find the dominant and write its chord: the seventh can then be added, giving you the dominant seventh chord. One should be familiar with these two chords, at least, in every key. The performer should be able to tell instantly what is the tonic chord of the key he may happen to be playing in, and also its dominant seventh.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Chicago Moving Picture Organists Find Champion.

IT is always wise to hear both sides of a question, so that fairness may govern our judgment. This is especially applicable to the recent criticisms, written by readers of the Chicago News and published in that paper, concerning the organ music furnished in moving picture theaters in Chicago.

Emmett Robert Gardner, a Chicago organist, wrote a letter to the newspaper mentioned (which was published in full) giving the moving picture organist's side of the discussion.

"Allow me to give a few facts concerning the 'movie' organist," writes Mr. Gardner. "His position requires that he furnish a musical accompaniment to the episodes of a story as they are presented to view. He must use an unlimited repertoire and often improvise 'hurrys,' transcribing piano selections and popular numbers, which the public demand. How would a comedy or comedy drama sound with a strict organ number as accompaniment? The player must get the most out of an instrument that has fearfully small limitations. He must be constantly on the job. The music must not cease, but continue from 2 until 11 P. M., with only one hour for supper to break the monotony.

"The organist works seven days a week. Consequently, playing becomes toil, labor. Little is left for art. It is astonishing that there are really good players left at all. Considering the small salaries paid, from which expensive music must be bought, the majority of players are doing excellent work.

"The public can help to better the nation's music, that of the theater, by first trying to acquaint itself with the conditions and requirements of the players."

While Mr. Gardner's letter may be only justice to the moving picture organist, it does not remedy the fact that patrons are giving up moving pictures because of poor music. It is most assuredly the duty of the owner or manager of a moving picture theater to see to it that his business does not drop off because of poor music. If the organ is the offender, drop it and get a piano.

The moving picture, above all, must be the attraction.

William N. Selig Reminded of the Twenty-first Birthday of the Selig Polyscope Company.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., was pleasantly reminded of the twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the company that bears his name, one day last week.

All unconscious of the fact that twenty-one years had elapsed, on April 9 last, since he had started business in the old studio at Peck Court, Mr. Selig was surprised by the entrance of a delegation of friends to his private office, headed by Gilson Willets. Without any preamble Mr. Willets, in a brief and happy speech, referred to the long span of life that had been spent by Mr. Selig in the upward climb to the prominent position now held by him in the film world, and congratulated him on the untiring activity that still marks his efforts in the producing field.

He then presented Mr. Selig with a handsome pair of field binoculars, as a slight token of the high regard in which he is held by the donors. The names subscribed on the list are Gilson Willets, William Lord Wright, Herbert Hoagland, Lucien Wheeler, Joe Harris, F. C. Aiken, John Verhoeven and James S. McQuade.

Chicago Film Brevities.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., informed me one day last week that the Niles plant, Califronia, has again been opened, and that photoplays, which will be known as Essanay Niles Features, will be produced there. Jack Gardner, well-known as a photoplay actor, left Sunday, April 15, for the Coast, and with a carefully selected company will engage in the first production at the Niles studio. This will be entitled "The Land of the Long Shadow." Many of the scenes of this photoplay will be made near Mount Ranier, Wash., so as to obtain the required locale. Essanay Niles Features will be releaed through K-E-S-E once a month and the first release, "The Land of the Long Shadow," will be made June 18.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. has just completed "Maid o' the Movies," specially designed for the big time vaudeville theaters. The photoplay was written and directed by E. H. Hibben, director of the company. Director Hibben promises that the picture will be a decided novelty for leading vaudeville houses.

Ludwig Schindler, manager of the coming National Exposition at the Coliseum, this city, in order to increase the attendance of exhibitors throughout the country, has announced that $1,500 in prizes will be offered to the different state organizations. The state bringing the largest number of members of the league to the convention and exposition will receive first prize. The prizes will be awarded in handicap form, the state of Illinois being excluded from the contest. The distance that delegates and other exhibitors (members of the league) will have to travel in order to be present at the Coliseum will be an important factor in deciding the winners. Further information regarding this contest will be furnished by Exposition Manager Ludwig Schindler, Room 1413 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Exhibitors of Chicago are showing their patriotism during the present crucial time by assisting in stimulating recruiting in various branches of the service. For example, twelve "Loop" theaters will run a moving picture showing a marine corps gun crew manning an anti-submarine gun in action. Great Vitagraph has volunteered to place similar films in 250 other moving picture theaters in the city.

Jack Kerrigan, a popular favorite in filmland, who has been touring the country for some time past on his own account, arrived in the city Monday, April 23, and will remain for several days. During his stay he will devote most of his time visiting various moving picture theaters, where he will address those present. It has already been announced that he will appear at the Ziegfeld and other houses on the Hamburger circuit.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer entertained 250 Boy Scouts at a matinee at the Colonial one day last week, where they greatly enjoyed the presentation of "Joan the Woman." The Boy Scouts had paraded on Michigan avenue under Major R. J. Mautner, in memory of Paul Revere's midnight ride in 1775. The leading boy scout was accompanied by a young woman in the costume of Joan of Arc.

The La Salle theater will return to the theatrical ranks early in July, William Elliot, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest, members of a New York theatrical firm, having obtained a lease by arrangement with Jones, Linick & Schaefer. The new management, it is said, will present musical comedies at the house, which will become a sister theater to the Princess, in New York, playing the same attractions "Enlighten Thy Daughter" is having a big run at the La Salle.

John W. Rankin, press representative for Robert Goldstein, president of the Continental Film Co., Los Angeles, has announced that Orchestra Hall has been leased for one month (or longer), for the showing of "The Spirit of '76," a patriotic picture of the Revolutionary War. It will open its run on Monday evening, May 7, and will be the first public showing of this picture on any screen. Admission prices will be fifty cents to two dollars. Robert Goldstein is author and producer of the picture.

"The Easiest Way" (Selznick), Clara Kimball Young's fourth production, will enter its second week Sunday, April 22, at the Studebaker, where it is having a promising run.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" (Greater Vitagraph), opened for an indefinite run at Hamburger's Ziegfeld on Saturday, April 21. This picture is especially timely at present, as it serves as a fine stimulant for recruiting. The picture shows convincingly that it is better to be prepared in a military way for an emergency rather than to wait until the country is beset with enemies before an army is raised and trained for service. The play was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was produced under Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's direction.

J. E. Willis, vice-president of the American Bioscope Co., states that he has received a letter of thanks from Secretary Tumulty, Washington, D. C., acknowledging the receipt of a 100-foot strip of film of the American flag in colors, which was sent to the President by the American Bioscope Co. These strips of film are manufactured by that company and can be used in connection with any program, either at the beginning or the end of a picture.

The negative of "The Danger Trial" was 13,000 feet in length and this has been cut to 5,000 feet in order to meet the required length for the K-E-S-E Service. It can, therefore, be confidently expected that "The Danger Trial" as it now stands, has tremendous intensity of story and action. The big fight scene in which John Howland (H. B. Warner) and Jean Croisset (W. Lawson Butt) engage, presented great difficulties to Director Frederick Thompson. It is the big "punch" of the photoplay, and caused him much uneasiness. The principals, however, rehearsed the fight for several days before the camera was used, with the result that those who have viewed it on the screen have declared it the best fight in pictures since "The Spoilers" was released.

Miss Rose Shulsinger, of the publicity department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., New York, came out here to take charge of the publicity for the premiere of "Even As You and I," the Lois Weber production, which opened at the Playhouse Sunday afternoon, April 15. Miss Shulsinger is a newspaper woman of considerable experience and was at one time connected with the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and the woman's page of the St. Louis Times.

The Jackson bill, which was passed by both houses of the Legislature at Springfield, on April 11, has been vetoed by Governor Lowden. This bill, intended to prohibit exhibitions of any picture inciting race hatred, was supported by the colored people of Illinois. It really aimed at "The Birth of a Nation."

The woman's section of the Navy League will start a six-day drive for new recruits for the U. S. Navy on Monday night, April 23, in Grant Park, near the recruiting tent for marines. George Kleine, William N. Selig and George Spoor have donated the use of a number of miscellaneous reels showing service in the U. S. Navy and in the navies of the Allies. The screens in moving picture theaters in Chicago are being largely utilized to stir up a patriotic spirit among all desirable men in support of the army and navy.

"The Lad and the Lion," the latest story of Edgar Rice Burroughs, which has been produced by the Selig Polyscope Co. in Los Angeles, will be released through K-E-S-E Service Monday, May 14. Mr. Burroughs is a famous writer of animal stories, of which "Tarzan of the Apes" is the most popular, but it is said that "The Lad and the Lion" rivals it in public favor. Al. Green has directed the production, and Vivian Reed is the star. In her support are Will Machin, Al. W. Filson and Charles LeMoyne.

Associated Advertisers Have Office

Will Work With Mayor's Committee on Patriotic Propaganda at 50 West 42d Street.

THE WORK of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in preparing for the "Wake-Up America" day in co-operation with the Mayor's Committee, won such unlimited and enthusiastic approval from that committee that they virtually insisted that the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers occupy immediately an office on the same floor with them in the building at 50 East Forty-second street, New York. Their only stipulation is that the A. M. P. A. hold itself in readiness to plan and execute any publicity and advertising campaign which they have in mind.

For its part, the Association has placed at the disposal of the Mayor's Committee all of the material which it has originated and put in shape so far, including posters, slides, moving picture leader and trailer, stock advertisements in proof and mat form, and the plans for the several patriotic features that it has in mind. Col. Lucy has been extravagant in his praise of the plans made by the moving picture people, and has stated that the work they were doing was exactly the work the Mayor's Committee intended to do, but that it was being done better, more swiftly, and with less waste than the Mayor's Committee could hope to do it, and that the co-operation of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was the one thing to complete the organization of the Mayor's Committee not only for local, but for national work.

In preparation for the "Wake-Up America" Day, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers supplied slides to all of the exhibitors in Greater New York who asked for them. Many exhibitors made and ran their own slides. The Greenwich Lithograph Company made for the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, free of charge, five thousand one-sheet posters of a beautiful flag, the design for which was made by the famous artist, Lambert Gunther, and these are now ready for distribution, and may be obtained at the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' office, 50 East Forty-second street, New York, second floor.

So many of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers were in Albany on Thursday that the secretary postponed the regular meeting of the Association until Friday, when a mass of accumulated routine business was attended to.

Julian Solomon was unanimously elected director of the association to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Carl Pierce. Mr. Pierce resigned with regret on account of the fact that his duties called him out of town a large part of the time.

W. A. Bach, an associate member of the association, having removed from Toronto, Canada, to New York City, to become associated with M. H. Hoffman as sales and publicity manager, was elected to active membership in the association.

$3,000,000 ZIEGFELD CORPORATION.

Announcement is made that the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation has been formed and chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a capital stock of $3,000,000 and valuable options on real estate in South America and Florida, upon either or both of which is to be built "Ziegfeld City," with all its studios, laboratories, hotel, club house, homes and shops—"a vibrant, teeming, joyous reality," as the announcement says. The officers are William K. Ziegfeld, William J. Worden, vice-president and general manager; C. Ray Houser, second vice-president, and Samuel E. Bailey, treasurer. The New York office of the new corporation is at 9 East 40th street.

Doings at Universal City

Stuart Paton Starts New Serial—Lyons and Moran Celebrate Fiftieth Picture—Betty Schade a War Bride—Death of Universal Postmaster.

DIRECTOR STUART PATON, who produced "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" for Universal, is engaged this week on the task of preparing an elaborate screen adaptation of "Loot," Arthur Somers Roche's novel. This adaptation will be pictured as a serial, the episodes of which will run over a period of fifteen weeks and will carry the title of "The Mystery of the Gray Ghost."

Betty Schade and the Loving Cup.

The leading roles will be in the hands of Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson, Harry Carter and Eddie Polo. Miss Dean will play the part of "Morn Light," a dashing comic opera star; Harry Carter is the gentleman criminal known as the "Gray Ghost"; Emory Johnson enacts the part of Hildreth, a young Englishman, and the athletic Polo will be seen as his valet.

H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, has determined upon a number of changes in the directing and acting forces at the film capital to meet the increasing demands made upon him for the finished product of the Pacific Coast studios.

The Universal Joker company has been divided to make an additional comedy company. Gale Henry will work under the direction of Allen Curtis, with Jack Dill playing opposite. Her former co-worker, William Franey, remains the featured player of the Joker company, with Milburn Moranti and Za Su Pitts as the leading woman. Franey will be directed by W. W. Beaudine.

Ruth Stonehouse has given up directing her own company for the summer months and will be featured in five-reel productions under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet, who has been producing Nestor comedies, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Edith Roberts. The Nestor comedians have been transferred to the direction of Roy Clements.

Elmer Clifton has assumed the direction of Jack Mulhall and the feature company in which he is starred

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal Nestor comedians, are planning a celebration on the completion of their fiftieth photoplay since their return to Universal City in June, 1916. During the greater part of that time they have been directed by Louis W. Chaudet and they are all proud of the record.

Nestor comedies are made in one reel and each one is given careful reading by the director and the two comedians before work is commenced. Frequently they see a number of additional comedy situations which can be added to the scenario and all work together in the closest harmony, even little Edith Roberts, the leading lady, also having a good idea to suggest. As a result of the composite view Nestor comedies have proved remarkably successful.

Betty Schade, or [illegible] the leading women of Universal City, was married to Ernest Shields, well known actor, on Easter morning at the Church of the Angeles in Pasadena.

Miss Schade is a native of Germany, and Shields is a sergeant in the Hollywood Coast Artillery and expects to be called out at any time to fight against the bride's countrymen.

The fact that Shields may receive the summons at any time prompted the marriage earlier than had been planned. This is one of the first captures reported since war was declared, but the "prisoner" admits that she is very happy about it. Whatever her sentiments may have been she is now pro-Ernest Shields. Mr. and Mrs. Jack Blystone attended the young couple.

The bride's many friends at Universal City presented her with a beautiful loving cup with the following inscription engraved upon it:

"To Betty, Universal's first war bride, from those who love her at Universal City."

Deep regret was expressed by all at Universal City on the morning of April 2, when it was learned that Fred Donaghy, the postmaster at the film capital, had been found dead in bed at the studios. Donaghy had been a sufferer for many months with an affection of the heart. As a mark of respect to the memory of Universal City's first postmaster, flags were hung at half mast.

Children's Ordinance Repealed

Ordinance Passed Four Years Ago, and But Recently Enforced Is Wiped Off the Book.

EXHIBITORS of Los Angeles are rejoicing, as the ordinance prohibiting children under 14 years of age from attending theaters and other places of amusement unaccompanied by parent or guardian, was repealed on Wednesday this week at an afternoon meeting of the city council. The council voted five to one in favor of the repeal of the present law, which was passed by the council four years ago, but has not been enforced until very recently.

Councilman Conwell made the motion for repealing the ordinance, Councilman Langdon seconding it. Mr. Conwell declared that it was admitted the ordinance was not practical, and as a result it should not be on the statute books. "Anyhow I am opposed to such restrictive measures," he said, "and I want to make this promise right now that if re-elected to the council I will never cast another vote for any more restrictive ordinances of this character. Such laws cannot help the city, but they simply hold it back." Councilwoman Linsey said her views coincide with those of Mr. Conwell.

President Betkouski voted against the repeal on the ground that the city should not be left without a regulatory measure affecting the "movies."

It is proposed that a new ordinance will place upon the parents the responsibility of keeping children off the streets and other undesirable places, and upon City Attorney Stephens has been placed the responsibility of drafting a new ordinance to regulate the attendance of young children at moving picture theaters.

"Curse of Eve" Trade Showing Soon

Corona Cinema Company's Multiple Reeler Being Prepared for Early New York Preview.

ADVICES received this week from the Corona Cinema Company are to the effect that its multiple reel production, "The Curse of Eve," is rapidly nearing completion, and will shortly be presented in New York City for the general inspection of the trade. The film is in the hands of the cutters, who promise to have the completed subject ready by the end of the month.

Because of its theme, "The Curse of Eve," has occasioned considerable discussion in film circles. It was written by Wycliff A. Hill and drives home with sledge hammer blows a mighty protest against the double standard of morals. Given an elaborate production by President F. E. Keeler, under the direction of Frank Beal, the play, it is declared, will cause a sensation at its forthcoming showing.

The cast is headed by Enid Markey, for several years an Ince star, and includes in the other principal roles Jack Standing, Ed Coxen, Marian Warner, Clarissa Selwyn, Eugenie Besserer, Elsie Greeson, William Quinn and Arthur Allardt.

Scene from "The Curse of Eve."

Already the company, we are informed, has many inquiries concerning the picture's premier, and bids for territorial rights. Additional offices have been reserved in the Baker-Detwiler Building for the conduct of this business. The accompanying cut is of Enid Markey, Jack Standing and Marian Warner in a scene from the play.

At what New York playhouse the subject will be given its maiden showing has not yet been definitely determined, but President Keeler is conducting negotiations for the use, it is said, of one of the best theaters in the metropolis.

Film Round Table Organized

Local Exhibitors and Exchange Men Inaugurate Series of Weekly "Good Fellowship" Meetings.

IN THE mail this morning came this invitation from J. A. Quinn, the enterprising Los Angeles exhibitor, whose new house, The Rialto, soon is to open: "Commencing this week Al Levy will reserve a special section at his cafe on South Spring Street, at 1 P. M. each Saturday, for exhibitors, exchange men and others of the film industry. The gathering will be in the nature of a "get together" luncheon, and is designed for a general discussion of divers topics common to us all. The fee will be fifty cents. J. A. Quinn."

About twenty-five were on hand at the initial affair, and constituted a nucleus of what we believe will prove a most valuable institution for the best interests of the local exhibitors and exchangemen's colony. Those present included: Fred A. Miller, Miller's theaters; H. H. Bosley, Alhambra theater; B. H. Lustig, Dreamland theater; J. A. Quinn, Quinn's Rialto; Charles Hilton, Quinn's Rialto; Irving M. Lesser, All Star Features Distributors; Kenneth A. O'Hara and Carlyle R. Robinson of the Rialto press department. William L. Campbell of the L. A. Record, Annette Marquis, Quinn's Rialto; G. H. Campbell, American and Banner theaters; W. J. Quinn of the Consolidate Film Corporation, H. V. Side, formerly of the New Syndicate theater of Minneapolis; James Slipper, of J. Slipper and Company; Al Earnest Garcia, of the Photoplayers' Review; B. H. Collier, of the Superba; C. F. Glimm, of the Garrick; Dave Bershon, of the California Film Exchange; C. L. Deuerkauf, of the Bluebird Photoplays; Newton E. Levy, of the Mutual Exchange; L. J. Meyberg, of the Mutual Exchange; L. G. Stang, of the Mutual Exchange, and representatives of the World and other trade papers.

We trust that this number will be further augmented by the rest of the local film men at next Saturday's meeting. And many thanks for the invitation, friend Quinn.

"Doug" Fairbanks Arrives in Town

After being banqueted in New York, Chicago and Kansas City, while en route to Los Angeles, Douglas Fairbanks arrived in California on Thursday this week.

Fairbanks is preparing to start immediate production on scenes of his second Artcraft starring vehicle, "A Regular Guy."

He was accompanied West by Director John Emerson, Anita Loos, Eileen Percy, John Fairbanks, Victor Fleming, Bull Montana, Spike Robinson, Florence Gribbon, Mathilde Kanes, Glenn McWilliams, James Hogen, an entire executive and mechanical staff, and, last, but not least, our old friend Bennie Zeidman, that energetic publicity representative.

"Doug" Fairbanks, when interviewed by the representatives of the trade papers, smilingly expressed himself in his own characteristic way as follows:

"Glad to get back to California, where I can have my bucking broncho and breathe some real fresh aid. I'm a fanatic on the open air idea—a regular gypsy proposition."

"We finished 'In Again—Out Again' and started a new picture before leaving New York, which we hope to complete soon in Los Angeles. Gosh, I'm all sore—rode a horse on Fifth avenue—and I hadn't been in the saddle for over a year. This new picture is somewhat of a novelty—good idea—if we don't ruin it in production."

"Brought seventeen people West with us on this trip. A majority of the party has never been west of Broadway. They expect to see highly painted Indians and daredevil cowboys roaming around the streets of Los Angeles. They've got a surprise coming to them. I know on my first visit West my illusions were quickly shattered.

"Expect to remain in California for about three months—then we hope to go to Honolulu if the war doesn't prevent the trip," concluded the man of the hour in movieland.

Another Large Motion Picture House for Los Angeles.

Fred A. Miller, a Los Angeles exhibitor, his nephew, Roy J. Miller, and Harry Leonhardt, the Fox representative, have signed a long term lease on a theater, which soon will be erected on Main street, just south of Eighth and a short distance from Miller's present Main Street theater. A. B. Rosenthal, local architect, is completing the plans for the erection of this theater building, which is the property of Col. J. B. Lankershim, who owns the Lankershim Hotel and the San Fernando and Lankershim Buildings in the city.

Fred A. Miller.

This new theater, we are informed, will be one of the finest motion picture houses in America and one of the largest on the Pacific Coast. It will be of reinforced concrete construction and have a seating capacity of 3,500. Building operations will commence immediately upon the completion of the plans and taking of figures. Tenants have already vacated and the old landmarks will be torn down at once. The exterior and interior will be designed in Italian renaissance. Matt glazed terra-cotta will be used exclusively on the exterior. The building will be finished in imported marbles, mosaics, circassian walnut, mahogany, satinwood and stucco, and will undoubtedly be America's finest theater.

William Fox photoplays will be shown at this theater, and with the large seating capacity will do away with the necessity of standing in line to see the pictures. Exclusive sections will be reserved for social parties, clubs and organizations, especially at matinee performances.

This theater is at present without a name, which is to be chosen by the people of Los Angeles and vicinity. A prize of twenty-five dollars will be paid for the most appropriate name sent to Millers theater between now and the first of May. If more than one person submits the name that is chosen the prize will be awarded to the one first received.

Los Angeles Film Brevities

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles from New York Monday this week. While in the East, we are informed, Mr. Lasky signed up several new stars for the Lasky studios, including Billie Burke and Elsie Ferguson. Mr. Lasky expects to remain in Los Angeles for about three weeks and then return to New York. He will be back later in the spring and bring his family to spend the summer in California.

Geraldine Farrar will arrive in Hollywood within three weeks, we are informed by Lou-Tellegen, the Lasky star, and director, and husband of the celebrated opera singer. Miss Farrar had contracted to appear with a grand opera company in Havana, Cuba, but, owing to the war, she cancelled this engagement and will leave immediately upon the completion of her extended concert tour and come to California for a vacation and not work in pictures until later in the spring. Mr. and Mrs. Tellegen consider California their home, and upon Miss Farrar's arrival, they will spend their leisure moments in scouring the surrounding country for a suitable location for their permanent residence.

Fritzi Brunette has been especially engaged by the Lasky company to act as leading woman for Sessue Hayakawa in his forthcoming production. This is Miss Brunette's first appearance on the Paramount program.

We had a letter this week from our friend Jim Tynan, who is one of the "live" publicity men in the business. Mr. Tynan was in charge of Roscoe Arbuckle's trip from Los Angeles, throughout the country to New York, and we have seen many visible evidences of his work in boosting that star.

Jim informs us that, notwithstanding the fact that he had three offers to stay in New York, he is coming back to the land where climate is a household word. He has not decided upon accepting one of two Los Angeles offers and will not announce his affiliation until he arrives here.

Roy Clements, who was the producer of the famous "Snakeville" comedies for Essanay, as well as many Universal comedy successes, has returned to the fold and will now direct Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in Universal features.

George Irving, director-general of the Frohman Amusement Corportion of New York, was a visitor to the World offices this week. Mr. Irving is the producer of "Jafferey," "The Witching Hour" and "God's Man." Tom Mix, the Fox Film Company's cowboy comedian, has organized a troop of one hundred expert horsemen and rifle shots, horses and full equipment, which enlisted yesterday in the Home Guard of the city under the authority of Chief of Police Butler.

The men who volunteered comprise a troop of the best riders and marksmen in southern California. They unanimously decided upon Tom for their leader on account of his all around fearlessness, as well as experience in the Spanish war.

Wliiam Parker, former scenario editor of the American Film Company, and lately with Universal and Kalem, is now wielding his trusty typewriter at the local Fox studios.

We understand that House Peters has finished his contract with the Morosco Company and has gone to San Francisco to look for a site for the new studio he is planning to build for his own company, now in the course of formation by local capitalists.

William V. Mong, the producer of the multiple reel picture under the working title "Israel," when last seen was carrying a husky grouch, the reason being that he had a mob of three hundred people brought from Los Angeles to Monrovia for work in his production, only to have to send them back without working on account of the sun refusing to shine. This incident cost Friend Bill's company about $300 with nothing to show for it.

Fatty Voss, of the L-Ko forces, is being congratulated upon saving the lives of two people. A Mrs. Alger and her son, who were badly injured when a trolley car crashed into their automobile on Thursday of this week. The woman and child were badly mangled and would have undoubtedly bled to death had not Voss lifted them in his car and carried them to the nearest hospital.

Fred J. Balshofer is engaged this week in selecting the supporting cast for "The Haunted Pajamas," the next production to be filmed by the Yorke-Metro. Harold Lockwood is the star and the cast will include Lester Cuneo, Paul Willis, Big Ed Sedgwick and Harry de Roy. Although the leading woman for the production has not yet been definitely engaged, it is said that Mr. Balshofer will shortly sign one of several well known motion picture actresses who are under consideration for the leading role in support of Mr. Lockwood. The production will be under the personal direction of Mr. Balshofer. Charles P. Stallings will be the assistant director.

Mary MacLaren, who sought to break her contract with a local film manufacturing company, won her fight before Presiding Judge Houser Wednesday, this week. The judge entered an order rescinding the contract and ordered that the original papers be brought to him for cancellation.

The corporation, after the preliminary legal fight with demurrers, failed to file an answer, and judgment was given for Miss MacLaren.

Two new productions were put under way at the Fox studios last week. William Farnum began a new super de luxe feature under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The picture will be a tale of the sea, which will necessitate the company's working on Catalina Island, at San Diego, and at San Francisco. A 1,700-ton ship has been chartered for realistic ocean work, and will be used to transport the organization to San Diego and back.

Jewel Carmen, whose success in "A Tale of Two Cities" was great, will once more play opposite Wiliam Farnum, and Billy Foster will preside over the camera.

The other production recently started will star Dustin Farnum and will be his third under the William Fox banner. Dusty's director is Richard Stanton, who has just completed a subject with this star.

A local film company was made defendant in four damage suits, aggregating $48,340, filed in the United States District Court this week on account of personal injuries. The complainants are: Andrew J. Dunham, who asks judgment for $5,000; Lillian E. and L. F. Comport, who pray for $17,000; Wilson and Frances Foster, who want $10,750, and Walter T. and Rose A. Dunham, who ask for $15,590.

The joint cause of action arises from their employment by the defendant corporation in December, 1916, when, it is alleged, during the making of a motion picture at Klondike Park, this city, a heavy blast of dynamite placed under a hill, or embankment, precipitated great masses of earth upon the complainants, with the result that they were all seriously injured.

Five companies of comedy makers are now doing their best to corral the elusive smile for the William Fox program. Under the Fox film banner are companies headed by Charles Parrott, Hank Mann and Tom Mix. Mr. Parrott's featured comedian is Charlie Conklin. With Hank Mann are Billy Mason and Max Asher. Tom Mix has the noted bunch of cowboys who added so much to the humor of "Hearts and Saddles." Mr. Mix's new leading lady is Rena Rogers.

Two companies of players are making Sunshine Comedies under the supervision of Henry Lehrman. One of these, directed by Mr. Lehrman himself, includes Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby, Victor Potel and Harry Ham. The other, directed by David Kirkland, has Dot Farley as featured comedienne, with Ernest Shield and Sam Beverly in her support.

Two more comedy companies will shortly be set at work for Mr. Lehrman's contribution to the William Fox program.

H. L. Snyder this week joined the scenario staff of the Signal Film Corporation's studios. Mr. Snyder is perhaps better known on the other side of the Atlantic than in this country. For a number of years he has been contributing to a number of English technical and fiction magazines, writing under the pen name of Achilles.

He is at present at work making screen adaptations from novels by well known authors, the film rights to which have already been secured by Producer McGowan, to be staged immediately following the completion of "The Railroad Raiders."

The film production of Albert Payson Terhune's story of capital and politics, "Caleb Conover," has just been completed at the Los Angeles Selig studio under the direction of Colin Campbell. The story features George Fawcett in the title role, and the supporting cast includes Tom Santschi, Fritzi Brunette and others. Beatutiful and elaborate sets are a feature of the production, and a large company of players was transported to San Francisco, where many of the scenes were filmed. George Fawcett was starred in the speaking stage version of the same play when it was produced a number of years ago.

At the Horsley studios, Crane Wilbur has completed, with Harrish Ingraham as co-director, "The Eye of Envy," the five-reel feature of which he is the author, star and director. Work is started this week on another story by Mr. Wilbur. The supporting cast includes Gene Crosby, Jade Mullally, Edgar Sherrod and other well known players.

Baby Maie Osborne, the tiny Pathe star, has completed this week at the Horsley studios, her first feature for Lasalida Films, Inc., under direction of W. Eugene Moore. The name of the picture is "When Baby Forgot," and is from a story by Harrish Ingraham. Frank Newburg, Margaret Nichols, Charles Gerrord and Frank Clark are included in the cast. W. A. S. Douglas, general manager of Lasalida Films, has wagered $500 that "When Baby Forgot" will set a new mark for the baby in histrionic achievement.

At the L-Ko studios Vin Moore, who is directing Phil Dunham, has completed this week a department store picture entitled "Dry Goods and Damp Doings." Mose Hamburger, one of the largest department store owners of Los Angeles, visited L-Ko lot, saw the department store set, and claimed that if it were not for the diffusers he would actually think he was in his own store.

Ruth McCord, one of the most beautiful of the Ince-Triangle girls, has been chosen to make a pilgrimage to the four corners of the United States, erecting a Triangle memorial at the farthest boundries north, south, east and west. Miss McCord's travels will extend over a period of one year, during which time she will make herself personally known to every Triangle exhibitor in America, addressing the patrons of each theater visited. The trip will be made by motorcycle, and it is announced to start at the southwest corner of the country on May 1st. Arrangements are now being completed for her reception in the various cities along her route.

The widely advertised film, which Thomas H. Ince will present to the Navy Department of the United States Government, will be completed this week. The filming of this picture covers a great extent of coast territory, scenes having been taken in San Francisco, San Digo, Los Angeles harbor and in the Ince-Triangle studios at Culver City. In his efforts to produce a picture that will be a valuable aid to recruiting, Producer Ince has received the heartiest cooperation of the Naval authorities, both in Washington, D. C., and in California. As soon as the film is placed in the hands of the proper naval authorities it will be shown in all the principal cities of the country, and is expected to drive home the nation's need for men in the most forceful manner.

Studio Flashes

Ruth Stonehouse stopped us on the street the other day to inform us that she has just entered into a new contract with the Universal and will be seen in their features for at least a year more.

Marjorie Daw's new dressing room at the Lasky studio promises to be one of the most elaborate on the Coast, as she, with the aid of her drawing instructor, Stiles Dickenson, has evolved a harmonious combination of peacock green and blue.

J. "Pep" McGowan and H. H. Snyder, his scenario writer, were seen by us at the Alexandria the other night. Mr. Mac left the hospital to cut his last feature, and was on his way back when we ran into him. Snyder had many thrilling tales of the trenches to tell us, and we most heartily welcome him to the comparative safety of Los Angeles.

Bessie Love left for Frisco this afternoon and informed us that she had joined a circus, however, her numerous friends need not be alarmed, as the circus is part of her next feature.

Franklyn Farnum and Lee Moran were discovered by us at Levy's recently. Farnum told us that he has a bird of a story written by a local publicity man for his next feature. If that is so, we will spend a dime to see the result of our brother scribe's mental effort.

Dr. H. B. Brechwedel, owner and manager of the Palace theater, has proved his versatility by collaborating with H. J. Seiler in producing a new type of motion picture screen which cuts down the cost of juice, eliminates the side seat distortion, does away with the glare and reflection, and is easier on the eyes of the audience. With Louis Thompson, of the local Paramount exchange, as sales manager, they have organized the National Theater Supply Manufacturing Company, and have already installed screens in a score of theaters in this vicinity. Dr. Brechwedel has kept the Pathe production, "Told at Twilight," featuring Baby Marie Osborne, for a two weeks' run in his attractive house.

Edward Holland, a Seattle motion picture theater manager formerly with the Greater Amusement Company of that city, is now manager of Mack Sennett's Woodley Theater in Los Angeles. "Hinton's Double," Five-Reel Thanhouser Production Starring Frederick Warde, Closing Installment of "Patria," and Seventh Episode of "Mystery of Double Cross."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Hinton's Double."

HERE is a five-reel photoplay that is well worth while. "Hinton's Double" should prove one of the most successful screen dramas made by the Thanhouser Company. The scenario is a skillful bit of work, and the production has been cleverly handled by Ernest Warde. The biggest factor in the play's ability to win encomiums, however, is the ripe art of Frederick Warde, which enables him to act a dual role with such authority and ease and lend to both characters so distinct a personality that it is difficult to recall any finer specimen of acting for the screen.

"Hinton's Double" has all the elements that go to make an absorbing drama. First of all, it is well supplied with heart interest. The development of the plot moves briskly and entertainingly, and the triumph of courage over adverse circumstances is achieved with unconscious heroism by the simple old clerk who is forced to see his family face hunger and want, after his long years of faithful service. His resemblance to a notorious get-rich-quick operator is the means of his serving a term in prison in place of the swindler, who has run foul of the law. For doing this, Hinton is to receive a stated sum for every month he serves. The various steps of the story are followed with keen interest, thanks to the sharp line of demarcation drawn between the two men by Frederick Warde. The gentle, trusting nature of the one is contrasted with the bold assurance of the other. Save for the strong facial resemblance, the two men have nothing in common. The walk, tricks of gesture and movements of the head are as distinct as the souls within them.

Frederick Warde's technical grasp of his art and the lucidity of his method of expression are the result of a thorough schooling in the best the dramatic stage has had to offer in the last forty years, controlled by an alert intelligence that is now at its highest efficiency. Mastery of the screen by an actor grounded in the great dramas of Shakespeare and the other makers of standard plays lends a force and dignity to the photoplay that can be obtained in no other way.

Kathlyn Adams, Eldren Steuart and Wayne Arey, the leading members of the supporting company, are more than satisfactory.

"For the Flag."

The closing episode of "Patria" bears the well-chosen name of "For the Flag." The battle between the forces of the heroine and those of Baron Huroki is fought to a finish. A night attack, in which the flashes from the cannon and the glare of liquid fire light up the trenches, is vividly reproduced. The battle is renewed the next morning and is brought to a triumphant end by the help of a giant Caterpillar, one of the latest inventions of modern warfare. Captain Parr is wounded, but Patria continues to show that the new woman is fit to command, even on the field of battle, the United States Army officers conceding this when they arrive headed by General Cranston. Baron Huroki eliminates himself with the help of "the happy despatch," and Parr and Patria start to plan for their wedding day. The final number of the serial is like the grand display of fireworks that winds up a Fourth of July celebration.

"The Stranger Disposes."

The leading incident of the seventh instalment of "Mystery of the Double Cross" is when Bentley prevails upon Philippa to marry him at once, and the plan is foiled by "The Masked Stranger." Aside from this, she appears at the right moment and assists Peter Hale and Dick Annesley when they are in a tight place. The number keeps every one busy, and Molly King, Leon Bary, Ralph Stuart and Gladden James are as faithful as ever to the work intrusted to them.

"The Page Mystery"

Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley Featured in Five-Reel Peerless Photoplay Founded on a Story of Revenge.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SCENIC beauty of a high order belongs to "The Page Mystery," a five-reel Peerless photoplay founded on a story by Frank R. Adams, and released by the World Film Corporation. The action of the latter part of the drama takes place at a mountain lodge during the winter, and the views of snow-covered forest and patches of open, gleaming white in the moonlight are nothing short of enchanting. An abundant supply of story goes with all this pictorial loveliness. The mystery referred to in the title does not develop until the picture is two-thirds over, but the action has been strenuous enough to keep the spectator interested.

The loose moral code of a young millionaire, who is not averse to carrying on an affair with several of his female friends at the same time, brings about his murder, and three persons claim to have fired the fatal shot. Edith Strong, his young wife, who married him to save her father from ruin, and was forced to leave him on their wedding night, is also accused of the crime. The manner of her meeting with the man who eventually brings her unhappiness is conventional and melodramatic, but the play does not pretend to be the least bit highbrow, and, aside from its beautiful winter exteriors, contains one or two love scenes that are the reverse of chilly.

The production is attractive from first reel to last, and the director, Harley Knowles, has kept the acting forces well in hand. Arthur Ashley carries off first honors by a realistic impersonation of a dissipated young rake. June Elvidge presents a fine characterization of the best type of American girl, and Carlyle Blackwell gives his usual reliable performance of the hero. Frank Goldsmith, Alec. B. Francis, Charles Duncan, Pinna Nesbit and Albert Hart are excellent selections for the remaining roles.

"The Hawk."

Earle Williams Featured in Tiresome Five-Reel Drama—A Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released April 23.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

A MORE or less useless and tiresome photoplay is "The Hawk," a five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released April 23. It is, according to Vitagraph's announcement, a film adaptation of "a famous play that had a long run in Europe." The play may have had a long run in Europe but it is very doubtful if the picture will meet with the same success here. It is slow-moving, trite, and lacking in most of the elements that make for photoplay appeal. The suggestion of mystery in the title is not carried out in the production. Many of the titles are stilted.

The redeeming features are the cast and the production details. But even the presence of Earle Williams at the head of a cast that includes Ethel Gray Terry and Denton Vane cannot compensate for the lack of screen material. Director Paul Scardon has done his best in producing the piece, but water cannot be pumped from a dry well, and for screen purposes Garfield Thompson's play is a dry well.

It is evident from the picture that the play's long run in Europe must have been due to its dialogue; and the screen is no place for a drama that relies more on its lines than on its action to get it over. There is not even a character that is wholly sympathetic. The leading character is a card sharp who uses his beautiful wife as bait for his prey. "The Hawk," as he is called, is very much in love with his wife. She holds in high regard a young nobleman. Then we get this angle on the triangle: The wife is made morally better by her love for the nobleman and his love for her; the husband says that a man who steals another's wife is a worse thief than he who cheats at cards. The husband leaves his wife to the young nobleman. "The Hawk" becomes a "down and outer" and the big scene comes when he says that he will agree to a divorce if his wife herself asks him. She does, but is overcome with pity at her husband's plight. She suddenly reverses to take up life anew with her husband.

Others in the cast than those already mentioned are Julia Swayne Gordon, Mario Majerone and Katherine Lewis.

Two Kalems.

"The Secret of Lost Valley," an Episode of "The American Girl" Series, and "The Detective's Danger," a Number of the "A Daughter of Daring" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

ON A PAR with former releases is "The Secret of Lost Valley," newest two-reel episode in Kalem's "The American Girl" series. The offering is a Western that should not only please followers of this series, but any one else who likes exciting Western melodrama. Mystery is the keynote of the picture. Marin Sais is once more seen in the leading role, and is supported by Frank Jonasson, Edward Hearn, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee, Knute Rahm, Hart Hoxie and Grace Johnson.

The story tells of a mysterious old man who lives in Lost Valley with his daughter. The man is always in fear of an unknown something. A message of distress reaches Madge King and her followers. They find three villains who are plotting against the old man, who, it develops, was a companion in crime of theirs fifteen years ago. The man dies of shock shortly after the King party reaches Lost Valley, and the three endeavor to get possession of a mysterious chest. The King party make the bandits captive, and it turns out that the girl is not the old man's daughter, but that she is of royal blood, and that the chest contains a fortune in jewels. The picture, which has many good Western exteriors, was directed by James W. Horne.

"The Detective's Danger."

This reel is a quite good number of the "A Daughter of Danger" series. There are lots of fights, including several on top of moving trains. Helen Gibson's stunt this time is a good one. She leaps from the back of a saddle horse to the back of one of a team traveling next to a train, leaps from that horse's back to its team-mate's, and then onto a freight car in which is locked a secret service man. The release is a thoroughly acceptable one of its type.

"Little Miss Nobody"

Violet Mersereau Featured in Five-Reel Bluebird—Directed By Harry F. Millarde—Released May 7.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

PICTORIALLY beautiful, but obvious in plot and plainly a vehicle for Violet Mersereau, is "Little Miss Nobody," a five-reel Bluebird to be released on May 7. The offering is by no means one of highest grade. With a few variations, the story has been done over and over again both on the screen and in books, and more than indifferent interest is aroused only by the appeal to the eye of the featured player, the exteriors and the well-lighted interiors, all of which are enhanced by excellent photography and tinting.

Miss Mersereau tries the dangerous expedient of being cute again in this piece. Most of the time she succeeds with a charm that is irresistible; but sometimes she goes just a bit too far with the "Sis Hopkins" and "Topsy" stuff. Those picturegoers who are extremely fond of Miss Mersereau, though, will undoubtedly consider this one of her most charming roles.

The story was written by Alfred Solman and Robert F. Rodin and prepared for the screen by John C. Brownell. Harry

F. Millarde directed. Miss Mersereau is seen as the orphan drudge in a lumber-camp saloon. It is in these environs that she pulls most of the "appealingly cute" stuff. Of course there is the handsome young man who saves her from the advances of the rough lumberman who wants to marry her. From then on to the end it is simply a matter of the time until the ragged princess metamorphoses into the beautiful butterfly and lives happily ever after. But there has been considerable plot-material injected into the story—enough to keep things moving at a fairly rapid pace.

In the supporting cast to Miss Mersereau, which is uniformly good, are Clara Beyers, Helen Lindroth, Sidney Mason, Dean Raymond, John Mackin, James O'Neill, Willis Baker and Robert Clugston.

"The Law of Compensation"

Splendid Adaptation of Wilson Mizner's Story for Selznick Program Features Norma Talmadge.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JULIUS STEGER and Joseph A. Golden are jointly responsible for the excellence of direction evidenced in "The Law of Compensation," which is an adaptation of a story by Wilson Mizner, and is presented by Joseph M. Schenck. In its visualized form the story is so thoroughly human, so truthful a reflection of the joys and sorrows of domestic life, so brim full of pathos as its story within a story reaches its climax, that we forget that after all it is but a repetition of what many other picture productions have attempted to tell. As told in the picture, it is a story that reaches into the heart of every home. The evil element, what there is of it, is so totally overbalanced by a strong depiction of the nobler and more elevating instincts of life that there can be no question about the lesson of the story getting over. There is also a wholesomeness and sweetness added by the presence of the child in the home.

The picture opens with some attractive and well-staged scenes in the grounds of a young ladies' boarding school, dissolving later to the home of the favorite of the school (Norma Talmadge), who has just completed her education and has returned to brighten the life of a doting father (Frederick Esmelton). Her lover (Chester Barnett), obliged to leave town to take a position, begs her to marry and accompany him. This she does with the consent of her father, and a year later finds her a happy wife and mother. The entry on the scene of an ordinary "song-plugger" who flatters her into believing that she can become a New York headliner in musical comedy all but destroys the domestic felicity of her life. A timely warning to her father, who has left a sum of money with an old friend to be given to her as she may require it, prevents what otherwise might have resulted in domestic tragedy. Her mother's story, similar to what her own might have been, is told to her by her father and visualized on the screen. This portion of the picture is unusually compelling. We are not sure, however, that its intensity was not added to considerably by the appropriate musical accompaniment given it at the New York theater, where the picture was reviewed. During the deathbed scene "Asa's Death" from Grief's "Peer Gynt" was played, followed by "Lead, Kindly Light."

Norma Talmadge has possibly never appeared to better advantage than in this production. The same may be said of Chester Barnett and Frederick Esmelton. Some attractive tinting appears in the first reel of the picture in connection with a number of delightful exterior locations.

Scene from "The Law of Compensation" (Selznick).

Charles Gunn is playing the leading part in the Triangle-Ince-Kay Bee gangster play, in which Louise Glaum is the star. Roy Laidlaw and Aggie Herring are also playing in this production.

"Skinner's Bubble"

A Worthy Sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit," With Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly Just as Delightfully Entertaining in the Parts of Skinner and Honey.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

WHEN William Manning Skinner chose Napoleon as his exemplar, to the supplanting of George Washington, he launched himself and his beloved wife Honey on a sea of troubles, and barely escaped wrecking his career and fortune. "Skinner's Bubble" shows this in such a masterful way that sympathy, though part of the time uppermost, is quenched by the desire to indulge in heartless merriment at Skinner's expense.

Scene from "Skinner's Bubble" (Essanay).

We hold that Skinner deserves it, if for nothing else than his lightly forgetting the moving plea made by his faithful little life partner, when he first makes known his intention to give up the home where they had been so happy and move to new and modern apartments in the city, which would better become his station as junior partner of the firm of McLaughlin, Perkins & Skinner.

"Give this all up!" cries Honey, with a sob in her heart. "Why, it is built upon love, and with love. Oh, dearie, you can't be serious." And then, when she convinces him for the first time that a single reverse would ruin him, he promises to give up the plan though determined in his heart to have his own way. And this he does, even in more Napoleonic fashion than Honey had dreamed of; for he severs his connection with McLaughlin & Perkins, and opens offices in the city under his own name. And more, he establishes Honey and himself in an expensive, modern home, where he has his valet and Honey her maid, with an obsequious butler and a bebuttoned door boy, and other servants to boot on the home payroll.

From this time forward the spectator seldom has a sober face. What with the office boy and the stenographer at Skinner's business headquarters, dead tired every day because they have nothing to do, and the head of the firm showing his compassion by frequently declaring half holidays, and adding to this the tyranny of the servants at home, who never permit Skinner and Honey to be alone a moment, the atmosphere is constantly charged with merriment.

The scene at the Skinner office, where Mrs. McLaughlin and Honey make a visit one day, furnishes one of the crescendos of the spectator's mirth. Under Skinner's previous instructions, the boy rushes in and out of the office in response to the whirlwind of business; and the stenographer—she presses to the limit the endurance of the machine by copying at lightning speed the entire front page of a newspaper! All these signs of a rushing business are duly described to her husband by Mrs. McLaughlin, and the head of the old firm concludes that Skinner is securing the bulk of its trade.

Another high note is reached when McLaughlin & Perkins call at Skinner's office. They also marvel at the rush of business, basing their conclusions on the activities of the head of the firm and his able assistants. The immediate result is a letter inviting Skinner to call at their office, where Skinner is induced to rejoin the firm on a more lucrative basis, just when he is at the end of his rope as a business man in his own right.

Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly are just as happy in the principal roles as they were in "Skinner's Dress Suit," and the other characters are just as ably sustained by James C. Carrol, Marion Skinner and U. K. Houpt.

Harry Beaumont is to be congratulated on his success, both as the writer and director of this photoplay. In the matter of that dinner which Honey had prepared for Skinner at the old home, early in the story, I am of the opinion that a mere flash of the husband and wife partaking of it would have made the pictured story more complete.

The release was made April 23, through K-E-S-E.

"The Bar Sinister"

Original Eight-Reel Photoplay by Anthony P. Kelly Contains Strong Human Appeal and Expert Characterization—Edgar Lewis Gives It Well-Nigh Flawless Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE wisdom of the deep student of cause and effect who rose to remark that it isn't so much what one elects to do; it's the skill with which one does it, is exemplified in "The Bar Sinister." This eight-reel photoplay was written by Anthony P. Kelly and produced by Edgar Lewis. Author and director are deserving of sincere congratulations. Mr. Kelly's story contains a strong human appeal and an unbroken list of expert characterizations. Mr. Lewis has transferred the scenario to the screen with a fine appreciation of its artistic possibilities and the result is well-nigh flawless. The skillful reducing of a few scenes will quicken the action and strengthen the arguments with which certain propaganda anent the standing of the white, black and red races now somewhat overburdens the story.

The revival scene allows the action to sag very perceptibly and should be cut to the shortest possible footage. Once the story reaches the point where Page Warren learns that the woman he loves has (as she believes) negro blood in her veins, no touch of character drawing, however apt, should impede the swift onrush to the end. Pulling up in the home stretch is generally fatal in a horse race and exceptionally hazardous in playwriting.

The bit of copybook philosophy contained in the opening sentence of this review was suggested by the author's choice of material. A drama that absorbs, without artistic discomfort, two such ancient aids to plot building as the stolen child and the telltale scar on the wrist, must possess a vital theme and considerable deftness of construction. Anthony P. Kelly's ease and perfection in supplying his story with human beings that never fail to interest often leads him into the error of having one or two of his favorite characters hold the screen too long.

The law of proportion is a very important one in the art of play-writing. Bronson Howard once said that a number of potential dramatists in this country were engaged in building bridges. Lack of mechanical skill, the ability to use the right incident in just the proper quantity, too often mars many otherwise excellent photoplays.

"The Bar Sinister," like its prototypes "The Octoroon" and "The White Slave," is straight melodrama, despite the fact that the author pauses occasionally to propound a "safe and sane" solution of the race question below the Mason and Dixon line. This is the only appeal to pure reason in the drama. The story proper is addressed to the emotions and cannot fail to win a quick response from most lovers of the silent drama.

The work of Edgar Lewis makes the production a notable one. Many scenes of great beauty are scattered through the play, and the unwinding of the reels discloses no detail that has not been treated with careful and discerning attention. As already pointed out, the removal of a little extraneous footage will remedy the picture's one defect.

The contention put forth by Mr. Lewis at the time he made "The Barrier" that thoroughly artistic pictures were possible without the aid and prestige of some high salaried star, receives substantial support from the cast selected for "The Bar Sinister." The best-known and most worthy member is Mitchell Lewis. In a part obviously written for him, he is able to repeat the marked success he won in the Rex Beach story. In Ben Swift, "a strange mixture of white, black and Seminole Indian," he again shows his uncommon gift for depicting a noble nature imprisoned in the breast of a simple, unlettered man. The gamut of emotions possible to such a being are indicated with unfailing truth, and his fight with the mob is equal to any of his past encounters.

Hedda Nova has feeling, aptitude and much personal charm as the heroine Belle Davis, and little Mary Doyle is an equally good representative of the character at the age of five. Florence St. Leonard plays a mulatto woman with convincing power, and William Anderson exhibits a well wrought character study as her revengeful husband. Victor Sutherland is a forceful and muscular hero and Jules Cowles plays Buck Moe, a bad negro, with unforced humor.

William A. Williams is an easily recognized but unconventional type of southern gentleman. Frank Rilly, George Dangerfield, J. R. Chamberlain, W. J. Gross and Mark Wright are other names that lend efficacy to the cast. The photography by Edward C. Earle and the musical setting by Frederick O. Hanks and Sol Levy deserve a fair share of praise.

"War Prides"

First Two-Reel Flora Finch Comedy to Be Distributed Territorially Is Travesty on "War Brides."

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

FLORA FINCH is comically capable enough to carry alone any comedy in which she might appear. She does this with "War Prides," a two-reel comedy produced by the Flora Finch Film Corporation, and distributed on the territorial rights plan by the H. Grosman Distributing Company, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York. If it were not for the presence of Flora Finch on the screen the offering would be mediocre. As it stands, it is a fair comedy.

The picture is a travesty on "War Brides." Miss Finch is seen as Mlle. Noximova, and many of the big scenes of the tragic drama have been burlesqued in a laughable manner. The subtitles furnish numerous chuckles, too. Some more or less new comedy business has been introdueed, and the booker of this comedy can feel sure that his audience will get a few laughs. The chief fault with the picture lies in its poor direction. With a better director on the job the offering would have been twofold better.

There are some rather amusingly burlesqued battle scenes, and the two opposing armies are quite funny. One of the best laughs comes when Flora, fearfully fleeing, races with a shell and beats it home.

"A Mother's Ordeal"

Five-Reel Van Dyke Production Not Up to Moral Standards by Harry F. Millarde—Released May 7.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ANOTHER ill-advised attempt at a morality play will be found in "A Mother's Ordeal," produced by the Van Dyke Film Corporation, and released through Art Dramas. The film is not only crude in makeup and action, but suggests white slavery. We can see no excuse for the presentation of such a film; its theme is repellent and projects too much of evil and too little of good.

The story of the picture deals with the problem of the unfortunate feminine who loves "not wisely but too well," and is the center of a disgusting domestic hurricane. The man in the case is forced by her father to marry her, and the girl goes to live with an aunt. A child is born shortly after the marriage, an event which is followed by the news that the husband has been killed in a railroad wreck. At this point of the story, the young woman refusing the ministrations of her aunt, falls in a faint in her room, toppling a lighted lamp onto the bed on which the baby lies. It is a shocking fact that the baby is allowed to lie crying its heart out near the flames which are burning the bedclothes. Not long afterward, learning of her husband's death, she decides to commit suicide, pins a note to the baby's dress, and proceeds to walk into the river. She is rescued by a young man who takes her to his house, has her cared for, and afterwards marries her. Upon learning that this man is a thief, she leaves him and turns to making a living by immoral means. In the meantime her first husband, recovered from the accident, has gone to her aunt's to find her, and later takes charge of his child. One day the child, now a young lady at boarding school, is kidnapped and taken to a house of ill-fame kept by her mother, whom she has never known. The kidnapping is done at the instigation of the mother, who, believing the girl to be the offspring of her husband's second wife, has planned to dishonor the child in order to revenge herself on the father.

sonation, that of a timid country boy, who has been so completely dominated by his widowed father, a hard-grained old farmer, that he is almost wholly lacking in self-assertion. When he is sent to school, boob written all over him, not permitted to have a cent of money, his bills being paid by the old man, he is the most hopeless and helpless creature imaginable of his age and sex. The author of this entertaining comedy, C. Gardner Sullivan, is so marvelously well posted as to the feelings and mishaps of a timid boy at college that he seems to be writing from the fullness of experience.

The story is well constructed, very human, at times very delightful, a fine co-operation among author, director and actor, resulting in a finished product, but it is impossible to give the details within the limitation of a review. The boob is almost constantly funny, though pitiful from some points of view, and he improves but slowly under the inspiring influence of a plucky little girl, who runs a cake shop much patronized by the students. Almost accidentally he becomes the hero at a ball game, and he wins out mildly, but interest centers almost entirely upon Ray's portrayal of the character —it is admirable. While the concluding incident is an old one, the release has many real values, which sum up far above its few weaknesses. It is such a clever character portrayal that it will prove interesting and amusing to almost any audience.

"Hands Up."

"Hands Up" is a railroad melodrama without a collision, but it compensates in a very realistic and picturesque holdup very early in the story, one of the best ever shown. On the train are the road's president, Wilfred Lucas, his daughter, his fiance and a number of friends. The daughter is a romantic litle girl, and she becomes infatuated with the young leader of the gang of robbers. She exchanges rings with him during the holdup and gets a glimpse of his face. She recognizes him later on at the hotel where her father is stopping and becomes so infatuated that she consents to elope with him. She has meanwhile betrayed his identity, and her father becomes agitated at the sight of the ring the bandit gave her in exchange for her own. The father saves the young man from arrest under the impression that the young bandit is his own son by his first wife. The daughter is by a second wife, and marriage between these two would be that of half-brother and sister

Into this complication is injected the fiance, about to become the president's third wife, but apparently for no other purpose than a form of compensation at the story's end. The play seems to be built around the incident of the holdup, and many writers of scenarios imagine that a striking incident is the whole thing, whereas it is merely a means to an end. The striking incident is a live one, and Wilfred Lucas does much to make the role of president of interest, but the characterization is not a distinct one, such as Mr. Lucas has had in other photodramas, and the complications become very forced toward the end. The idea of threatened marriage between brother and sister, unknown to each other, is being done to death, the natural result of continual imitation, where originality and variety should be. Mr. Lucas is capable of responding to big and strong opportunity in a wide range of dramatic impersonation. In such a story he is only mediocre.

"Secrets of a Beauty Parlor."

"Secrets of a Beauty Parlor" shows a certain amount of Keystone vim and ingenuity, but it is painfully lacking in new features, and the absence of any gifted performer compels attention to incident. The company works hard, so hard that one has not the heart to speak of them without encouragement, but most of the incidents are repetitions of what has already been done, and the farce fairly bristles with arduous artificiality. It is mildly amusing.

"The Valentine Girl"

Marguerite Clark, in Famous Players Subject, Has a Role That Will Appeal to All.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

HERE is a sure enough good picture. There is a large measure of real drama, of incidents that appeal straight to the heart. The script was written by Laura Sawyer and the direction was by J. Searle Dawley. It is a story framed for its principal, with high regard for her capabilities in convincingly portraying a girl in her teens, the earlier teens at that. The picture does not run 500 feet before it gives us a situation that grips. If "The Valentine Girl" be an excellent subject for evening showing it is an even stronger picture for matinee exhibition.

of impersonation. Frank Losee is at the head of the supporting cast. To him falls the role of the gambler, who turns over to strangers the care of his infant daughter, whose mother had passed out of the world as the little one entered it. It is not exactly clear why he should assume such an unfatherly attitude, but the impression is strong that upon the survivor he has laid the blame for the fatality. The John Morgan of Mr. Losee is second in interest only to Miss Clark's Marian; it is a fine portrayal. Richard Barthelmess as the very young man who sues for the hand of Marian is convincing as the youth and strong as the man grown. Charles Sutton's portrayal of the minister who takes Marian into his home also stands out.

In its casting and staging the subject is worthy of the best traditions of the Famous Players. The picture will have interest chiefly, however, on the dramatic side. Here it is well worth while. It was released by the Paramount on April 23.

"The Birth of Patriotism"

of the great war. Cockney characters predominate and there are innumerable atmospheric touches of a pleasing sort. The scenes in the White Horse Inn give an impression of actuality and the love motive is brought into play in a natural, unforced way.

Anne, the barmaid at the inn, is effectively portrayed by Irene Hunt. Ann Kronan is pleasing as Mary, the music teacher in the school for girls, though the understanding of her character is brought out by the movement of the story rather than by individual effort.

Leo Pierson is appealing in the part of Johnny Roberts, the young man who marries Mary and is afterward beloved by the barmaid. An intensely human and pathetic situation develops when Johnny responds to the call for fighting men. Mary, from whom he has separated, still loves him, but is restrained from returning to him by false pride. Anne sees him off to the front when the soldiers leave. Then, as the story proceeds, Anne discovers Mary and her child and takes care of them.

The war scenes are realistic and are filled with grim tragedy. The pictures of the battlefield, covered with dead and wounded men, could well be toned down by shortening the scenes, though a certain number of them are necessary to the production. Johnny's return is effectively handled and the observer is glad when Anne slips away and leaves him to his wife and child.

The feature is one that brings tears to the eyes and a better understanding of the great conflict now raging on European battlefields. The story was written by I. A. R. Wylie and adapted and produced by E. Magnus Ingleton. Others in the cast are Ernie Shields, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Frank Coffray and Edward Brown.

Two Fox Productions

"The Derelict," Five-reel Photoplay Featuring Stuart Holmes, and "She," Rider Haggard's Weird Romance of Ancient Egypt, with Valeska Suratt in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CARL HARBAUGH, who wrote and directed "The Derelict" for the Fox company, has borne in mind that his photoplay was intended for a certain class of screen patrons. As a consequence, the picture is an obvious but never dull melodrama supplied with comedy trimmings. The character whose fall from respectability gives the picture its title is a heedless young gentleman much addicted to the gay life. He marries a refined young girl, but goes back to his old way of living and forces her to divorce him, leaving an infant daughter to the care of her mother. The wife marries again and her former husband sinks lower and lower until he becomes an outcast. The last act of his ill spent life redeems him. His daughter, now grown to young womanhood, is trapped by white slavers. He is able to save her without revealing his identity, and restores her to her mother.

Stuart Holmes is excellent in the part, and is well supported by Mary Martin, June Daye, Carl Eckstrom, Dan Mason, Wanda Petit and Olive Trevor.

The opportunity for spectacular effect and weird suggestion in "She," Rider Haggard's famous novel of ancient Egypt and modern life, explains its selection for picturization by the Fox company. The story has fascinated thousands of readers, and has had a successful career on the spoken stage. The linking together of two widely separated periods in the world's history is skillfully accomplished, and the character of Ayesha, the white queen of a tribe of savages, that know her by the comprehensive title of "She-who-must-be-obeyed," is an attractive one for any woman. The further fact that she has bathed in the flame of life and will never grow old is also largely in her favor. The story need not be recalled here. As set down by Haggard, its full realization would be a very complicated and elaborate affair. Mary Murillo has managed to condense it into five reels and made everything reasonably clear. Kenean Buel's direction of the production has many points of excellence; the one note he has failed to sound is the eyrie feeling that pervades the original work. Valeska Suratt's performance of the ancient queen is also untouched with the same important quality. Her dressing of the character is in keeping with the author's conception, but her entire performance is uninspired, a defect for which ease and freedom of movement and close attention to the task in hand does not fully atone. The Leo of Ben L. Taggart is another quite ordinary performance. Miriam Feuche is an appealing Ustane, Tom Burrough plays Holly convincingly, and Wigney Percival acts Billali to good effect.

The ensemble scenes are well handled. One or two flashes of a band of naked negro boys dancing around a comedy character should be eliminated. In this enlightened age none of us need an ocular demonstration to be convinced that little black Africans are never told to keep their hands out of their pants pockets.

"The Lincoln Cycle"

Benjamin Chapin's Pictorial History of the Great Emancipator an Epoch Making Event in Screen Production —Four Instalments Shown.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE term "human documents" will never be more fittingly applied to any form of records relating to the lives of the leaders of men than to the series of two-reel motion pictures produced by Benjamin Chapin under the title of The Lincoln Cycle. The first four releases dealing with The Great Emancipator are entitled "My Mother," "My Father," "Myself" and "The Call to Arms," and it is not over stating their importance to claim that they are an epoch-making event in screen production. In fact, not only every man, woman and child in the United States, but every lover of liberty in the civilized world owe a debt of thanks to their creator.

No finer or more impressive lesson in patriotism and right conduct is to be found than in the life history of Abraham Lincoln, and the truth and skill with which this lesson is set forth in the Chapin pictures is beyond all praise. They make clear the influences that moulded the character of our best loved president, and reveal with unmistakable lucidity the kind of Americanism for which he stood. Their use as propaganda at the present time would prove a powerful aid to the cause of that freedom for which the United States has entered the great war.

To accomplish the result for which he has long labored Benjamin Chapin has brought a love and zeal that are nothing short of being apostolic. The form in which he has cast his cycle admits of no perceptible improvement. To commence with, high as it ranks as an educational force and an authentic record of one of the chief figures in history, it has the almost inestimable advantage of being entertainment in the best sense of the word. The body of spectators that gathered at the Strand theater, New York, to witness the first showing of the pictures, laughed, cried and applauded with a wholehearted enthusiasm that left no doubt as to the success of this important feature in any work intended for public exhibition.

The general plan of the series is to show Lincoln in the different numbers after he had become president, and then to have him relate in that inimitable way of his some story of the past that is rich in humor and pathos and self-revelation. Correct reproduction of the life and incident described is a feature of the entire series, and keen judgment and perfect sympathy ar shown in the choice of material.

The homely pathos and touching beauty of the opening number, "My Mother," has never been surpassed. Only in Barrie's book on a similar theme can an equal tribute to motherhood be found. The effects of his mother's teachings help one to understand the man who fought so hard to keep the North and South from going to war, and who battled so fearlessly for the cause of humanity once the die was cast. It also illuminates the tender human side that made Lincoln so ready to shield his boys from the just displeasure of his wife and never to turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of some other boy's mother when his life had been demanded by the law. The pains Nancy Hanks took to teach her son to read and the scene around her grave make a lasting impression and form a just acknowledgment to this splendid woman, born in a log cabin and reared in poverty. The boy Abe also becomes a figure of love and devotion, but never beyond the errors of youth. In "My Father" the character of Tom Lincoln is brought prominently into view and treated with the same kindly but truthful revelation. "Myself" and "The Call to Arms" have the historical worth and personal charm of the preceding numbers and the same unfailing humor. The incident where Willie and Tad Lincoln play "hookey" and go swimming and then prevail upon their father to help shield them from the wrath to come, is a laughable incident that serves to make the trying hours just before Fort Sumpter was fired upon more solemn by contrast.

As the author of the scenario and general director of the Cycle, and also as the impersonator of Abraham Lincoln and Tom Lincoln, his father, Benjamin Chapin's meed of praise must surely be a generous one. His unique fitness for the part of Abraham Lincoln has long been conceded, and he is quite as successful in his acting of Tom Lincoln. His domination of the entire acting force has insured an unbroken line of correctly directed situations, upon which neither time nor money have been spared. All the parts are well cast, and to two of the members should go more than a passing notice. At the present writing it is not possible to give their names, but the boy who played young Abe and the actress who took the part of his mother realize in every particular the qualities looked for in these two characters. The boy's ability to express deep emotion is remarkable, and he is lovable and human at all times.

"The Lincoln Cycle" was produced by the Charter Features Corporation, and the three installments to follow are "Old Abe," "At the Slave Auction," and "The President's Answer."

"The Warfare of the Flesh."

Edward Warren's Ambitious Allegorical Drama Has Exceptionally Fine Cast, but Is Not Strong in Plot and Is Without Distinction of Treatment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE blending of allegory and modern melodrama requires the hand of a master. "The Warfare of the Flesh," Edward Warren's ambitious attempt at driving home the moral law contained in the seventh commandment, embraces suggestions from the Bible, Bunyan, Milton, Charles Rann Kennedy and Franz Molner. It opens with Satan's fall into hell, shows the tempting of Adam and Eve and their expulsion from the Garden of Eden, passes to the time of Christ and pauses to repeat the episode of the woman taken in adultery, comes down to the present and enacts the tempting of a young wife to sell her honor for the money that will save her sick husband's life. It then turns back to the cave man and exhibits the punishment for unchastity in that age and ends with virtue triumphant and the physical embodiment of the Saviour gazing sternly at the conventional conception of his satanic majesty. During the modern scenes both appear under figurative names as characters in the story proper.

Everything that money could supply in the way of a fine cast and expensive settings has been given the picture, but the imaginative power, the touch of distinction, that would have lifted the Biblical scenes out of the commonplace is lacking, and the modern episodes unfold so slowly that what force the theme does possess fails to reach the surface.

The individual efforts of Sheldon Lewis, Walter Hampton, Charlotte Ives, Marie Shotwell, Harry Benham and Theodore Friebus but emphasize the lack of opportunity afforded them in the production of the play.

"Max in a Taxi."

Typical Linder Stuff in a Comic Picture Full of Laughter—It Is Two Reels of Fun and No Mistake—Made by Essanay-Linder.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

MAX LINDER is an artist. Everybody knows that, but this review is going to be full of trite things; for the reviewer has been writing about Max off and on for the last six years. Max's art is always fresh, and that has been said before. The wonder is that he still has new things in his box of wonders, but he has. It was Max who invented the vicious blowing out of one's brains with forefinger jammed against the temple and his inventions seem born of the moment. His mind rollicks and one can't help laughing, for it is so spontaneous and unexpected. He has an inexhaustible supply of jollity and no sour rind to make us pay for laughter with puckered lips. It is a free out-giving—hearty, warm and human.

In this picture, "Max in a Taxi," made by Essanay-Linder, he is an irresponsible, care-free adventurer, a sort of Gallic Van Bibber, especially in the fact that he is always a gentleman. The story is a series of escapades. It is in two reels, the right length, and perfectly satisfactory. We see Max, who has wasted his substance, turned out of house and home. His dress suit proves to be an armor against hunger. Like a true knight, he finds a dragon. It's the butler at the door of a fashionable house where there is a party, but he wins his way in to the princess, and, what is better, a table set with cake. The princess likes him and when next day, after spending his only two cents to find a "help wanted" ad, he gets a job as chauffeur of a taxi he can't drive. The instructor leaves him in it and the princess and her aunt come along. They ask him to take them, of course. There is more funny antics, but the aunt (she's a good scout) is able to drive and Max rides behind with the princess. They stop in front of her house and leave Max, who can't get away. There is plenty of fun left for next morning, when they find Max still there.

Pathe's Line-Up Week of May 6.

Frederick Warde, Mollie King and Max Linder Are the Headliners.

THE celebrated star, Frederick Warde, in his first modern role; Mollie King in an episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," more thrilling than any that has gone before; Max Linder in a hilarious comedy, a Combitone scenic release, an especially timely International cartoon and scenic split-reel, and two releases of the Hearst-Pathe News are the strategic points in Pathe's advance for the week of May 6.

"Hinton's Double," in which Frederick Warde is seen, is a Gold Rooster Play produced by Thanhouser, in which the celebrated actor plays with the same sincerity that characterizes his work in the classics and lends the dignity and strength of his great personality to an interesting and thrilling story of double identity and the law. The picture was produced under the direction of Ernest Warde, and the author is Lloyd Lonergan, the well known scenario writer. The cast includes Wayne Arey and Kathryn Adams.

"The Stranger Disposes" is the title of the eighth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," produced by Astra, under the direction of William Parke, with Mollie King as the star. A thrilling succession of events takes place in this episode.

Max Linder is seen in "Max Is Almost Married," a split-reel comedy. He reads this ad. in the paper: "Handsome, wealthy, young woman desires to meet good looking, refined, young man. Object, matrimony." Then things begin to happen and continue to happen hilariously. "Chang Lee's Auto Mule Becomes Unmanageable" is a cartoon on the same reel.

The seventh release of the Combitone scenics, "Know America, the Land We Love," is entitled "Along the Apache Trail." This release shows the Indian reservations, remarkable specimens of tree life and cactus family, the famous "Painted Cliff" of Arizona, and the ruins of the Ponto Cliff Dwelings discovered by Coronado in 1540.

"Staple Fashions" is the title of the thirteenth release of the Florence Rose Fashion Films. The most famous costumers of New York have contributed to this release and wonderful creations are shown worn by equally wonderful looking girls.

"Zeeland and the Zuider Zee" is a beautiful little scenic gem. Splendid views on the Zuider Zee showing the sturdy Dutch peasants dressed in their quaint costumes on a background of rural landscape dotted with windmills, present scenes of typical picturesqueness.

F. Opper, the celebrated cartoonist, contributes "Three Strikes—You're Out," a split-reel Happy Hooligan International cartoon. With the baseball season starting, this cartoon is timely. "Dredging the Quahog (Clam) is an industrial on the same reel. It shows the method by which clams are brought to the surface and prepared for the market.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 38 and 39 complete the program.

Dorothy Dalton in Ince Subject.

Dorothy Dalton soon will be presented on the Triangle program by Thomas H. Ince in "Wild Winship's Widow," a comedy-drama by John Lynch. This play is announced as being the first in which this star has been cast in a comedy role, and from advance reports there is every reason to believe that the success of the production is assured. The story has to deal with a widow, who, worshiping at the shrine of the dear departed, finds that her idol has feet of clay. Her disillusionment eventually brings happiness, and the plot shows the folly of worshiping false gods.

Miss Dalton, in the title role, portrays a young and pretty widow, with every luxury at her command. She has erected the memory of her husband into a sort of religion, worshiping at the shrine and finding a solemn joy in so doing. The part calls for delicate perception and finesse to give full play to the vein of subtle humor that permeates every scene, and a trained actress was needed to portray the many fine shades in the delineation.

A strong supporting cast includes Rowland Lee, a newcomer to Ince-Triangle plays, who, as Archibald Herndon, impersonate a dillentante sentimentalist; Joe King, also new to this program, as Morley Morgan, the widow's choice; Lillian Hayward as Aunt Minerva, and Alice Taaffe as Marjory Howe. The production was directed by Charles Miller and photographed by Clyde De Vinna.

William Russell in Strenuous Role.

"The Frame-Up," the next American-Mutual production in which William Russell is starred, will be a refreshing departure from the more serious dramas in which Mr. Russell has been appearing. Mr. Russell's exceptional strength and agility will be called into play in this photodrama.

In one scene he is required to leap from one automobile to the running board of another, climb to the roof of the second car, lower himself into the hood of that car, and then engage in a tussle with its driver.

In another scene he is in the rear seat of an automobile with a policeman on either side. From this predicament he escapes by leaning forward, then suddenly turning a back somersault over the rear of the car and landing on his feet before the officers can catch him.

The picture is a novel one, and provides a fast mixture of thrills and laughs.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

BILL AND THE BEARDED LADY (Selig).—A comedy reel in which a number of laughs are registered. The background of the story is the freak department of a circus, which has given the director numerous comedy possibilities. When the Bearded Lady quits, Whiskery Bill takes her job—but he doesn't keep it. The cast includes John Lancaster, Lyllian Leighton, William Hutchinson and William Scott.

THE DETECTIVE'S DANGER (Kalem).—A number of the "A Daughter of Daring" series. There are lots of fights in this film, including several that take place on top of moving trains. Helen Gibson's stunt this time is a good one. She leaps from the back of a saddle horse to the back of one of a team hitched to a wagon that is traveling alongside of a train. She jumps to the second horse's back and then to the train. In this manner she is instrumental in bringing about the release of a secret service man who has been locked in the car.

A DEAL IN BONDS (Kalem).—A number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. The story is plainly built around the main thrill, which comes when George Larkin, in his efforts to rescue a wealthy old woman who has been kidnapped, reaches the room in which she is being tortured by tearing down a flag pole on top of a building, winding a stout rope around the pole, placing it between two buildings, and so lowering himself down to the window of the room. The thrill gets over well.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 28 (Essanay).—Cartoonist Carlon's animated cartoon burlesque on topical shares this reel with a scenic-industrial. The cartoons are up to par. The latter portion of the reel contains views on a trip through the Soo Canal. Here we see massive grain elevators, steel mills and are given a comprehensive idea of the shipping activities.

General Film Company Specials.

THE CLOCK STRUCK ONE (Essanay).—A bright and entertaining two-reel offering—one of the "Black Cat" series. The picture's appeal is more in its human simplicity than in its story value. The story tells of the romance of a glove-counter girl, who is craved by a wealthy youth and loved by a poor youth. Marguerite Clayton and Webster Campbell are the leading players.

THE SECRET OF LOST VALLEY (Kalem).—A number of "The American Girl" series. The release is on a par with former ones. The story concerns a mysterious old man who lives in Lost Valley. Acting on a message for help, the King party meet up with three bandits who are after a chest in the possession of the old man. The old man is shocked by a sight of a face, but before he dies tells the group that a girl he has brought up is not a daughter, but of royal blood. It develops that the chest contains jewels. The bandits are frustrated by the King party. A longer review can be found elsewhere in this issue.

THE POWER OF PIN MONEY (Selig).—A two-reel drama that interestingly tells of the harm sometimes done by those who are willing to work for less than their labors are worth so that they might have "pin money." In this case a girl's working results in a needy youth's losing a job. He is forced to steal, but later "comes back." The girl who forced him out is soon to become his wife. The cast includes Brydine Zuber, Mr. Sedgwick, Casson Ferguson, Helen Quarton and Fred Eckhart.

Art Dramas, Inc.

A MOTHER'S ORDEAL (Van Dyke), April 26.—This is a five-part production which cannot be recommended as being either of moral or entertainment value. It suggests white slavery and has absolutely no excuse for existence. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE CLOCK (Bluebird), April 30.—Five reels of clean-cut and interesting entertainment, this Bluebird feature, while never great, is always good. It is given a longer review on page 280 of April 14 issue.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY, May 7.—A pictorially beautiful five-reel photoplay in which Violet Mersereau is featured. The story is obvious and plainly a vehicle for the star. In the film she is seen as the orphan drudge in a lumber camp saloon. The usual things happen throughout. A full review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

Benjamin Chapin Studios.

THE LINCOLN CYCLE (Chapin), April.—The first four releases of the Benjamin Chapin Lincoln pictures proves that the series is one of the most noteworthy "human documents" ever shown on a screen. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE DERELICT, April 16.—A middle class melodrama very well played by Stuart Holmes and his support, this five-reel photoplay is consistent all through its five reels. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

SHE, April 23.—Five-reel screen version of Rider Haggard's weird novel with Valeska Suratt as the white queen, the picture has many novel features. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE HAWK, April 23.—A more or less useless and tiresome five-reel drama, with Earle Williams in the featured role. The picture, which was made from a play that had a long run in Europe, is not "there." It is slow-moving, trite, and lacking in most of the elements that make for photoplay appeal. It concerns a card sharp who uses his wife as bait for his prey. A full review can be found in another column of this issue.

K-E-S-E, Inc.

SKINNER'S BUBBLE (Essanay), April 23.—This is a delightful sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit," and in it Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly, as Skinner and Honey, has repeated their success in these roles. James C. Carroll, Marion Skinner and N. K. Houpt give faithful impersonations of the other important characters. Harry Beaumont, as writer and director of the photoplay, is to be congratulated. An extended review appears elsewhere in this issue.

"MAX IN A TAXI" (Essanay-Linder), April 29.—A comic picture in Max's best style. It is a picture full of laughter that will delight any audience. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 24 (Gaumont), April 17.—The subjects covered in this number are "Russian Caucasia," "Copenhagen, Denmark," and "Salzburg, Austria." These subjects are well illustrated and interesting in detail.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 120 (Gaumont), April 18.—This number shows the unfurling of the largest United States flag at San Francisco, a parade of militiamen in Los Angeles, scenes at the opening of Billy Sunday's three month's campaign in New York, a parade of bluejackets at Norfolk, Va., to stimulate interest in recruiting, and scenes pertaining to the Easter season.

SOMEWHERE IN THE MOUNTAINS (Cub), April 19.—In this number of the George Ovey pictures he does much the usual thing. The picture, however, takes a little different form when Ovey, without his make-up, comes into a moving picture theater and takes a seat to watch a picture in which he himself plays the principal role. The story is enacted in the moonshine country and is rather amusing.

REEL LIFE NO 51 (Gaumont), April 19.—This number of the series contains illustrations on the following subjects: "New Legs for Soldiers," "Fishing Through the Ice," "A Traveling Dairy," short but showing a street scene in Key West, Fla., "Making Iron Pipe," "A Vest Pocket Sterilizer" and "A Mock Bull Fight."

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 25 (Gaumont), May 1.—This is an interesting number of the "Tours" and contains scenes in and about Brest, France; Sarajevo, Bosnia; and Moscow, Russia. The film tells the characteristic features of these places.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

MASKED MIRTH (Vogue), April 21.—An amusing two-part farce comedy featuring Ben Turpin. In style it appears to be a burlesque on the recent serial "The Vampires." Its big feature is the manufacture of a chemical which, shot into the enemy's camp, would throw the troops into such a condition of mirth that they would dance themselves to death. The heroine is rescued from her persecutors by means of a wonderful torpedo which at the proper instant shoots into the sky with the girl roped to it. This, of course, affords the spectacle of the picture.

THE DEBT (Mutual Star Production), April 23.—In this five-reel production in which Marjorie Rambeau stars the exhibitor will find the highest standard of merit. The construction of the story seems to be more or less faulty, and the characterization not always true to life. The story centers about the fortunes of a young woman whose father becomes the debtor of his townspeople through his belief in the merits of a mine. His daughter, after his death, marries a man of the people who stands by her in her trouble. The debt is later paid by the efforts of her husband. His mother, a jealous, fault-finding woman, succeeds in separating husband and wife, the wife turns to a former lover, who has once played her false, and is about to marry him when she discovers that he is already a married man. The story as may be gathered is rather distorted and inconsistent.

ADVENTURES OF SHORTY HAMILTON (Monogram), April 23.—"Shorty Unearths a Tartar" is the title of this, the last of the "Shorty" series. In this number the hero, entering a tent on an Egyptian desert, finds that his associates have unearthed a mummy. Shorty, deciding to take a nap during the afternoon, dreams a wonderful dream about the mummy coming to life in the form of a dancing girl, the long lost hope of a Tartar tribe. The picture is full of inconsistencies but is not uninteresting.

RAILROAD RAIDERS NO. 3 (Signal), April 23.—The third instalment of this serial, featuring Helen Holmes, follows up the theft of the Melrose diamonds. The real diamonds which, in the last episode, fell into an ice cart when they were thrown from a train window, are found by Helen in the hands of a child of the ice man, who has no idea of the value of his find. She, in turn, is trapped and the diamonds again stolen. We will, therefore, still be following the thief of the diamonds when the next chapter opens.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

PARAMOUNT-BRAY-PICTOGRAPH NO. 64, April 22.—This number of the Pictograph contains some attractive subjects. One of the most interesting of these is entitled "The Poison Doll," which demonstrates what an investigation into the matter of the penny candies sold to children are made of. Other subjects are, "Salvaging the Submarine's Prey," "Turkey Hunting in South Carolina" and a Quacky Doodles cartoon number entitled "Soldiering for Fair."

THE VALENTINE GIRL (Famous Players), April 23.—Marguerite Clark, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, has the role of a girl in her early teens. It is a picture marked by incidents of real drama, as pointed out in a review on another page—a picture above the average.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

FOR THE FLAG (International), April 22.—The last episode of "Patria" winds up in a blaze of gunpowder, the battle between the forces from across the border and the Americans being highly realistic. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE STRANGER DISPOSES (Astra), April 29.—The seventh instalment of "Mystery of the Double Cross" shows the Masked Stranger foiling an attempt of Bentley's to marry Philippa secretly. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue

HINTON'S DOUBLE (Thanhouser), April 29.—The story of this five-reel photoplay is well told and Frederick Warde plays a dual role in a masterly manner. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

MAX IS ALMOST MARRIED (Pathe), April 29.—Three pet dogs are the means of Max not getting mated in this half-reel Linder comedy. It is done in the French comedians usual style. "Chang Lee's Auto Mule," a half-reel cartoon, is part of the same release.

ALONG THE APACHE TRAIL (Pathe), April 29.—Arizona is the State shown in No. 7 of the Combitone pictures. "Along the Apache Trail" reveals many scenes of rare scenic beauty, and embrace Roosevelt Dam and Lake, Tonta Cliffs, Salt River Cliffs and Hell's Hip Pocket.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS NO. 30 (Pathe), May 7.—"Staple Fashions" are shown in No. 30 of the Fashion Review. "Zeeland and the Zuider Zee," on the same reel, is full of quaint views of Dutch scenes and characters.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 68 (Universal), April 18.—Preparedness in the United States leads all other features in this number, which contains many scenes of interest with reference to the war. Some sporting events are also pictured.

WHAT A CLUE WILL DO (Nestor), April 30.—A comedy number, by C. B. Hoadley and F. A. Palmer, in which Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons play a couple of burlesque detectives. Edith Roberts is a lady newspaper reporter, whom they at first mistake for the criminal. The action is quite amusing, though there is not much plot.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 17, May 2.—This number of the Screen Magazine contains some interesting subjects including "An Ostrich Farm," with views photographed at the Cawston Ostrich Farm near Los Angeles; "Manufacturing an Automobile," "Paper Bag Cooking," "A Phonograph Lamp," and an animated clay cartoon entitled "Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before."

THE CABARET SCRATCH (L-KO), May 2.—A one-reel comic, featuring Dan Russell. He invades a cabaret, where he flirts with the manager's wife. The "cabaret scratch," a disease resembling small pox, breaks out. The reel closes with an auto chase. This is not hilarious, but proves diverting and entertaining.

LEFT IN THE SOUP (Joker), May 5.—A comic number, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey, Milburne Moranti and Lillian Peacock. Two men in a restaurant, one the proprietor, become struck with a lady customer. They follow her to the park and while they are away the cashier taps the till and elopes with a stranger. This is amusing in its way, though not particularly strong in plot.

SCRAMBLED HEARTS (L-KO), May 6.—A rube comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie and others. This is a rural burlesque, in which much eccentric action is infused into an elopement story. The knockabout scenes at the close will bring laughter.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

THE BIRTH OF PATRIOTISM (Universal Special), April 30.—A strong five-reel subject, adapted and produced by E. Magnus Ingleton from a story by I. A. R. Wylie. This pictures the awakening of England in the early days of the great war, when the call for fighting men penetrated to all parts of the country. The scenes in the London slums are effectively handled; the battle scenes are also realistic and bring home to the observer the immensity of the great conflict. Certain battlefield scenes may be cut to advantage. The production is appealing and touches the heart. Irene Hunt, Ann Kronan, Leo Pierson and others appear. A subject of strong emotional appeal.

BILL BRENNAN'S CLAIM (Gold Seal), May 1.—A three-reel Western subject, by Shelley Sutton, featuring Joe Rickson, Neal Hart, Janet Eastman and Raymond Whitaker. Saunders jumps Bill's claim and attempts to sell it. Both men love the daughter of a home seeker. The action is slow, but true to life, and works up to a lively finish in the third reel, where Bill pursues Saunders after he is known to have a bad record. This tells a consistent, well-constructed story and is better than an average number of the type.

LITTLE MOCCASINS (Bison), May 5.—A pleasing two-reel story of the open coutnry, by Harvey Gates, featuring Millard K. Wilson and Edith Roberts. The story concerns a girl at an expensive sanitarium in the mountains with her parents, who are snobs. They refuse to be friendly with the hero, a young Westerner. He likes the girl and wants to help her back to health, so he carries her off in cave man fashion, and they live with the Indians till she is well. The story is romantic and entertaining and is helped out by some very picturesque mountain settings. A good number.

Selznick Pictures

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION, April.—An unusually well-made five-part production dealing with a near-tragedy in the life of a young wife who was about to follow her mother's footsteps. The picture features Norma Talmadge, and was made by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden. It is beautiful and wholesome in sentiment, the evil element being made subordinate to the good. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE DESERT MAN (Ince Kay Bee), April 22.—A border melodrama of the kind in which Mr. William S. Hart usually appears, in which he shows improvement on similar interpretations. A Hart play of the kind he has done before.

CHEERFUL GIVERS (Fine Arts), April 22.—A beautiful characterization appears in the story, one suiting that bright little star, Bessie Love, and handled with skill. A clean and attractive number for any program.

HANDS UP (Fine Arts), April 29.—A railroad melodrama with a very picturesque and realistic hold up, but with little else of strong interest outside of a creditable performance by Wilfred Lucas and his support.

THE PINCH HITTER (Ince Kay Bee), April 29.—An amusing character comedy relating to the experiences of a country boy during his first experience at college, with Charles Ray in an exceptionally fine impersonation of the leading role.

SECRETS OF A BEAUTY PARLOR (Triangle-Keystone), April 29.—An active farce in the beauty parlor and bath, in which many old Keystone devices reappear. Mildly amusing.

World Pictures.

DARKEST RUSSIA (Peerless), April 23.—A five-reel screen version of a well-known melodrama, this picture preserves its original flavor and is well played, for the most part, by a cast headed by Alice Brady.

THE PAGE MYSTERY (Peerless), April 30.—June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell and Arthur Ashley are featured in this five-reel photoplay which has a fairly interesting plot and some beautiful winter scenes. The acting and production are equal to the demands. A longer review in printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE WARFARE OF THE FLESH (Warren Productions), April.—An ambitious effort that does not realize the possibilities of the subject, this five-reel photoplay has the benefit of a fine cast. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

THE BAR SINISTER (Lewis), April.—An eight-reel photoplay from a scenario by Anthony P. Kelley, this picture is of a high order of merit in every way. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

UNPREPAREDNESS REVEALED IN PATHE'S "OUR FIGHTING FORCES."

On April 29 Pathe will release a two reel patriotic picture that reveals our unpreparedness to resist the armies of invasion that may come to our shores. It shows conditions as they are, not as the pacifists would have them. The title is "Our Fighting Forces."

This two reel special feature has been prepared under the supervision of some of the greatest military experts of the country. Because this timely subject carries a big message to American people, Pathe will send to every exhibitor in the United States a special bulletin printed in two colors, showing some of the striking scenes and giving a big picture of the President with his war declaration.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"SOUTHERN JUSTICE" (Bluebird).

Lynn F. Reynolds, who has become favorably identified as Bluebird's out-of-door producer, has contributed the May 28 release on that program from his own story, "Southern Justice." Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez, who have always headed the Reynolds acting forces, will be featured and Elwood Bredell, Fred Church, Charles H. Mailes, Maxfield Stanley, Jean Hersholt and George Marsh will constitute the supporting company.

"Southern Justice" tells a story of life in a Kentucky village with its characters reflecting the homely types of a rural community with three old cronies, a Judge, a cobbler and the local newspaper publisher inspiring the plot. Practically all of the scenes were made in the open and Director Reynolds has managed to discover many beautiful locations to reflect with exactness the "atmosphere" of Kentucky.

Exhibitors and their public will recall the earlier Bluebird Lynn Reynolds contributed—"The Secret of the Swamp," "The Girl of Lost Lake," "The End of the Rainbow," "God's Crucible," and "Mutiny"; all of them "nature studies," conspicuous for the beauties of natural scenery to frame the action. "Southern Justice" is just one more of the same type of production—a play without crime or villainy, wholesome and creditable to the motion picture industry.

CONQUEST FILMS SHOWN IN ALBANY.

The first public showing up-state of the new Edison Conquest films attracted a capacity audience to Proctor's Leland theater, Albany, last Saturday morning. Mrs. F. W. Clark, executive secretary of the Albany Drama League, arranged with Forum Films, Inc., distributors of Edison Conquest Pictures, for the exhibition, which was held under the auspices of the league, one of the objects of which is the promotion of the "Better Pictures" movement.

The films shown were selected from the first two regular programs which are now ready for release. Among these were "Kidnapped," the adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's famous book; "Captains of To-Morrow," showing a dress parade at West Point"; "Puss in Boots," a novel presentation in animated silhouette, and a comedy, "He Couldn't Get Up in the Morning." An audience composed entirely of clergymen, clubwomen, social workers and educators witnessed the same program last Monday morning. Mrs. Clark, in speaking of the program, said: "We showed the pictures to some of Albany's best people, who were heartily enthusiastic in their praise. 'Pictures above the average grade' was the remark heard on all sides. And the kiddies were simply delighted."

"GOD'S MAN" IN LEGITIMATE HOUSES.

An indication of the tremendous interest which is being manifested throughout the country in the Frohman Amusement Corporation on the latest super-motion picture production, "God's Man," is evidenced by the fact that no less than 23 theaters in the state of Ohio alone, which have heretofore played nothing but the speaking stage attractions, have applied to the Frohman offices for booking of this picturization of George Bronson Howard's remarkable novel, nor has this abundance of inquiry been restricted to the state of Ohio alone, for according to the report of the business office of the Frohman Corporation, the extreme amount of inquiries for dates of booking which have been received from all over the United States and Canada speak for the definite success and advisability of the recently determined advertising plan adopted by the Frohman Corporation, namely, that of appealing direct to the exhibitors, the returns from which are to be turned over to the territorial rights buyers. This is perhaps one of the more potent parts of the Frohman plan for definite co-operation between the manufacturer and exchange man.

WALTHALL IN "THE SAINT'S ADVENTURE" (Essanay).

Henry B. Walthall is shown in a characterization entirely different from anything in which he has appeared on the screen in his next Essanay feature, "The Saint's Adventure." This production is a love drama, having a screen time approximately of 1 hour, 15 minutes. It will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, May 17.

Mr. Walthall essays the role of a young rector of a fashionable church. In his fight to "clean-up" the slums of his city, he discovers that his own church owns the biggest tenements. His congregation declines to furnish funds to remodel and cleanse them. The rector becomes ill and goes West. He reads while there of his reported death. Returning to the city in the disguise of a workman, he sets about his long cherished task. A woman of the slums by strange coincidence claims him as her missing husband. Though he refuses to live with her as such, he does not disillusionize her and enlists her aid in his work. The rector mobilizes the voters of the slums and with this political power forces his former congregation to tear down the unhealthy tenements and erect modern ones. At this time he is recognized by a member of the congregation. The rector, however, refuses to return to his old life, preferring to live among the people he has aided. He weds the woman who mistook him for her husband.

Scene from "The Saint's Adventure" (Essanay).

This story provides Mr. Walthall an unlimited field for his genius, and he has rendered a portrayal that will delight his millions of admirers. Mary Charleson is his leading woman. There are some magnificent scenic effects in "The Saint's Adventure." The photography is excellent. Arthur Berthelet directed the production.

LATEST GOWNS IN "THE AUCTION OF VIRTUE."

Naomi Childers, in the U. S. Amusement Corporation's new production, "The Auction of Virtue," will wear some of the latest gowns. These were designed by the famous French costumer, Paul Poiret, especially for the star.

Film Rentals on Scientific Basis

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Charting America to Establish Equitable System of Rental Charges.

SINCE the day of its formation last December Goldwyn has had a corps of experts investigating film rentals in every section of the country, and the results of this inquiry have been amazing indeed. It was found, of course, that no such thing as a fixed tariff for film rentals was adhered to by any of the factors now in films. Few rental distinctions were drawn between towns in western Pennsylvania or Ohio, for example, and towns of the same population in Alabama or Georgia—yet the differences in the types of citizenship are obvious.

The Goldwyn intention is to build productions of a quality far above the average, and they will not be in any sense cheap rental productions, but the main intent of the owners of Goldwyn has been to obtain the greatest possible distribution of its product and to keep the individual prints of its productions working for the longest possible number of consecutive days without break or interruption.

And this explains the basic reason for Goldwyn's efforts to re-chart America on a scientific salesmanship basis. All cities and towns in all of the film distribution territories are being catalogued for rentals on the basis of actual conditions in the communities themselves. Des Moines or Milwaukee each has a status of its own that is determined by Des Moines or Milwaukee conditions, and the conditions in Dallas, Tex., or Barre, Vermont, are purely local or regional conditions that cannot be approximated or "averaged" by merely striking certain levels for the country at large.

When this gigantic task of price-cataloguing America has been completed, Goldwyn claims that it will possess a tariff as complete and thorough as are the railroad rate tariffs established by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Department of Commerce and Labor. No secret is made of the fact that former agents and executives in these two departments of the Government have performed this work for Goldwyn.

By establishing and adhering to a system of this kind the Goldwyn organization in a measure will free itself from certain competitive conditions that exist in the industry and have existed from the beginning.

Leaving motion pictures for a moment to establish outside comparisons, it can be pointed out that while there are several safety razor companies in active competition for popular approval, each with a huge aggregate gross sale, the Gillette razor remains practically without competition, and certainly without a form of competition that makes price-cutting necessary.

Several talking machine companies and several makers of uniformly used articles like shaving soap compete with each other on a gigantic scale, and spend a huge aggregate sum in advertising—yet with little or no bearing on price-cutting. In other words, they have established standards of quality and standards of price in their trade fields, and do not find it necessary to depart from those standards. Those comparisons are explanatory of the Goldwyn purpose and effort.

Without gouging exhibitors for excessive rentals, without piling on all the traffic will bear in the matter of first, second, third or fourth, or any other "runs," Goldwyn expects to make its productions come within a rental range that will make them generally used throughout the world. Great manufacturers in other lines and the world's ablest merchants have made huge fortunes by converting this theory into applied business practice.

This effort, together with marked evidence of exhibitor approval, accounted for the Goldwyn decision to own and operate its own branches throughout the country, and to market its productions on the "open booking" basis. Goldwyn properly felt that no outside factors or regional partners could thoroughly absorb these policies and put them into effect with the sincerity that the Goldwyn owners themselves would.

Goldwyn is not yet ready to cite the differences in its sales, prices and methods, and those that have been practiced in the past, or to give outsiders the benefits of the costly information it has gathered through high-priced specialists in its employ, but the system itself is obviously revolutionary.

SELZNICK DROPS RELEASE DATES.

No more release dates on Selznick-Pictures. This is the latest announcement by Lewis J. Selznick. "After this," says Mr. Selznick, "when one of our pictures is finished, it will immediately go to our branches to be placed on the open market. The exhibitor can get it there whenever he wants it. His release date is my release date.

"To set a certain date for the release of a picture all over the country is to say that conditions are the same everywhere at the same time. This is ridiculous. A declaration of war, a local reform wave, a political campaign, a great disaster, a state going dry or adopting woman suffrage—any one of these things and hundreds of others can make it advisable to postpone playing a feature in a certain territory from the date set by the manufacturer.

"The exhibitor who selects his own dates is running his own business, and he can protect himself against these conditions. He can switch his bookings and increase his receipts by playing each picture at the psychological moment. If he is tied down to a release date he is letting the producer run his own business."

Peter Dawe Likes the Fotoplayer

PETER DAWE entered the moving picture business in 1911, having bought out the Bijou theater in Bridgeport that was playing vaudeville and pictures and was a losing proposition. Mr. Dawe finally made up his mind to cut out vaudeville after losing very nearly all he had and run straight pictures. Upon acting on this Mr. Dawe made the Bijou a paying proposition. Shortly thereafter he built the Palace theater in East Bridgeport, and this theater also is doing great.

Mr. Dawe says that he is always on the lokout to please his patrons, and soon after the Fotoplayer came into the market he bought one for his Bijou theater, and found his business increased 15 to 20 per cent. Mr. Dawe thereupon decided to place a larger instrument in the Bijou theater and placed his order with the American Photo Player Co. for a pipe organ, and has arranged with this company to place the instrument now in the Bijou theater in his Palace theater.

Peter Dawe.

Success in the motion picture business, Mr. Dawe states, is the direct result of strict attention to business and exhibiting the best and cleanest pictures that can be obtained. But he goes on to say that you must not forget music, and that he considers good music to be one-half of the show. Good pictures are no good without music, but you can pass a poor picture once in a while if your music is good. Mr. Dawe further states that he would not be without his organs for any money and would advise all managers and exhibitors, if possible, to buy Fotoplayers, as he has proved what a great success they are.

"THE CALL OF HER PEOPLE" RELEASED APRIL 30.

Announcement has just been made by the Metro-Pictures Corporation that "The Call of Her People," the first of Metro's seven reel attraction pictures, in which Ethel Barrymore is the star, will be specially released April 30.

This release marks a new epoch in motion pictures, the showing of a seven reel attraction feature based on the masterpiece of a master playwright, and interpreted by a great star.

"The Call of Her People" is a picture version of Edward Sheldon's great play, "Egypt," which was introduced to the speaking stage by Margaret Anglin. It has been adapted and elaborated for the screen into its present impressive form by June Mathis, directed by John W. Noble and photographed by Herbert O. Carleton.

Miss Barrymore is seen throughout the photodrama as a gypsy girl, Egypt.

A notable cast supports Miss Barrymore in "The Call of Her People." Herbert Whittier, seen with the star in "The Awakening of Helena Richie," plays opposite her in the role of Young Faro. William B. Davidson plays Van Kleet, the young society man, who wants to marry Egypt. The wealthy old "Gorgio," Lindsay, is played by William Mandeville. Frank Montgomery, playing Faro Black, is a favorite Metro player. Mrs. Allan Walker, Hugh Jeffrey and Helen Arnold are others in the cast of this important production.

IBSEN PLAY FOR MUTUAL MAY. 7.

May 7 has been set by the Mutual Film Corporation for the release of "Hedda Gabler," the screen version of Henrik Ibsen's play, in which Nance O'Neil is starred. This is the second production in which Miss O'Neil has appeared on the Mutual schedule, the first being "Mrs. Balfame."

"Hedda Gabler" was filmed at the studio of the Frank Powell producing company.

In support of Miss O'Neil appear Aubrey Beattie, Lillian Paige, Einar Linden, Ruth Byron, Alfred Hickman and Edith Campbell Walker.

"IDEA BOOK" ON "RAILROAD RAIDERS" ISSUED.

The new Helen Holmes photo-novel, "The Railroad Raiders," is going out to theater men all over the country with every service aid conceivable to make this feature serial popular.

The latest help to the exhibitor for this twentieth century serial is an "Idea Book," of which Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, is the conductor. This book, attractively designed and conveniently arranged, hits the exhibitor between the eyes, with a startling cover in black and white on orange, with a picture of Helen Holmes and a speeding train to command attention.

Berst Outlines Pathe Policy

Says Engagement of Mrs. Vernon Castle for Gold Roosters Is Illustrative of New Plan.

"THE engagement of Mrs. Vernon Castle at a very high salary illustrates our recognition of the value of continuity in advertising," said J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, when asked if the securing of Mrs. Castle meant further notable acquisitions to Pathe's staff of stars. "During the past year I have entirely changed our policy regarding Gold Rooster Plays. We will have no more stars hired for one picture. I realize that the exhibitor, to get the maximum attendance at his theater, must benefit not only by his current advertising, but by that which he has done in the past. If he has played Mrs. Castle in 'Patria' she is known to his audiences. When he advertises her as the star of a Gold Rooster Play he benefits not only by whatever advertising he and we have done on her in 'Patria,' but he also benefits by the very favorable impression she has made upon his patrons. His work is half done before he starts.

"Mrs. Castle, I think I am safe in saying, has received more publicity during the past twelve months than any other star of the stage or screen. The International began to publicize 'Patria' early last year and in the many Hearst newspapers and magazines as well as many others have appeared thousands of columns of stories about her and her photographs have been published far and wide.

"This, in conjunction with her decided talent and charm, make her a most notable addition and asset to the Pathe program and a star whose boxoffice value is second to none in the exhibitor's theater.

"Hereafter our stars will be identified with the Pathe program alone. They will not work in one picture for us to-day, in another for a competitor to-morrow, and in a play on the stage the day after. We will select them most carefully and they must answer every requirement of ability, experience, attractive personality, reputation and box office value. Those whom we have already chosen, Pearl White, Gladys Hulette, Mollie King, Florence La Badie, Baby Marie Osborne, Creighton Hale, Warner Oland, Harold Lloyd and Frederick Warde, conform admirably to those requirements.

"By being able to concentrate our advertising and publicity upon these players it will be much more profitable to the exhibitors. Many players of the stage who are well known in the larger cities have neved been heard of in the smaller towns. Some big New York favorites are rarely mentioned or seen by theatergoers in such large cities as Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco. Our policy will be to have stars who are more than a mere name in every section of the country. National and not local celebrity and popularity will be our aim.

"The engagement of Mrs. Castle does presage the engagement of other motion picture favorites. Exhibitors who play Pathe pictures may rest assured that the Pathe program, when our present plans are completed, will be second to none in the country in box office value."

VARIETY IN GAUMONT MAGAZINE REEL.

There is one aspect of the magazine reel which should have the attention of every exhibitor. That is the variety of subjects upon the reel. Now every exhibitor recognizes the importance of single reels upon his programs, and the second step is to realize that his patrons get their greatest enjoyment by having a number of subjects. A study of the subjects offered upon Gaumont's "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, well illustrates this. There are always five sections, each distinct from all the others.

Domestic Science Boy's Class (Gaumont).

For "Reel Life" No. 54, the current issue, the Gaumont editorial staff has provided pictures which make a general appeal. From the first it has been the contention of Gaumont that a single-reel is not a "filler." It contains just as much amusement value as the same length of photodrama or comedy—and often more. "Proteges of a Big City" is as interesting an account of how a city takes care of its feeble-minded children as one could read in a magazine. It shows the humane methods employed and sets standards for other cities to emulate.

"Sleeping Bags for Soldiers" takes one to a different field, and a third distinct change is offered with "Lifting a Locomotive." Again, "A Submarine Oil Field" enters an entirely different realm; and "Making Grape Juice" is quite different from all the others. Thus the spectator is kept on the alert. No subject is on the screen long enough to tire him, something kept in mind in all Gaumont pictures.

New Mary Pickford Picture Finished

"A Romance of the Redwoods" Under the Direction of Cecil B. De Mille Heralded as an Artcraft Triumph.

MARY PICKFORD'S newest vehicle for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, following "A Poor Little Rich Girl," has just been completed at the Lasky studios in California under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille. Judging from the reports from the West Coast, the new subject should prove one of the greatest triumphs yet presented by Artcraft.

Her newest subject discloses Miss Pickford in a characterization entirely different from anything in which she has heretofore been identified and in a role which gives her unlimited opportunity to display a wonderful dramatic finesse such as she has never before evinced.

The story has to do with the adventures of Jenny Lawrence, a New England miss, who is suddenly thrust into one of the wildest California mining towns of the famous gold rush of '49. How she falls in love with a road agent and by a clever ruse saves his life at the hands of the vigilance committee, is woven into the story in the masterly fashion of the two authors, Cecil B. De Mille and Jeannie Macpherson, it is announced.

The scenes of the pictures were taken in the exact locale around which the story was written, many of them being photographed in California's famous forest of gigantic redwoods. The incidents in the famous mining camps of Strawberry Flats were photographed under the auspices of a number of the members of the California Pioneer Society, and many of the persons taking part in the scenes are those who participated in the famous gold rush.

Under the supervision of Director De Mille the picture is now being cut and assembled at the Lasky plant and an advance print is expected by the Artcraft executives in New York in the very near future. It is felt that the production will prove a revelation among film circles when it is shown here and arrangements are now being made for the engagement of a big theater in which to hold an advance exhibition for the trade.

IVAN'S "ONE LAW FOR BOTH" FINISHED.

Cutting and titling of Ivan Film Productions' "One Law for Both" will be completed in the next few days. The picture, which it took five months to make, is heralded as Ivan Abramson's greatest achievement and is classed as the best Ivan Super Special. The claim that the picture is an all star production, with the exception of the big Russo-military and the tremendous mob scenes, seems to be justified. Rita Jolivet, leading lady with Otis Skinner in "Kismet," Leah Baird, winsome Helen Arnold as the ingenue and Catharine Greene are representing the female leads; while headed by James Morrison, we find Vincent Serrano, Pedro de Cordoba, Paul Capellani and Anders Randolf in the male cast. Every one of those mentioned has a distinct and important part, and, as Mr. Abramson says, "So complete is the harmony of action that the play stands forth as a perfect jewel depicting various shades of artistry, brought about by the best efforts of co-operation between the actors and director." The atmosphere is part Russian, part American. "One Law for Both" is by far the biggest thing yet produced by the Ivan people—biggest in sustained action, biggest in the cast, biggest in expense, and biggest in length.

"BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" TO BE RETITLED.

All prints of "The Battle Cry of Peace," the big preparedness spectacle released in September, 1915, by Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., have been called in and will be re-edited and retitled. The picture, after it has been rehabilitated, will be renamed "The Battle Cry of War."

This announcement of the change in name is made by the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. in order that exhibitors who may book the picture under the new name will not be misled in any way. They will be booking "The Battle Cry of Peace," with certain matter eliminated and certain titles changed, in order that the picture will be even a greater lesson to show men of the United States why they should hasten to enlist in one of the three branches of the service.

As originally released, certain titles in "The Battle Cry of Peace" might be construed as arguments against war. Taking the picture as a whole such a construction would be abortive, according to the producers.

After all the prints have been completely revamped, new advertising paper of all kinds will be issued and the picture will be pushed as an enlistment argument.

Four New Selznick Pictures

Subjects Featuring Robert Warwick, Hazel Dawn and Norma Talmadge Nearly Ready for Release.

WITH two big successes—Clara Kimball Young in "The Easiest way" and Norma Talmadge in "The Law of Compensation—already on the market as April releases, the Selznick spring campaign got into full swing this week. Four more Selznick pictures are rapidly nearing completion, one of which at least will be given its premiere before the end of the month. This will be Robert Warwick's second contribution to the Selznick output, "The Silent Master," an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's brilliant novel of adventure and mystery, "The Court of St. Simon." With this production Director Leonce Perret, famous in France as the greatest of all film makers in that country, makes his American debut, and a real screen sensation may be expected.

In "The Silent Master" Mr. Warwick is supported by two widely known stage and screen beauties, Anna Little and Olive Tell. The production is remarkable for the number and variety of extraordinary settings devised by the director and the story is typical of the tales that have made Oppenheim one of the most popular writers of the day.

Following the release of this new Warwick picture the Selznick exchanges will present Herbert Brenon's production of Louis Joseph Vance's famous thriller, "The Lone Wolf," featuring the beautiful and talented Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. Mr. Brenon is filming the final scenes of this stirring story at his studio on Hudson Heights and by the end of the month the picture will be cut and assembled, and ready for a showing to the trade press. In making "The Lone Wolf" Mr. Brenon has entered a field distinct from that in which he achieved his recent triumphs. The appeal of "War Brides" and "The Eternal Sin," his first two Selznick-Pictures, lay in the sweeping tragedy of their themes. "The Lone Wolf" is sheer melodrama, of the most absorbing character. Further than that, it is a modern story in every way, even to the point of making full use of high powered automobiles and aeroplanes to provide certain thrilling episodes that will hold what the exhibitor and public most demand—Punch, with a capital P.

The second May release will present that popular young star, Norma Talmadge, in her third Selznick offering, an adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's fascinating story of South African life, "Poppy." For this production Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corp., engaged that admirable director, Edward Jose, and a particularly brilliant cast of players headed by such noted stage favorites as Eugene O'Brien and Frederick Perry. The story offers Miss Talmadge an opportunity to display an unusual range of characterization, presenting her first as a child of fourteen and later as a mature woman torn by conflicting emotions.

The latter part of May or the first of June will see the release of the third Robert Warwick Selznick-Picture, entitled "A Modern Othello." This is an original story by Director Perret and was so striking in theme that Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corp., laid aside his plans to produce an adaptation of a widely known novel in favor of the Perret idea. The production is well under way at the Selznick Studios in the Bronx and admirers of Mr. Warwick's first Selznick offering, "The Argyle Case," will be pleased with the announcement that the charming Elaine Hammerstein again appears opposite the star.

It has been announced that Clara Kimball Young's next Selznick-Picture would be an adaptation of Virginia Terhune VandeWater's story, "Why I Left My Husband." It has been decided not to produce this story and in its place Miss Young will be seen in another modern American story by a famous writer, the name of which is being temporarily withheld. Charles Giblyn will direct the picture and is rapidly completing the scenario. Work on the picture will begin this week, Miss Young having returned from a well deserved vacation of four weeks.

"THE HALF BACK" (Edison Conquest).

April 30 will see the first program of the Edison Conquest Pictures released through Forum Films, Inc. The dramatic feature—three-fifths of the entire lock-reel program—is "The Half Back," which, as the title indicates, is a story of the gridiron. Paul H. Sloane made the scenario from Ralph Henry Barbour's widely read book of the same title. Benjamin Tourbett directed the production, and the photography was done by Frederick Brace.

"The Half Back," like many others of Barbour's works, has all the elements that go to make up a good, wholesome American story. It has action and snap and punch, and points more or less of a moral without being in any sense a preachment. It is scened at Hilton School, where Joel March—played by Yale Boss—does not let his slender income keep him from doing something for Hilton on the athletic field. One of the big punches of the action, of course, is a football game. The zest injected into this scene will doubtless surprise those who may not know that it was filmed during an actual high school game at the Orange Playground, Orange, N. J.

Jessie Stevens and William Wadsworth, in the roles of Joel's parents, are prominent members of the case of "The Half Back" and furnish much of the comedy which runs throughout. The photography is exceptionally sharp, and the details that mean so much in such a production have been well taken care of. As a red-blooded American story, crammed with action and entertaining to all members of the family group, it is a most appropriate feature to introduce the Edison Conquest Pictures to the public. In addition to "The Half Back," the first program of Forum Films, Inc., includes "Captains of Tomorrow," showing the impressive sight of a dress parade of cadets at the United States Military Academy, West Point; "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," mannikin stunts that blaze a new humor path; "The Sea Horse," the study of a little known fish; "A Vanishing Race," a scenic taken on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, and "Puss in Boots," a fairy tale told in silhouette.

GOLDWYN GETS RIGHTS TO "THAIS."

Since the acquisition of Mary Garden to their stellar constellation, the Goldwyn Producing firm have been negotiating for the purchase of the world's motion picture production rights to Anatole France's famous novel, "Thais." After a conference between Sam Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn and Adolphe Osso, the latter representing the author, which lasted all afternoon, the deal was finally consummated, when, what is said to have been the largest amount ever paid for a manuscript, was handed to Adolphe Osso, whereupon the contracts were signed, sealed and delivered. Goldwyn will commence production immediately.

"HER BETTER SELF" NEXT PAULINE FREDERICK PICTURE.

"Her Better Self," a powerful dramatic story written especially for Pauline Frederick by Margaret Turnbull, will be the celebrated Famous Players star's next vehicle on the Paramount program. It is scheduled for release by Paramount on May 21.

Thomas Meighan, who has appeared opposite Miss Frederick in her most recent productions, which were "Sapho," "The Slave Market" and "Sleeping Fires," again plays opposite the star in this picture, in which he plays the role of a young doctor. Alice Hollister and Maude Turner Gordon are among the excellent cast in this production, which is directed by Robert Vignola, who has already directed a number of Miss Frederick's greatest screen successes.

REMARKABLE PHOTOGRAPHIC EFFECTS IN "THE PRIMROSE RING."

The Lasky-Paramount adaptation of Ruth Sawyer's delightful story "The Primrose Ring," in which Mae Murray is starred, has given Director Robert Leonard an excellent opportunity in devising weird and fantastic scenes. During the course of the story Miss Murray, in the role of a nurse in a children's hospital, tells a number of fairy stories to her little patients in the hope of diverting their minds from their pain.

Scene from "The Primrose Ring" (Lasky).

These stories are enacted before the camera as part of the production, and it is in the handling of these scenes that Mr. Leonard and his cameraman, Charles Rosher, have found an outlet for their genius. Miss Murray's fairy tale relates the story of the liberation of the children from the Ogre Pain through the ministrations of the White Knight, who is, of course, the young doctor in charge of the hospital.

For these scenes a beautiful fairy forest was constructed at the Lasky studio, with its giant twisted tree-trunks, its dense foliage and the ubiquitous fairy toadstool nestling beneath the trees. Here the fairies come and dance about the White Knight and his Lady Fair—who happens to be Miss Murray—in celebration of his great deed in conquering the Ogre. By exceptionally clever trick photography the Ogre is shown in giant stature, towering over the tiny children whom he seeks to devour. They are shown shrinking in terror before his gigantic form as he stretches forth his huge talons to gather them into his hideous maw.

VICTOR MOORE IN "BALLADS AND BOLOGNA."

Victor Moore's next release (April 23), "Ballads and Bologna," was written for him by Jerome N. Wilson. It serves to give Vic another new kind of part to add to his already long list of screen comedy parts. In this picture we see him as a delicatessen dealer working hard to make both ends meet.

His wife is a woman with a desire to sing in opera and she is upstairs with her highbrow friends helping to spend all of Vic's money. This lends a situation to start some real comedy. It does, for Vic is desperate and, picking up a newspaper, he finds an ad of a hypnotist where he can learn to hypnotize for ten dollars. He goes there and takes his lesson. It is some lesson, for he starts home and on his way manages to get everything he wants by hypnotizing the police, the street car conductor, etc. He arrives home and gets busy at once to try it on his wife, for he is bound to finish her singing ideas.

She is giving a musicale, and he informs her she is going to sing as she has never sung before. He practically does what Svengali did to "Trilby," only when Svengali got "Trilby" started he could stop her. Vic gets his wife started and cannot stop her. The trouble begins for fair then, for the neighbors start throwing things at her to try and stop her, but it is of no avail. She has gotten stuck on the word "Beware" and there she stays, repeating it continuously. How Vic got the hypnotism turned off, you will want to see. It is a series of laughs from start to end.

Mr. Moore's company gives him great support, as each of them have splendid parts. They include Louise Carver, D. L. Don, Harry Foy and others.

BIG CAST IN PATHE'S NEW SERIAL.

"The Neglected Wife," Pathe's next serial, based on Mabel Herbert Urner's famous stories, "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and "The Woman Alone," is announced for release May 13, with Ruth Roland, remembered for her splendid work in "Who Pays?" and "The Red Circle," and an all star cast, including Roland Bottomley, the celebrated English actor, associated on the stage with the beloved Ellen Terry.

The eternal triangle is the basis of this wonderful human interest story, photodramatized from Mrs. Urner's books by Will M. Ritchey. As an unusual twist, there is another man who falls deeply in love with "the other woman."

The complete cast of important characters is announced as follows: Margaret Warner, a beautiful young girl, striving to succeed as a magazine writer, Ruth Roland; Horace Kennedy, a successful attorney, Roland Bottomley; Mary Kennedy, his wife, Corinne Grant; Frank Norwood, a magazine editor, Philo McCullough; Edgar Doyle, a crooked lawyer, disbarred by Kennedy, his bitterest enemy, Neil Hardin.

KING BEE COMEDIES IN DEMAND.

The King Bee Comedies, made by the corporation of that name, in the studios at Jacksonville, Florida, have already secured the favorable opinions of exhibitors and the public, although the showings so far made have been of a semi-private nature only. The rich humor of the productions has become so widely known throughout the country that innumerable requests for state right franchises have reached the offices of the corporation in the Longacre Building, New York. Only exchanges in the highest standing will be placed on the state right list.

The director of these comedies, Arvid E. Gillstrom, whose reputation was made under the "Keystone" brand, is putting over some side splitting stories. The audience at William Brandt's New Albany Theater, Brooklyn, to whom the first of the comedies was shown on a recent evening, without preliminary notice, gave the picture a tumultuous reception. The popularity of Billy West and his associates, including Ethel Burton, Babe Hardy and others, is assured.

VICTORY FOR "PURITY" IN CLEVELAND.

The Masterpiece Film Attractions announces that, in accordance with the decision of the Municipal Court of Cleveland, rendered April 16, 1917, it has scored a complete victory in its case against the City of Cleveland, where the exhibition of the motion picture photoplay "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson, had been stopped. This production will now be allowed to run without further interference, not only in Cleveland, but also in the entire State of Ohio, as the court in its decision held that it is not within the jurisdiction of a city or municipality to interfere with, or stop the exhibition of a motion picture production after it had been officially passed by the Ohio State Board of Censors.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU IN "THE DEBT."

Four contrasting parts are played by Marjorie Rambeau in "The Debt," the third of her productions for Mutual, released April 23.

The opening and closing scenes are laid in Europe and the remainder in the United States. There are some immense and gorgeous sets of the European home of the countess which stand out in strong contrast to the one small room in the tenement which later becomes the home of Ann—Marjorie Rambeau.

All of the troubles that come to Ann, the countess, after she marries a man of the people in an effort to pay off a debt of honor, are caused by too much mother-in-law. The vixenish woman, jealous of her son's love for his wife, and ever anxious to cast reproach upon the young wife, is played by Anne Sutherland, who gives a most successful impersonation of the role.

Paul Everton plays the man of the people who marries

Scene from "The Debt" (Mutual).

Ann and helps her pay off the debt and then, egged on by his mother, turns her out of the house.

Jerome Lawlor is Baron Moreno, who forsakes Ann in her time of trouble and later follows her to America and tries to tempt her to leave her poverty and fly with him.

Agnes Eyre is "The Girl," a plaything of the hour for the Baron, and gives a most graphic portrayal of the happy, carefree girl who slowly grows older and sadder each day as she realizes the character of the man for whom she has deserted her home.

Paramount Program

Margaret Illington Makes Screen Debut Week of April 30 in "Sacrifice." Marie Doro to Appear in "Heart's Desire."

THE week beginning April 30 marks two significant and important factions on the Paramount program, namely, the return of Marie Doro in a Famous Players production and the screen debut of Margaret Illington. Miss Doro, who has been playing in the Lasky studios for over a year, will be seen in "Heart's Desire," a story of Brittany which was staged in Florida, and Miss Illington's first screen appearance will be that of "Sacrifice," written by Charles Kenyon and produced by Lasky.

"Heart's Desire," the title of Miss Doro's picture, refers to a certain species of rose which plays an important part in the story. For the purpose of staging this picture Director Grandon took twenty-six players to Florida to make the picture, among whom are Mario Majoroni, Albert Roscoe, Jean Gautier, Helen Dahl, Gertrude Norman, Ida Darling, Edwin Sturgis and Harry Lee.

"Sacrifice," the premier photoplay in which Margaret Illington will appear, was adapted from the story of Charles Kenyon by Beatrice DeMille and Leighton Osmun. It is an interesting coincidence that it was Miss Illington who appeared in the first play which Charles Kenyon had produced upon the stage, "Kindling," and it will be remembered that she secured a tremendous success in his great drama. Mr. Kenyon has been engaged by the Lasky company to write photoplays for Miss Illington, and "Sacrifice" represents his first contribution.

Despite the fact that Miss Illington is a screen novice, her first picture will show her in the difficult role of playing two different characters at the same time. She will appear as Mary Stephani, the daughter of an important personage in the little kingdom of Zandria, and as Vesta Boris, a notorious dancer in a neighboring principality, Nordoff. Jack Holt, Winter Hall and Noah Beery are among the principal players in support of Miss Illington.

Surrounding the program for the week are three very interesting short reel subjects. The sixty-fourth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the sixty-fifth of the series of weekly trips around the world personally conducted by Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, in which he takes his fellow journeyers to Curious Columbo, and a Black Diamond comedy entitled "Her Iron Will."

In the sixty-fourth edition of the Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the four subjects dealt with are "The Poison Doll," "Salvaging the Submarine's Prey," "Turkey Hunting in South Carolina," and "The Quacky Doodles" in another of their animated comedies. The most interesting is the first subject named, in which Prof. R. D. Hogdon, a chemist of national repute, pictures the tremendous amount of poison that is used in materials which go to make up the cheap candies that children buy with their pennies at the little candy shops. The method of bringing home this important subject is decidedly novel, and will make a very interesting feature.

W. D. Sisson, the ingenious American inventor, shows in this week's screen magazine how the valuable cargoes which have been sunk by torpedoes can be raised and saved from everlasting loss, while the subject on turkey hunting is unique in its every particular, and comedy is injected into the release by the animated story of the Quacky Doodle who goes to war.

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, in the sixty-fifth of his series of weekly trips conducted exclusively for Paramount takes his journeyers to "Curious Columbo."

A decidedly unique comedy in which a great amount of excellent trick photography is brought into play is the single-reel Black Diamond comedy entitled "Her Iron Will," which is released during this week.

SHERRILL WILL MOVE TO TIMES BUILDING.

May first will be moving day for President William L. Sherrill and the executive staff and general offices of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. To the right of Mr. Sherrill's office and overlooking the Rialto theater will be the private office of Joe Farnham. To Farnham's right will come the domain of Secretary Joe Schwartz, and to the right again, and commanding another angle of vision of Broadway, are arranged the general business offices, bookkeeping and stenographic department of the Frohman organization, completing the balance of the suite of both the Broadway and Seventh avenue frontage are arranged the offices, studio manager, technical director, scenario department, publicity, advertising and service department.

The Frohman studio will remain at 140 Amity street, Flushing, wherein there will be maintained the office of the casting director, etc. Under the supervision of Technical Director Kathe the new Frohman offices have been especially decorated in harmonious color schemes.

"THE EVIL SAG" (Selig).

The story of a deep and revengeful plot, and of how enduring love finally triumphs is, in brief, a description of the latest Selig drama, "The Evil Sag," announced by General Film Company. The evil sag is, indeed, an evil and mysterious locality. It is one corner of a lonely farm, an evil place, because of the fact that more than one lifeless body has been found in its vicinity. Death seemingly had come in a mysterious way, for no marks of violence were found on any of the bodies. How the mystery of the evil sag is discovered through the love of a young woman is an unusual climax to an unusual story. Otis B. Thayer directed the play, which was written by John B. Langan.

"Baseball at Mudville" is another of the Selig comedies now proving so popular in General Film service. It is the story of a young pitcher who signs to play with the "Bloomer Girls." However, at Mudville, during the heat of the conflict, all is discovered, and the "Bloomer Girls" have some exciting experiences.

"SEVEN DEADLY SINS" FOR AUSTRALIA.

The Australian rights for "Seven Deadly Sins," the McClure series of seven five-reel features, have been sold to Australasian Films, Ltd., represented in the United States by Millard Johnson, for one of the highest prices this important company ever has paid for seven photoplays.

Australasian Films will distribute "Seven Deadly Sins" to the fifty theaters it owns, the 400 theaters affiliated with it and to several hundred others in Australia, New Zealand and Java, and to the one theater in the Fiji Islands.

A powerful advertising campaign will back "Seven Deadly Sins" in Australasia. The series-of-features idea, of course, is new to Australia, but Mr. Johnson expects it to sweep his territory as it has swept the United States.

ROOSEVELT O. K'S "TROOPER 44."

"Trooper 44," the five-reel feature photodrama, just released by the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, and for which Jos. R. Miles, 220 West Forty-second street, is sales-agent on a States-Rights basis, has been warmly endorsed by ex-President Theodore Roosevelt.

"The Force which Katherine Mayo describes so interestingly," writes Mr. Roosevelt, "from the standpoint of sound American citizenship is so interesting and so valuable that it should be in every public library and every school library in the land."

PRIZMA PICTURES AT SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Before members of the National Academy of Sciences in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., Monday night, April 16, Prizma Incorporated exhibited several reels of motion photography in natural colors, the first of their kind ever to be shown before that distinguished body. A varied program set forth the possibilities of color and motion applicable to the screen and proved highly entertaining to the scientists who were gathered at Washington in annual meeting.

REEL LIFE ONE YEAR OLD.

With the issue of "Reel Life" which goes to the screen on April 26 the Mutual-Gaumont single-reel topical will complete the first year of its existence. This screen magazine has been successful even beyond the expectations of its sponsors, and has amply demonstrated the growing demand for motion pictures of this nature. An unusually attractive number has been arranged to celebrate its first anniversary.

Universal Preaches Patriotism

Program Features for the Week of April 30 Is a Strong Patriotic Subject.

A POWERFUL drama of unusual timeliness heads the program of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the week of April 30. It is a Universal Special Attraction in five parts, "The Birth of Patriotism," from a story by I. A. R. Wylie, scenarioized and directed by E. Magnus Ingleton, featuring Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson.

Treating the war from the standpoint of those who stay at home, it pictures the gradual awakening of patriotism in those who aid the cause of enlistment after they have been aroused. The courage that grips the women of warring nations and the sacrifices they make that their country may have the services of their men are treated with unusual care.

"The Birth of Patriotism" tells the story of a young man whose domestic life suffers through his own carelessness and the opposite carefulness of his wife. He abandons his home and disregards social and moral codes. When the war breaks out he espouses the cause of his nation, enlisting and leaving behind two women.

The wife goes to the other woman, and, born out of grief at the news of the death of the man, a patriotic companionship ensues, each working for her nation's welfare. Their friendship comes to an end through the news that the death report was erroneous and that the man is returning. Follows then a sacrifice on the part of one of the women that makes for an exceptional ending to this timely war story.

Numbers of battle scenes are shown with a realism that is in keeping with the unusual treatment of the characters in the story. Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson head a cast of unusual strength, in which Lydia Yeamans Titus, Ann Kronan, Ernie Shields, Frank Coffray and Edward Brown have the more important supporting roles.

"What a Clue Will Do," a Nestor comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edyth Roberts, will also be released on April 30, and in this comedy this fun-making trio have one of the best opportunities that have been given them in many months.

Universal's program feature for Tuesday, May 1, is the Gold Seal, three reel Western drama, "Bill Brennan's Claim," in which Neal Hart and Janet Eastman are jointly featured. This interesting story of claim jumping and subsequent recovery is from the pen of Shelley Sutton, prepared for the screen by Charles Wilson, Jr., and was directed by George Marshall. A strong supporting cast includes Joe Rickson, Raymond Whittaker, Jack Walters, Tom Grimes, "Bud" Osborne and Bill Gills.

A Victor one reel comedy, "Flat Harmony," featuring Eileen Sedgwick, is the other Universal offering for May 1. Tom Curtis is the author of this story, which was directed by Allen Curtis.

In addition to Universal Animated Weekly, No. 70, on Wednesday, May 2, a one-reel L-KO comedy, "The Cabaret Scratch," featuring Dan Russel, will be released. Incidents of great war interest characterize the Universal Weekly of this date.

On Thursday, May 3, Matt Moore and Jane Gail are featured in a two-reel Victor Comedy, "Pots and Poems," written by Samuel Greiner, and produced by Matt Moore.

"The Penalty of Silence," a Big U. drama, in which Wallace Reid is starred, is the other Universal release of this day. Dorothy Davenport and Edward Brady are in the supporting cast of "The Penalty of Silence," wihch is a strong story of the woods.

"A Midnight Mystery," an Imp two reel mysetry drama, is the feature offering for Friday, May 4. Thomas Jefferson and Betty Shade are starred in this unusual story by Clarissa Mackie, picturized by A. W. Coedeway, and produced by William V. Mong. In the supporting cast important parts are played by Charles Perley, Harry Holden, E. P. Evers and Mrs. Hernandez.

Issue No. 17 of the Universal Screen Magazine and a Victor one reel comedy also are released on May 4. The Victor comedy, "A Darling in Buckskin," was written by Joe Ryan and scenarioized and directed by William V. Mong. Gertrude Aster is featured and supporting her are Joe Ryan and M. Walters.

A Bison two reel mountain drama is the feature Universal offering of Saturday, May 5. 'Little Moccasins," the story of which was written by Harvey Gates and picturized and directed by Millard K. Wilson, who also is featured in it with Edyth Roberts. "Little Moccasins" is an outdoor story of mountain life and romance and has the appeal of drama emphasized by wonderful scenes and picturesque settings.

The other Universal release for this day is a Joker comedy (one reel), featuring Gale Henry and William Franey. "Left in the Soup" is from a story by Jack Cunningham and was produced by W. W. Beaudine. Milburn Moranti and Lillian Peacock are in the cast.

Sunday, May 6, is marked by a war drama and two comedies. The drama is a two reel Big U., featuring Grace Cunard. "True to Their Colors" is a drama of the Civil War, and tells a human interest story with an unusual appeal. Miss Cunard, always charming, is especially delightful in the appealing role that is hers in this Universal production.

The eighth episode of "The Voice on the Wire," entitled "High Finance," featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, lends greater mystery to this absorbing detective serial and the two reels are replete with surprises. Polly, in greater peril than ever, is trailed by Shirley, who, with the aid of others, tries to remove dangers that threaten her. In this he does not succeed and this chapter, "High Finance," ends with interest heightened in the final outcome.

Billie Ritchie, in an L-KO one reel comedy, "Scrambled Hearts," and a Powers cartoon comedy, "A Barnyard Nightmare," combined with a Dorsey educational film, "Industrial China," complete the offerings for the day.

W. M. Lewis in Educational Films

Founder of Mitchell-Lewis Motor Company Becomes Associated With E. W. Hammonds.

WILLIAM MITCHELL LEWIS, founder and president of the Mitchell-Lewis Motor Company, from which he retired last year, has entered the educational field with Educational Films Corporation of America, 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. Lewis is perhaps better known as a recent nominee for the Governorship of Wisconsin, in which State he is a leading public figure, and connected with various of the State's big business and banking firms.

Upon his retirement from the Mitchell-Lewis Motor Company, which was his main business interest until last year, Mr. Lewis started to look the industries of the country over with a view of making a considerable investment. The motion picture industry, as the newest and fastest growing, appealed to Mr. Lewis very strongly, and upon investigation he decided its best field was that of educational pictures, and so selected the Educational Films Corporation of America as the firm to feel his business activities.

"It is not altogether certain," says E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, "that we shall have Mr. Lewis's active attention right now.

"This is due to the national crisis and it is understood that because of Mr. Lewis's military experience as Captain of Volunteers in the Spanish-American War, he will be called upon to fill an important post, should the volunteer system be adopted. He has signified to the Government his intention of serving in any capacity to which the Administration sees fit to assign him. However, he has already been elected director and treasurer of this company, and as soon as the present trouble runs over, he will be very much heard from in our councils."

Mr. Lewis has this to say about his picture connections: "I like the motion picture business and I like the field that Mr. Hammonds has developed so notably the best of all, and was glad to get the chance of making possible the enlargement of his business. We are now in a position to purchase practically every educational negative of value that the market has to offer.

"In addition to this we shall no longer be content to receive goods from the foreign markets, only as it happens to be offered in this country, but will immediately open special agencies abroad for the purpose of collecting whatever good educational material that is in sight.

"All these efforts must have only one result and that will be seen in an impetus that will push the educational moving picture ahead and by so doing elevate the motion picture generally. Mr. Hammonds and myself want to give you notice now of the greatest campaign both buying and selling, ever waged in behalf of educational films."

FORTHCOMING DREW COMEDIES.

Metro's comedy releases for April 23 and April 30 respectively are "One of the Family" and "Safety First," both being Metro-Drew productions, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew as stars.

"One of the Family" was written by Garrett Elsden Fort. It deals with the difficulty of Mr. and Mrs. Marsh, who live in the suburbs in keeping a cook. The cooks all get lonesome so far away from the city. Finally Mrs. Marsh decides to adopt a plan used with success by her neighbor, Mrs. Gray, and make the cook "one of the family."

"Safety First" is the work of Charlotte Wharton Ayers, who has written a number of the most successful Drew comedies. Mr. Hornby is obsessed by the idea of "safety first" in regard to fire. He makes the most elaborate precautions against it, both at home and at his office, where he has fire axes and water buckets prominently displayed. He buys gas helmets for the entire family, including the colored servants, he makes them practice walking down rope ladders, and gets them out of bed at all hours of the night to go through elaborate fire drills.

BOSTON MUTUAL EXCHANGE IN NEW QUARTERS.

The Boston branch of the Mutual Film Corporation has moved into its new building at the corner of Church and Melrose streets.

The new building is of brick construction, fireproof throughout, and because of its great area gives the corporation just about double the space it enjoyed in the old location, 1106 Boylston street. In its new home the Mutual has about 10,000 square feet of floor space, and has entrances at Church and Melrose streets, and also in South Cedar Place.

Since moving into the new quarters, Manager J. L. Roth and H. Hirsch, serial manager, have been the recipients of many congratulations.

Variety in Art Dramas

Survey of Past and Coming Releases Shows Remarkable Difference in Theme of Various Subjects.

A SURVEY of the releases of the Art Dramas program for the past two months discloses the interesting fact that the eight pictures included are totally different in theme and treatment, giving an amount of variety to the exhibitor that it would be hard to equal.

It is the policy of Art Dramas to keep its features as different as possible in theme, story and treatment. Starting with "The Law That Failed" and coming down to "The Mystic Hour," there are no two pictures of the same type.

"The Law That Failed," which was released on March 29, was a story not only unique in the Art Dramas program, but also unique in film history, in that it was based on a little known technicality in law, which renders justice, in certain murder cases, impossible. The picture was an Apollo, starring Alma Hanlon. All the reviewers commeneted on its unusualness of theme and treatment.

This was followed by "The Inevitable," released on April 12, which was an Erbograph production. This was a modern drama of vengeance and love, with some new ideas and some strong situations.

"The Great Bradley Mystery," which followed on April 19, was a story of crime and detection, adapted from the stage play by Edward Ellis, which was entitled "Suicide." In this picture a man was found dead in a room which had both doors and windows locked. The keys were on the table, and there was no way for a man to enter. It was presumed that he had killed himself. Yet there had been another person in the room, and his story solved the mystery. It was a detective story of a new kind, with mystery predominating to the end.

A melodrama, strong in human interest and filled with intense situations, comes next, on April 26. This is "A Mother's Ordeal," produced by Van Dyke, under the direction of Will S. Davis. The story of this is entirely different in idea from the previous releases. Jean Sothern plays two roles in this, a mother and a daughter.

Then comes "The Auction of Virtue," the first modern problem play on the program. This treats of a young girl's struggle between love and luxury. The heroine of this, played by Naomi Childers, is confronted with two alternatives: to escape from poverty and have a life of ease and pleasure, or to spend her life with the man she loves. U. S. Amusement Corporation produced this picture.

Marian Swayne in "Little Miss Fortune," a delightful comedy-drama, follows on May 10. This is the appealing story of a little orphan girl in an institution, who dreams of going on the stage, and who in the end realizes her ambitions. There are both laughs and human interest in this production, which has the well-known heartstrings pull. It was written by the Rev. Clarence J. Harris and directed by Joseph Levering.

The Apollo picture for release on May 17, following "Little Miss Fortune," is described as "a strange story of a morbid mind." The plot of this is unusual in that it deals with the little known region between consciousness and unconsciousness, and has as its central idea a weird dream which is prophetic, of reality.

The story of this, as has been announced, is based on the studies of dreams and their causes which have been made by Dr. Sigmund Freud. "Psychoanalysis" is just now a popular fad among laymen, and a recognized science among doctors. That dreams are the result of suppressed desires, and that morbidity is caused by this suppression, is the theme.

In "The Mystic Hour," Guido, the artist, wakes up with a belief that he has killed Clavering. He rushes to the man's room and finds him dead. The thought that he is a murderer nearly maddens him, until relief and a natural explanation of the crime brings sanity to him again.

The next Apollo production, the working title of which is "When You and I Were Young," was suggested by the famous song of the same name, and was written by Frederick Rath. The struggles and pains of youth, and its triumphs and joys, as seen through the eyes of the peaceful aged, are treated in this production. This picture, by reason of its unusual subject matter, will have an appeal to both old and young alike, for it is the story of every man and every woman.

These eight releases, representing eight distinct types of story, prove that Art Dramas intends to enable the exhibitor to give variety to his patrons. The company does not wish to fall into the rut of similarity in releases, which has lessened the merit of so many programs.

It is promised by the producers that coming Art Dramas will continue to be different from each other, as well as different from all other feature films.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY GETS IMPORTANT MATERIAL.

Acquisition has been made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of exceptionally important and interesting photoplay material written by such well-known playwrights and authors as George Broadhurst, George Middleton and Pearly Poor Sheehan. From George Broadhurst there was purchased the photoplay rights to "The Law of the Land," one of the most celebrated stage successes which this distinguished playwright has written. Two photoplays have been purchased from George Middleton, namely "At First Sight" and "The Love That Lives." "The Whispering Chorus," by Pearly Poor Sheehan, is a novel soon to be published serially by one of the Munsey publications, the idea being that it is to appear simultaneously in print and upon the screen.

"WOMAN AND BEAST" A THRILLER.

While a fight between a lion and a man is announced as one of the spectacular events in the Graphic Feature, "The Woman and the Beast," it is not the only one, according to the producers. Emmet Mixx wrote the scenario, and it called for an exciting Italian fete in the first reel, in which the services of over a thousand supers were required, not to mention an entire Italian settlement close to New York.

Marie Shotwell.

For the second reel, Mr. Warde had the simple job of getting a circus, and in the third reel he had to allow a lion to escape from the circus, and to send a pursuing mob after him. In the fourth reel he had to let little Tula Belle, Graphic Features' eight-year-old star, drop 45 feet from a cliff, and in the fifth stage an actual fight between a lion and a man, thrust a massive rock from the mountain-top to the powder house below and blow up the powder house.

From the director's description there is no doubt that whoever enjoys a "thriller" will enjoy "The Woman and the Beast." The children will be especially interested in little Tula Belle's work and the circus section of the story. In fact, it appears to be a picture that holds appeal for every class of film fan.

Heading the cast is Marie Shotwell, whose work in "The Witching Hour," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and "Warfare of the Flesh" won her this role. The cast is an all star one, with such Broadway favorites as Alphonse Ethier, Fred Eric, Kathryn Adams, J. H. Gilmour and Tula Belle.

LOCKWOOD BEGINS WORK ON "THE HAUNTED PAJAMAS."

Harold Lockwood has begun work on his eighth picturization of a popular novel at the Metro-Yorke studios, Hollywood, Cal. This is "The Haunted Pajamas," from the novel of the same name by Francis Perry Elliott.

Preceding screen versions of widely known novels with Mr. Lockwood as star have been "The Hidden Children," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Promise," by James B. Hendryx; "Big Tremaine," by Marie Van Vorst; "Pidgin Island," by Harold MacGrath; "The River of Romance," from the novel, "One-Cylinder Sam," by E. J. Rath; "Mister 44," by the same author, and the star's latest vehicle, "The Secret Spring," an adaptation of Clarence B. Kelland's book, "The Hidden Spring."

"The Haunted Pajamas" provides Mr. Lockwood with an unusually interesting role and a story of swift moving incident and compelling power. It has the further appeal to mysticism. The haunted pajamas, which have been sent to Dick Hudson, the hero, were made in the Far East. There they were inscribed with Chinese characters by a sorcerer, and thus they became a curse to any one wearing them.

After the pajamas became the property of Dick (Harold Lockwood), they effect remarkable changes in the personalities of his guests, who don the bewitched garments.

A splendid cast for the production has been chosen by Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Yorke Film Corporation.

W. H. BROOKS WITH PARALTA PLAYS.

W. H. Brooks, a certified public accountant lately associated with the Westinghouse Company, will be the head of the accounting department of Paralta Plays, Inc. Mr. Brooks has been studying the accounting features of moving picture production and distribution during the past two years. Mr. Brooks has worked out a system of computing costs in connection with production, which, with due allowances for contingencies, will give the producer a practical, progressive working cost sheet, showing almost to the dollar what a picture will cost if the original script is adhered to by the director.

Mr. Brooks has also worked out distribution systems on lines that he believes will eliminate waste and unnecessary expense.

Houdini Story by Roche

Williamson Brothers Sign with Arthur Somers Roche for Under-sea Thriller Starring Handcuff King.

HOUDINI, the man who has mystified the world with his extraordinary feats, will make his first appearance as a screen star in an "Epic of the Elements," written by Arthur Somers Roche.

Just as Houdini is the greatest drawing card before the public to-day, so is Arthur Somers Roche recognized as one of the most brilliant authors of the present day. A resume of his achievements in the field of literature reads like an entrancing fairy tale.

In 1906 this young author sold his first story for the princely sum of $6. As late as 1915, while under contract to a concern which features paper-backed novels, he considered himself lucky to receive $300 for one of his manuscripts.

The Saturday Evening Post was the first magazine of class to recognize his genius. "Loot," when it appeared, earned Arthur Somers Roche an enormous following. Its success was quickly overshadowed by the popularity of "A Scrap of Paper," also purchased by the Saturday Evening Post. This story is being dramatized for a Broadway presentation. Some of his other famous stories are "The Gray Hair," a serial running in the Cosmopolitan; "The Sport of Kings," which has appeared in Every Week; "Ransom," one of the Blue Book's biggest successes, and "In the Dark," now running in the Hearst Syndicate of papers. From all of this it may be gathered that Arthur Somers Roche has arrived, and the Williamson Brothers consider themselves lucky to have put him under contract to prepare the vehicle for Houdini's screen debut. The enterprise of these brothers in securing the services of Mr. Roche is to be commended.

Mr. Roche has the happy faculty of being able to write delightful mystery stories. When he applies his natural talents to the creation of an international drama with an undersea flavor he will find himself perfectly at home.

"Christus"

Latest Cines Picture Will Be Given New York Showing by Historic Features, Inc.

"CHRISTUS," a motion picture which has met with marked success on the other side of the water, will be given its first presentation in America at the Criterion theater April 30.

More than 1,000 performances of "Christus" have been given in Paris, Rome and Madrid, where it is still playing. It is the latest production of the Cines Company of Rome, whose "Quo Vadis?" was the first great spectacular feature to attain international fame. It will be offered at the Criterion, April 30, by the Historic Features, Inc., whose object is announced to be the promotion only of pictures having the highest artistic and educational value.

"Christus" is described as a pictorial dramatization of a poem by a celebrated Italian writer, Fausto Salvatori, dealing with the life of Jesus the Christ. For the production of the picture Salvatori, with Count Giulio Antamoro, one of the foremost motion picture directors in Europe, and a company of Cines players, journeyed to Egypt and the Holy Land—the actual scenes of the Biblical narrative.

The concluding scenes of the picture, embodying the resurrection and the ascension, are said to contain the most remarkable of the novel effects which Count Antamoro has introduced. A special musical setting which has been prepared for the American presentation will be rendered by orchestra and organ, under the direction of Edwin Frank Goldman.

WAR PICTURES PROMINENT IN GAUMONT RELEASES.

The Gaumont Company presents in its pictures released the week of May 6 many views which bear upon some phase or other of the war. The first release of the week is "Tours Around the World" No. 27. The war in this is only an echo. One section of the reel presents Mourom, Russia, a village founded in the reign of Ivan the Terrible. This is typical of the Russia which now will rapidly pass away with the changing of the form of government. Other pictures on the same reel depict Zurich, Switzerland, and the excavations which have laid bare Pompeii as it looked when overwhelmed in 79 A. D. The entire reel is of absorbing interest.

The second single-reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly, which is edited and manufactured by the Gaumont Company. Since this motographic news reel is not assembled until the day it is shipped, no advance notice can be furnished at this time. With its European connections, the latest pictures from the front are guaranteed.

The third single-reel to come from Gaumont this week is "Reel Life" No. 54, the Mutual Magazine in Film. War is represented by "Sleeping Bags for Soldiers," which the government has adopted. "Lifting a Locomotive" shows the ease with which giant cranes are worked. "Proteges of a Big City" delineates how New York takes care of its feeble-minded children. "A Submarine Oil Field" is warlike in a sense, since it shows the source of much of the oil for the navy. "Making Grape Juice" completes the reel.

Gail Kane Heads Week's Mutuals.

Diversity of Subjects Offered for Release During Week of April 30—May 6.

"WHOSE WIFE?" a story by Cecil Henry Bullivent, chosen as the first vehicle for Gail Kane as a Mutual American star, will be released April 30. It is in five reels.

"A Race for Fortune" is the fourth chapter of the latest Helen Holmes serial, "The Railroad Raiders," which will come to the screen on April 30. The two greatest thrills in this chapter are the scenes in which Helen Holmes is thrown into the river with an anchor tied to her feet and another in which Frost, the general superintendent of the road, is bound and thrown into a well. And see how Helen Holmes manages to free herself and ultimately rescues Frost just before he is lost in the watery grave.

"Gladys' Day Dream," released April 30, is the first of three bi-weekly comedies in which Marie Cahill will be starred. The people who see the first one will want to see them all, so advertise extensively the first appearance. May 1 brings the "Mutual Tours Around the World."

On May 2 comes "Mutual Weekly" and also the fourth Strand Comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes, and titled "Kleptomaniacs."

"Jerry's Trial" is the Cub Comedy, with George Ovey, which is scheduled for May 3. On this date also comes "Reel Life," which this week is made up of the following subjects: "Our Patriotic Maidens," "Restoring an Old Mansion," "Getting Rid of the Snow," "Issa Tribe, of British Somaliland," and "The Queerest Newspaper."

Friday, May 5, brings the seventh story of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series, titled "Devil's Work."

"Bucking the Tiger" is the Vogue contribution for May 5. Ben Turpin is featured in this laughmaker and is assisted by Ed. Laurie, Lillian Hamilton, Art Currier and Marie Templeton.

HILLER & WILK EXPAND.

The remarkable growth in the business of Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, has been one of the notable events in recent motion picture history. The handling of a series of big state right features of the calibre and importance of "The Whip," "A Mormon Maid," "The Battle of Gettysburg," and "The Wrath of the Gods" involves a vast amount of detail work, and the employment of a big organization. And when to these departments of the business you add the new series of King Bee Comedies, with Billy West and other screen favorites, which are just now creating much agreeable talk in the motion picture world, it needs little reflection to convince that Hiller & Wilk, Inc., have assumed a position of great importance in the industry and are a very busy unit.

For a long time the firm's office accommodations in the Longacre Building have been inadequate to their needs, and larger space has been imperative. The office force has augmented with the increase in the firm's affiliations and has demanded more room. The New York Motion Picture Company being about to vacate the larger part of the premises it has occupied for several years on the ninth floor of the Longacre Building, Hiller & Wilk have acquired a lease of the offices and enter into possession of them immediately.

The new offices face Forty-second street and the Knickerbocker Hotel on Broadway, and are thus in the center of the world's motion picture market. With larger offices, Hiller & Wilk will be in a better position than hitherto to cope with the demands made upon their time and attention by their growing interests.

EMMY WEHLEN IN PLAY WITHIN A PLAY.

"Sowers and Reapers," a Rolfe production which is unusually interesting from many angles and in which Emmy Wehlen is the star, will be released on the Metro program May 7.

This powerful photodrama, written and directed by George D. Baker, is presented by B. A. Rolfe. It was produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. The photography was done by Joseph Shelderfer.

Besides being the author of "Sowers and Reapers," Director Baker appears in the play as an actor. It has been many years since this famous director appeared as an actor. He made his stage debut as Laertes in "Hamlet," and was successful on the stage; but he has been even more successful as a motion picture director and playwright.

In the cast are many screen favorites, among them being Frank Currier, Peggy Parr, Harry Davenport, Walter Horton, Kate Blancke and David Thompson. George Stuart Christie, in the role of Earle Courtney, the husband, makes his screen debut in this production.

BLANCHE SWEET IN STORY OF BIG BUSINESS.

"The Silent Partner," a story of big business, directed for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. by Marshall Neilan, is to be released by Paramount on May 24, with Blanche Sweet in the stellar role. It is a story which will be of universal interest because it teaches a lesson of loyalty and devotion in the common every-day walks of life.

Blanche Sweet is Jane Colby; Thomas Meighan, who has done such excellent work opposite Pauline Frederick, plays the role of Royle; while other members of the cast are George Hebert, Ernest Joy, Mabel Van Buren, Florence Smythe and Mayme Kelso.

Enid Bennett in "Happiness"

Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen Also to Be Seen in Second Triangle Eastern Production, "The Man Who Made Good."

ENID BENNETT will make her third appearance on the Thiangle program May 13 in a Kay-Bee play by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "Happiness." This is by far the most novel and appealing vehicle that Miss Bennett has obtained since she came under the management of Thomas H. Ince, and the young Australian favorite makes the most of every opportunity accorded her in the working out of an interesting and amusing characterization. In "Happiness," C. Gardner Sullivan has written a comedy-drama which is a worthy successor to "Home," "The Bugle Call" and "Plain Jane." Reginald Barker directed the production.

As the star of "Happiness," Enid Bennett takes the part of Doris Wingate, who has inherited a large fortune, but has been so hedged around by foolish relatives and fed on society conventionalities that the public has grown to believe she is the "snob" that the Sunday newspapers describe her to be. The girl's uncle, who has not seen her in years, resolves to save Doris from the unwholesome career her domineering aunt has marked out for her. He has the girl sent to a co-educational college with the idea of giving her a taste of democracy. Doris welcomes her emancipation, but finds to her sorrow that her newspaper reputation for "snobbishness" has preceded her, and her fellow students turn from her in disgust. Lonely and disheartened, Doris is finally lifted out of her prison-like atmosphere through her meeting with Robert Lee Hollister, a poor but brilliant young fellow who is working his way through college by taking in washing. The way in which they overcome their common obstacles adds zest to one of the most whimsical little plays that has been screened in many a day.

"The Man Who Made Good," featuring Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen, will also be released on the same date. This is the second production from Triangle's Yonkers Studio. Henceforth all plays done at this plant will be produced under the personal supervision of Allan Dwan.

"The Man Who Made Good" is a picture with a definite purpose, containing a strong theme that should prove of no little inspiration to the young man or woman who finds it difficult to make progress in the world. Both Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen carry off their respective roles with naturalness and youthful spontaneity.

Territory on Ince Productions Going Fast

Many Distributors Bidding for the Right to Handle New Product.

THAT the independent market is in a healthier state than ever before was evinced this week when Ince Productions, Inc., the new organization headed by Ralph and John Ince, closed most of the Middle Western territory and disposed of the rights to their productions in the Dominion of Canada.

Metro Pictures Service, of Pittsburgh, secured Ince Productions for western Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana and will control for a period of two years the twelve seven and eight act features to be made in the two yearly periods by the Ince concern.

J. S. Skirboll, of Pittsburgh, representing the Clarke interests, and Harry Reichenbach, of the Ince concern, consummated the deal in a period covering twenty minutes of actual conference.

For the Dominion of Canada, Peter F. Griffin, of the Griffin Amusement Corporation, with headquarters at Toronto, Montreal and the West Coast, secured the Canadian rights. Mr. Griffin controls three highly successful exchanges in Canada and personally operates sixteen important theaters throughout the Dominion.

The Ince Productions, Inc., will begin active productional work April 28 and it is now contemplated that the first release will occur June 10, or within a few days thereof.

Ralph Ince, now at work on a big special production of "To-Day," with Florence Reed in the leading role, will begin his work May 1 in the interest of his own organization.

The entire country will be closed for the output of Ince Productions before next Monday. The most important buyers in the country have wired for reservations and secured options and, according to Mr. Ince, the demands cover twice the supply.

WILLIAM COURTENAY IN PATHE'S "THE RECOIL."

William Courtenay, one of the most popular actors of the stage, is featured by Pathe in "The Recoil," a Pathe Gold Rooster Play, produced by Astra, which is to be released May 13. With him is also featured Lillian Greuze, the charming star of New York's well known French Theater, who, in this picture, makes her debut upon the screen. George Fitzmaurice directed it.

"The Recoil" is a typical modern play and tells the story of a girl who against her inclinations is married to a coarse-grained and brutal man of wealth, who utterly unappreciates her and against whom she has to turn in self-defense. She is saved from the consequences by her former fiance, played by William Courtenay, and by her brother. The action is rapid and the production strongly dramatic.

"THE DANGER TRAIL" (Selig).

In "The Danger Trail," the Selig drama released in K-E-S-E, H. B. Warner is featured. In his support is seen Violet Heming, who comes from the stage to the screen. Others in the Selig company enacting "The Danger Trail" include W. Lawson Butt, who was the original Boris in the stage production of "The Garden of Allah." Arthur Donaldson and Richard Thornton are also well known actors in the play. "The Danger Trail" is from the book written by James Oliver Curwood.

Scene from "The Danger Trail" (Selig).

It is a drama of the snow country, the Canadian Northwest, and tells a gripping story of a desire for vengeance and the love of Meleese Thoreau for John Howland, an American engineer.

The Selig Company claims many beautiful scenes of the far Northland are shown and that the work of Mr. Warner in this, his first motion picture under the Selig banner, is fully up to the expectations of Warner's thousands of admirers. Twelve thousand feet of negative were taken, which the Selig Company has cut to five thousand feet of strong story and exciting action.

"BACK STAGE" (King Bee).

"Back Stage" is the aptly chosen title of the first two-reel comedy release of the King Bee Films Corporation, of which that past master of the art, Louis Burstein, is the guiding spirit. It is a highly diverting story of misadventure, back of the stage of a country theater. Thither come, "booked solid" on the time, a strong man, Hawaiian dancers and other entertainers of the public, and the things that happen to them, partly on account of their own inherent propensities for causing trouble, and partly because Billy West and his fellow stage hands seem incapable of keeping out of mischief and resisting strong drink, are ludicrous in the extreme. It is clean, honest, logical, spontaneous fun and the picture is one, therefore, which is assured of winning the favor of exhibitors and the public.

"Back Stage" is acted with ideal smoothness and finish. Besides Billy West, who makes a very droll study of the meddlesome stage hand, there is the graceful and good looking Ethel Burton to lend distinction and beauty to the picture and Babe Hardy provokes roars of laughter in the part of a strong man. The settings illustrative of life behind the scenes, on the stage and in the auditorium, were carefully done and the picture is well photographed and acted.

"Back Stage" has all the elements of being a great drawing card. The second and third King Bee Comedies are nearing completion, and so favorable are the reports concerning the excellence of these comedies, which have spread throughout the industry, that already a very heavy and widespread demand exists for them.

FAIRBANKS BOOKS FOR EXHIBITORS.

The publicity department of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation and the Britton Publishing Company, distributors of "Laugh and Live," an interesting book by Douglas Fairbanks, have entered an arrangement tying up the sale of the book with the initial Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, "In Again—Out Again."

Copies of this book, which retails at a dollar, are being distributed gratis among Artcraft exhibitors, showing the first Fairbanks production, who in turn give them to the patrons with their compliments. This idea will prove a novel booster for the exhibitor when used as a stimulus for offshows. Manager Rothapfel of the Rialto theater, New York, will give to a limited number of patrons copies of this book during the morning shows of "In Again—Out Again."

All that is asked in return by the publishers is that the exhibitor displays a slide advertising the book, or announces in his house program, lobby or advertising matter the sale of the book.

Anderson Outlines Paralta Plans.

President of New Concern Talks to Exhibitors of the Investigations Made by Himself and Associates.

THE proposition which the Paralta plan of distribution, originated by Carl Anderson, Nat. I. Brown and Herman Fichtenberg, places before exhibitors is attracting a great deal of attention. At a meeting held in the offices of the Paralta Plays Corporation Tuesday, April 17, President Anderson took occasion to define to several exhibitors his company's position in relation to the exhibitor.

He detailed all the investigations that had been made to determine both the evils of the business as well as their correctives. Waste and extravagance in production, and most reckless waste and extravagance in distribution, had been found to be the real trouble, he said. These evils were brought right to the door of the exhibitor, because, as the final handler of the product, the films, all costs are assessed against him.

To adequately meet this situation would mean to put the moving picture industry fairly on its feet. If the exhibitor, ultimately paying all the expense of production and distribution, is making money, it is a fair assumption this prosperity will rise up through each department of the industry to dividends on the securities of the stockholders.

The purpose of Paralta is to point the way to a situation where the exhibitor and the whole industry may be placed solidly on a profit-paying basis.

Mr. Anderson said he believed that the future of the business, to a very great extent, depended on giving the exhibitor a chance to make money by relieving him of the present burden of useless waste charges, which he should not be called upon to bear. They can be cut out—so why make the exhibitor pay for the extravagance that is senseless and useless?

Thursday, April 26, Mr. Anderson met a number of Southern and Western State rights men to discuss the application of this system of distribution to their territories.

Mr. Anderson will go into the whole subject fully and state the results of the investigations conducted by himself, Mr. Brown and Mr. Fichtenberg, covering a period of two years.

THEDA BARA AS "CLEOPATRA."

Sumptuous Production of Fox Films Corporation Announced for Release June 4.

THEDA BARA as "Cleopatra," the siren of Egypt, is the release announced by William Fox for June 4. This production was filmed under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, who has made all of Miss Bara's super de luxe pictures. He has taken advantage of all the wonderful possibilities in the story for gorgeous settings and wonderful scenic effects and has made a truly stupendous picture. The production cost $250,000 and will mark a new epoch in the history of the cinema industry.

Miss Bara and Mr. Edwards have been at work on the picture for several months and it is practically complete except for the cutting. Because of the unusual beauty of the scenes shown, the exact length has not yet been determined, but it will probably be in seven reels.

Although Cleopatra's part in history is already pretty well defined, Miss Bara has come to the defense of Egypt's Queen and insists that she is a much maligned person and should not be stigmatized by historians.

"Ambition was Cleopatra's life," declared Miss Bara. "She was willing to sacrifice all for her dream of world empire. Though her faults were many, she was not the woman of popular belief."

RUSSIAN PRODUCTIONS COMING.

Leon J. Rubenstein vouches for the information that N. S. Kaplan, a Russian motion picture and theatrical man of long standing, is on his way to America with a number of Russian motion picture subjects of five and six-reel lengths from stories by Tolstoy, Pushkin, Dostoevsky, Ostrovsky and other authors of equal note. These pictures, it is said, were formerly suppressed by the Russian authorities, but that the recent change in government permitted their release, since they were not destroyed.

Mr. Kaplan will be here in a week or so. He says that the Russian films will stand comparison with American subjects. The stars of the Moscow theater and the Imperial theater of Moscow will be seen in these subjects.

MORE SPECIAL FEATURES FROM VARIETY.

Louis Rosenbluh, head of the Variety Film Corporation, announced this week his intentions of devoting attention solely in the future to the production of special features, the first of which is now being exploited on a state right basis under the title of "The Price of Her Soul."

"The Price of Her Soul," perhaps, in scenario form, underwent more radical changes than, to any one's knowledge, was ever experienced by a film story.

Twenty-four prominent independent state rights distributors were queried with complete copies of the play in its synopsis form and requests made for suggestions as to what would make the story more attractive as a special feature.

"Honor System" in Demand.

Many Applications Reported for Big Fox Cinemelodrama in New York and New Jersey.

APPLICATIONS for dates on "The Honor System" from New York and New Jersey exhibitors have been pouring in since the Fox Film Corporation announced that this sensational cinemelodrama was available. Exhibitors appear unanimous in the belief that the remarkable success of "The Honor System" at the Lyric theater, New York, can be more than duplicated in the first-class picture houses elsewhere. For this reason top notch rentals are being offered.

William Fox, while offering "The Honor System" on a state right basis, is booking it direct in the city and state of New York and New Jersey. The booking offices are in charge of Carey Wilson, at No. 128 West 46th street. Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the corporation, is handling the state rights end of the business. He has already received offers aggregating $400,000 and has sold two territories at the highest prices yet paid.

The demand for dates for "The Honor System" is just as strong throughout the states of New York and New Jersey as it is in the metropolitan district.

It is estimated that not less than 850,000 persons have seen "The Honor System" since it opened at the Lyric theater early in February. So great has been its success that it has enabled William Fox to establish a record which experienced theatrical men have believed to be impossible.

Mr. Fox's record is that of occupying a first class Broadway theater for an entire theatrical season with two spectacular films of his own production. These two record-breaking pictures were "The Honor System" and "A Daughter of the Gods."

CRITICS PAY HOMAGE TO "THE DEEMSTER."

The remarkable success of Hall Caine's "The Deemster," at the Broadway theater, gave a decided impetus to state right sales at the Arrow Film Corporation's office. Shrewd buyers visiting in the city read the daily paper criticisms and straightway recognized the widespread and enthusiastic interest created by the great Manx author's first "best seller" in picture form. Herewith is presented a resume of the reviews:

"One of the most absorbing and powerful photodramas ever seen."—N. Y. American.

"All of the stirring situations are utilized * * * and the screen play becomes a reel thriller."—N. Y. Eve. Mail.

"There was capital movie material in 'The Deemster' with the rush of its story and its abundance of picturesque incident, and the director has not overlooked it. A more thrilling scene than the struggle on a high cliff could scarcely be devised."—N. Y. Times.

"Gained in absorbing interest as the play progressed."—N. Y. Herald.

"The characters are so well chosen that they might have stepped out of the book * * * Nothing more impressive has been seen on the screen * * * Derwent Hall Caine does admirable work * * * His performance is sincere and forceful and his fine, sensitive face registers every emotion * * * ."—N. Y. Tribune.

" * * * story offers many opportunities for thrilling dramatic action—his love affair with the Deemster's daughter, his fight with her brother, his trial for murder, his strange penance * * * There is a fire at sea, a shipwreck and other vivid incidents to add thrills to the picture."—N. Y. World.

"The director has failed in no point to bring about the necessary love scenes, fight scenes and heart-breaking thrills that pictures must have to please the public."—N. Y. Evening Journal.

"There are many impressive moments in the production, and these are presented with great skill."—N. Y. Morning Telegraph.

"Absorbing in interest."—N. Y. Eve. Telegram.

FOX TO MAKE "KIDDIE" FEATURES.

Special productions to be known as "Fox Kiddie Features" are soon to be released on the Fox program. Always looking ahead for the future of the photoplay industry, William Fox, after mature deliberation, has inaugurated photoplay features in which children will portray all the characters. These will seek to entertain the elders as well as the children. Mr. Fox, always fond of children and their welfare, realized that in the moving picture is found the greatest source of knowledge and amusement for the little ones as well as the "grown-ups."

For this purpose Mr. Fox while in California established a company of children who are to film the stories of the land of make-believe, and specially written scenarios on children's subjects, and the stories that are familiar to every school child. In addition he has opened a school wherein expression, so necessary for moving picture work, and elocution will be taught to the little mummers. Another company of children will be established in one of the Fort Lee studios. In this way Mr. Fox expects to release a "Fox Kiddie Feature" monthly.

The demand for officers for the navy has occasioned the graduation of the class of 1917 two months ahead of time. The Gaumont Company sent a cameraman to record the event for The Mutual Weekly. The negative reached the Gaumont studios at Flushing, L. I., in time to catch this number.

Brady Gets More French Pictures

Four New Subjects by Louis Mercanton, Director of "Mothers of France"—On Regular World Film Service.

FOUR more French photoplays produced by Louis Mercanton, director of the vast Sarah Bernhardt success, "Mothers of France," have already been delivered to World-Picture Brady-Made, and exhibitors using the World program will have first call upon the series with no advance upon regular prices.

Regina Badet.

With the exception of Mme. Bernhardt herself, these four plays were acted by practically the same players as those who gave such perfection of team work to the performance of "Mothers of France." At the head of these gifted artists is Albert Signer, whose portraiture of the schoolmaster in the Bernhardt pictureplay stood out with quite extraordinary vividness.

The stars of the four new photodramas are Susan Grandaise and Regina Badet, both of whom will come to America shortly to act for World-Pictures under the direction of William A. Brady as a part of the interchange plan by which several of the World stars will also be sent to Europe at the close of the war to make pictures there, directed by Mr. Mercanton.

Susan Grandaise.

These two stars are regarded as the foremost screen actresses in the old world, where Mlle. Grandaise is called "the sweetest girl in Europe" and Mlle. Badet is termed "the vampire of France." Both are exceptionally beautiful examples of widely different types.

Albert Signer.

The plays of this series are "Atonement," featuring Regina Badet and Albert Signer, to be published May 28; "A Naked Soul," featuring Susan Grandaise, June 11; "The Golden Lotus," featuring Regina Badet, June 25, and "When True Love Dawns," featuring Susan Grandaise, Albert Signer and an all-star cast, July 16.

The quartette of picture plays, which probably would be distributed as separate "specials" in other circumstances, will be issued under the title Brady-International Service World-Pictures, observing conditions similar to those which governed the Clara Kimball Young Service and also Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France."

L-KO NOTES.

J. G. Blystone, director general of the L-KO Motion Picture Kompany has just written three new stories which will be turned over to the directors for their future pictures.

Vim Moore, who is directing Phil Dunham, the English comedienne, has just completed a department store picture entitled "Dry Goods and Damp Doings." Mose Hamburger, one of the largest department store owners of Los Angeles, who visited the L-KO lot last week, saw the department store set and claimed that if it were not for the diffusers he would actually think he was in his own store.

Dan Russell, under the guidance of Noel Smith, his director, has just finished a picture called "Beach Nuts." Mr. Russell has assumed the role of a life saver and, according to the thrills in the story, he has lived up to the title.

Fatty Voss is being proclaimed the hero of the hour by the moving picture people. Last Thursday, while riding in his roadster down Santa Monica Boulevard Mrs. Alger and her son, who were about one hundred feet in front of Mr. Voss, somehow or other were brushed by an east bound car on to the west bound track, where a car was approaching and, not being able to get away quickly enough, were crushed between the two cars. Without hesitancy Mr. Voss grabbed the woman and her boy and rushed them to the nearest hospital. It is claimed that the quick action of Mr. Voss is responsible for the recovery of both, although the child, it is said, will have to have his leg amputated.

Dick Smith is now directing Bob McKenzie and is nearing the completion of a two-reel picture, the title of which has not as yet been decided upon.

J. HILLARY MARTIN'S TOUR.

A distinct novelty is being offered to the moving picture public in the form of a high-class lecture, together with an educational and interesting feature. There has always been a big demand for educational subjects, and exhibitors have complained of the scarcity of topics that interest as well as draw the higher element to their theaters. J. Hillary Martin, who accompanies this production, is one of the best-known lecturers of the West and has done Lyceum and Chautauqua work in the past, and in many cities critics have termed him a second Billy Sunday, his work being along the noted evangelist's line. Mr. Martin was for a number of years associated with the leading social workers of Chicago before he went lecturing, and appears under the auspices of the Illinois Vigilance Association. He has been accumulating for the past ten years scenes and topics, and today has one of the largest and most valuable collections in America. Mr. Martin has just concluded a year's successful engagement through the leading theaters of Ohio, West Virginia and Pennsylvania and is opening a tour through New York State, where he will deliver a number of lectures, including the one that has made his fame, "A Warning to Young Girls."

PLAQUE OF ALICE BRADY FOR SOUVENIR.

An artistic plaque of Alice Brady in the central role of "Maternity," a new photoplay with birth-fear as its psychological background, has been issued as a souvenir by World-Pictures, Brady-Made. The plaque was made by Miss Renee Prahar, a noted American sculptress who has specialized for a number of years abroad in what are known as bust portraits, very widely effected by members of the British aristocracy.

Miss Prahar had made her headquarters in Paris up to the outbreak of the war, when she came to New York and established herself permanently in the Greenwich Village art colony. She says she will never return to Europe to reside.

The "Maternity" photoplay contains as one of its spectacular features the burning of a huge hospital from which the heroine rescues the child of a woman of whom she is jealous. In the making of this scene Miss Brady had much of her hair burned off, together with a part of her skirt, and when she fell through the floor with little Madge Evans in her arms she "barked" one of her shins and acquired a fine assortment of black-and-blue decorations.

FREDERICK WARDE STARS IN "HINTON'S DOUBLE."

Frederick Warde, star of "King Lear" and "The Vicar of Wakefield," is announced by Pathe as the star of "Hinton's Double," the Gold Rooster Play to be released May 6. For the first time Mr. Warde leaves classic productions and becomes the central figure of a modern romance.

"Hinton's Double" was written by Lloyd Lonergan, creator of "The Million Dollar Mystery," and author of a number of successful Gold Rooster plays from the Thanhouser studios. The supporting cast is excellent, including J. H. Gilmour, Kathryn Adams, Wayne Arey and Arthur Bauer. "Hinton's Double" is a thrilling story based upon mistaken identity and the law, in which Mr. Warde has to assume practically three different characterizations. First he is Joshua Stevens, a tender-hearted old clerk, secondly J. Evart Hinton, a get-rich-quick Wall Street operator, and thirdly when he, as Hinton, is trying to escape the police.

Chester Beecroft, from his new offices in the Astor Trust Building, 501 Fifth avenue, New York, this week concluded negotiations with the Australasian Film Company for the sale of Cub Comedies to that firm in the Australasia territory. The Australasian Film Company will use a new Cub subject every week for a long period of time.

Samuel Krellberg, managing director of Overland Films, 729 Seventh avenue, after viewing a private exhibition of the "Mormon Maid," immediately purchased the rights to Australia and New Zealand at a record price.

For Canadian Federal Censorship

Canadian Council of Women in New Brunswick Passes Resolutions—One Asks Maritime Exhibitors' League for Special Children's Shows—One Expresses a Desire for a Federal Censor Board.

By F. F. Sully, The La Tour, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The women of the New Brunswick through the Women's Council of this city have gone on record as favoring the appointment of a Federal Board of Censorship, in which the names of two women should be included. This resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Women's Council was offered as an amendment to the resolution of the executive of the Women's Council, issued from the headquarters in Toronto. The resolution passed by the executive and sent to all the councils throughout the Dominion for approval and discussion, to be finally taken up at the national convention to be held in Winnipeg next month, was to this effect:

Resolution Asks for Children's Shows.

Whereas, motion pictures can be made of great educational value and of great beneficial interest to children,

Be it Resolved, that all local councils be asked to interest some motion picture theaters in providing suitable pictures to include fairy tales, travelogs, industrial pictures, and wholesome comedies, the same to be presented on Saturday for the benefit and pleasure of the children.

To this was added a section urging the councils to work for the appointment of a woman member to the provincial boards of censorship, inasmuch as it was thought that the counsel and judgment of a woman should be included in pictures that were to be shown to boys and girls who would be more or less easily influenced by what they say on the screens.

Some members of the New Brunswick Council, including the president, Mrs. E. Atherton Smith, approached the members of the Maritime Provinces Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League with the proposition, and the exhibitors laid before them the Federal censorship plan, and the reasons why it would be far better to have a federal board to which two women could be appointed.

Asks for Federal Censor Board in Canada.

At the meeting of the council, held last week, the question was discussed at great length, and the body also went on record as expressing its views in the following resolutions:

Resolved, that the St. John Council of Women urge the appointment of a Federal Board of Censorship, to be located at some central distribution point in Canada, and there exercise most careful judgment over all pictures to be shown for public entertainment. This action to obviate the necessity of any provincial censor officials, so that the public can be furnished in all provinces with their moving picture entertainment in like form.

And be it further resolved, that it would be wise to add the names of two women to the Federal Board of Censors, and that the idea of a Federal censorship would keep out of Canada all undesirable pictures, which would have undue influence, and it would further bring about influences that could not be brought to bear through provincial channels, and the public might thereby have forced upon it stories likely to be injurious to the morals of the youths of our country or un-British in spirit.

Council of Women a Strong Organization.

The Canadian Council of Women is perhaps the strongest and most influential body of its kind in the whole Dominion. It has branches throughout every province, and its national convention next month in Winnipeg will be largely attended. The question of motion picture censorship is scheduled to come in for a good share of discussion, and the government officials could not very well ignore the voice of such a representative body.

Pantry Sale for Worthy Purpose.

St. John, N. B.—How the brotherhood of the trade extends to every member of the staff of all the houses, great and small, was demonstrated last week by the act of the wives of members of the staff of the Imperial, who, instead of turning the facilities of the house to their task, gave a pantry sale for one of the needy employees. The waiting rooms and lobby of the theater were converted into salesrooms and in less than two hours more than 200 delicacies were provided, and when sold made up a substantial sum.

Business Jottings.

St. John, N. B.— A. B. Farmer of the Star theater has signed for the first screening, in St. John, of the Fox production of "Romeo and Juliet," featuring Theda Bara and Harry Hilliard.

St. John, N. B.—H. H. McArthur, manager of the General Film, has returned from a brief business trip to Halifax. Mr. McArthur announces the release at a very early date of the new Black-Cat Essanay comedies. These are two reelers, condensed from what were originally intended to be five reel productions.

A Notable Ten Year Anniversary in St. John

Keith Enterprises in City, With Manager W. H. Golding, Who Has Headed Them Since Organization, Will Celebrate a Golden Decade.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The tenth anniversary of the entry of the B. F. Keith theatrical enterprises into St. John will be observed at the Imperial theater the weeks of April 23 to May 5. The first decade of metropolitan attractions in the way of motion pictures for the Keith people has brought success in its every phase, and this is due alone to the able, conservative executive in the person of Walter H. Golding, who has managed the Keith interests since their organization here, and who will likewise observe his tenth anniversary as their manager during the same two weeks.

Mr. Golding has made a host of friends among the exhibitors and exchangemen, who will no doubt take advantage of the occasion to extend best wishes for continued success and prosperity. He has nursed the patronage which the Imperial enjoys from a five cent house to a theater which has no superior in the Dominion. He has introduced Broadway attractions at a twenty-five cent scale of prices, and is to make the anniversary weeks especially noteworthy in this respect.

During the first half of the first week he will show George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," the second half of the week, Anita Stewart in "The Girl Philippa," and the following three days Mary Pickford in the "Pride of the Clan." The attraction for latter half of the second week has not yet been decided upon.

S. Guy Bradford, who is now general manager for the Gaumont interests, with head offices in Flushing, N. Y., was Mr. Golding's predecessor as guardian of the Keith interests here. Since his connection with the trade Mr. Golding, who was formerly a newspaper man and later advertising manager for one of the large mercantile houses, has done a great deal in the cause of the exhibitor. That his efforts were appreciated and their worth realized was clearly evidenced last September, when at the organization of the Maritime Provinces Motion Picture Exhibitors' League he was named its first president. The Imperial now controls in St. John the exhibition rights of subjects produced by Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, George M. Cohan, Norma Talmadge and Douglas Fairbanks.

Changes in Independent Film Farces.

St. John, N. B.—George F. Perkins, president of Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, has announced important changes in the local staff. A. Allan Christie, who has been roadman and assistant manager for the St. John office of the Canadian Universal, has succeeded S. Starfield as resident manager. Mr. Christie has already taken up his new duties, and has just returned from Montreal after conferring with the head office of his new employers. He was with the Universal a little more than two years, and previous to that was booker for four years with the Mutual. He has made a host of friends among the motion picture fraternity throughout the provinces who will be glad to hear of his well merited promotion.

Mr. Starfield, who has been in charge of the St. John office since the succession of the Independent to the Standard Film Service, will be special Canadian representative. May 1 Mr. Christie and his staff will move to new quarters at 67 Dock street, where an entire four stories will be utilized as offices, stock rooms, projection room, and store room.

Seattle News Letter

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Two Interesting Pathe Men of Northwest.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Pathe's newly created office of supervisor of the entire Northwest has been given to Fred C. Quimby, for three years manager of the Seattle Pathe office. Mr. Quimby will have jurisdiction over Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and a part of Nebraska, with headquarters in Seattle. He handled the Salt Lake City and Denver territories for Pathe before coming to Seattle, so is familiar with that section of his domain as well as this. He has been with Pathe longer than any other exchange man in the organization, and is one of the few exchange managers who is equally popular with his competitors on Film Row and the exhibitors throughout the territory.

Geo. P. Endert. Tom Quimby.

Mr. Quimby was delayed in taking over his duties as supervisor because of his difficulty in finding a manager for the Seattle office to whom he felt he could trust the difficult Seattle territory. He has now engaged a man with whom he is entirely satisfied and who this week took his position at Mr. Quimby's old desk in the Central building. The new manager is George P. Endert, one of the oldest exchange men in Seattle. Mr. Endert recently resigned the managership of the Greater Features company to take his present position. He is one of the pioneer exchange men of the country, having been with George Kleine when that producer operated under the name of the Kleine Optical company. Mr. Endert has many interesting incidents to tell of those days when the motion picture industry was young. In 1905 he took a road show to Alaska for Mr. Kleine and had many narrow escapes from freezing and starving when traveling by dog team over the frozen plains. In 1907 he left Chicago, where he had been with Kleine and came to Seattle to open an office for the producer in this city. He managed the Universal office for four years in Seattle, and the World office two and a half years. From this connection he went to his last positon a year ago with Greater Features.

Rose Tapley Talks in Seattle on Better Pictures.

Seattle, Wash.—Rose Tapley, of Vitagraph, who is touring the country in the interests of better pictures, appeared on the stage of the Clemmer theater, Seattle, at both afternoon and evening performances on April 9th, 10th and 11th, and talked to the audience about the need for better pictures and how they as picture theater patrons, could "kill" the production of questionable films. She explained that the exhibitor could not afford to show programs that the people would not come to see and that the producer could not afford to make pictures that the exhibitor would not show, so the final responsibilty of the type of picture made and shown rested with the audience.

She finished by impressing upon the people that they were getting a lot more for their money that any other form of public amusement offered.

Resent Serials in Vaudevilles

Portland, Ore., Exhibitors Decry Policy of Exchanges Who Rent Serials as Fillers to Vaudeville Theaters—Practice Is Hurtful to Suburban Theaters and Belittles Photoplays Generally, They Say.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Individual exhibitors are resenting the practice of exchanges in booking serial pictures to vaudeville theaters where such pictures are made merely the stub of a vaudeville program to fill in with while an audience is being seated or between shows. The use of serials for this purpose belittles continued photoplays generally and hurts the suburban theater man in particular, exhibitors complain.

It has been the practice of exchanges to book serials first run in vaudeville theaters and then to send them out into the suburbs. Vaudeville theaters attract their audiences by means of the vaudeville, and the patrons are compelled to see the pictures or whatever portion of them they come in on whether they want to or not. On the other hand, the suburban theater, being a straight photoplay house, is compelled to feature a serial that has usually been first run a full week to big vaudeville audiences as a mere filler. The result is self evident, the suburban exhibitors say.

Exchange men state that heretofore they have been unable to place serials in straight photoplay theaters for first run downtown, and were required, of necessity, to put their product in vaudeville houses.

Innovation at the Star.

Portland, Ore.—During the week of April 15 the Star theater, People's Amusement Company, owners, tried something new in the way of programs. Charlie Chaplin in "The Cure," Mutual; "Mystery of the Double Cross," serial, Pathe, a split-reel educational and comic, and a two-reel Universal drama constituted the show. Thus three exchanges were represented in the program. This is the first time in years that an old time "mixed" bill has been presented at a downtown first run theater, and first run exhibitors are watching the outcome of the experiment.

Kellermann Film Goes Big.

Portland, Ore.—The "Daughter of the Gods," played at the Majestic theater, J. J. Parker, owner, commanding 75, 50 and 25 cents admission, proved a most successful venture. The picture ran eight days, commencing April 8.

The success of the Kellermann picture at advanced prices is of great significance to Portland's straight picture theaters. Heretofore the first run super-features commanding increased admission prices have been shown only in uptown legitimate theaters. The Majestic is a straight photoplay house, usually charging 15 cents The ice now being broken, it is anticipated that other downtown picture theaters will compete for the big pictures.

An oriental lobby display, girl ushers in special uniforms and elaborate interior decorations were used for the occasion. C. E. Couche, the Majestic's publicity man, designed a ninety-inch advertisement for the Sunday newspapers that upheld Portland's reputation for convincing photoplay newspaper publicity.

Sunset Gives a Benefit.

Portland, Ore.—Co-operating with the ladies' auxiliary of the Third Oregon Naval Militia, the Sunset theater gave a benefit April 12, the proceeds from which were for the mess fund of the militia boys now in active service. The ladies of the auxiliary had charge of the floor at the Sunset and the Third Infantry men took care of the lobby, while the Third Infantry band did the honors in front of the theater.

"Patria" Ordered Off.

Portland, Ore.—"Patria" has been withdrawn from the screen at the Hippodrome theater upon orders from the San Francisco owners of that show house. The telegram ordering the withdrawal gives as the reason that San Francisco United States government officials requested that further showing of the serial here cease. At the time of this writing local government officials know nothing of the action reported to have been taken by the San Francisco authorities, and the local Pathe exchange, distributing the picture, had received no advice to hold it up.

Chapter ten of the serial was condemned by the Portland censors several weeks ago and more recently chapters 13 and 14 were excepted to by viewers and have been awaiting final disposition by regular censors. "Patria" has been very popular and well received locally.

Meldrum Leaves Universal.

Portland, Ore.—Jack Meldrum, booker for the past year at the exchange of the Film Supply Company of Oregon, has left that position to go back East. L. S. Clark, in charge of the poster department, has been promoted to booker. Mr. Clark was booker at the General Film when the Portland office was in charge of T. C. Malcolm, and is well liked by exhibitors in the territory.

Cohen and Sperry With Film Supply.

Portland, Ore.—I. Leeser Cohen, former manager of the Globe theater, and J. B. Sperry, former manager of the Pathe exchange, have been specially engaged to exploit Universal's "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Sperry is advance man for the production and Mr. Cohen has charge of the picture in the cities in which it is shown. The Film Supply company of Oregon now has five traveling representatives in the territory.

General Film Employes Now With Mutual.

Portland, Ore.—Most of the employees of the General Film, which recently closed in Portland, have gone into the offices of the Mutual, both in Portland and Seattle. N. F. Dobbs, former bookkeeper, now holds a similar position at the Portland Mutual office. Chet. Alderman, former road man, is traveling for Mutual out of Seattle and two of the G. F. stenographers are typists at the Seattle Mutual office.

Two Theaters Close.

Portland, Ore.—The Millard Avenue theater, in the Mt. Scott district, and the Rosebud, on Grand avenue, have closed, Gordon Smith, who operated at the Millard Avenue, is filling the position of corporal in the Third Oregon Infantry. E. T. Pittmon, of the Rosebud, is giving all his time to duties at the Circle theater, where he has been employed for a long time.

Bangor Company Takes Local Keith Houses

Park and Bijou Theaters Pass Into the Control of New Company of Local Men Headed by J. Norman Towle as President.

From J. J. Phillips, Photo Play Editor, Boston Journal.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The new Majestic theater was opened by the Emery Brothers in Providence, R. I., on Monday, April 9. The new house is considered to be one of the finest in New England, and is equipped throughout with all modern theatrical appliances, beautifully furnished with plush seats on both the floor and balcony, and is finished throughout in ivory, old rose and gold, with silk tapestry. A spacious promenade has been erected on the balcony floor and a gentleman's smoking room and ladies' rest room has been arranged. Many prominent New England film men attended the opening. Emery Brothers have contracted for World Film pictures in this new theater.

J. F. O'Neil to Manage Dudly Theater.

Roxbury, Mass.—Harry Gustin, who has managed the Dudly theater, Roxbury, Mass., since its opening in January, has left. J. F. O'Neil, former manager of the Ideal theater, Roxbury, will be in charge. Mr. O'Neil has had a wide experience in the moving picture business, having managed the Wakefield theater, Wakefield, Mass., and for a time was on the road with "The Birth of a Nation."

"Mothers of France" to Open at Park Theater.

Boston, Mass.—Elaborate plans have been made by Manager Stanley W. Hand of the World Film, Boston branch, for the showing of "The Mothers of France" at the Park theater on Tuesday, April 17. Manager Hand has invited all the city and state officials, together with the New England exhibitors and Boston newspaper men and women. It is expected that a large audience will witness the first showing of this wonderful picture that features the divine Sarah, now on the World program.

Boston City Club Gets Enthusiastic Over Patriotic Film.

Boston, Mass.—The government supervised film, "How Uncle Sam Prepares," was shown for the first time in Boston at the Boston City Club, Thursday evening, April 12th. Fifteen hundred members were in attendance and patriotism ran riot at some of the stirring scenes as they were flashed on the screen. This photoplay is an effort on the part of the government to stimulate recruiting and increase demand for universal military training. The portrayal of Uncle Sam at peace and at war made a visible impression on the crowd of able-bodied men present.

Patriotic Film Makes Impression.

Boston, Mass.—Many war films replete with spectacular interest have been shown on the screen from time to time, but none came home to us as did the remarkably interesting series of motion pictures that were shown for the first time on any screen at the Tremont Temple, Monday evening, April 16th, and entitled "How Uncle Sam Prepares." Every phase of warfare, including maneuvers on land and sea, are shown in these pictures, produced by authority and under the supervision of military experts. The films should prove a most effective stimulant for recruiting of our army and navy.

G. M. A. Fecke Heads Local World Film

Boston, Mass.—George M. A. Fecke has assumed the management of the Boston World Film office, Stanley W. Hand having been transferred to the New York World exchange, where he will act in the capacity of assistant manager. Mr. Fecke, a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., is a new man to the film business, but is thoroughly familiar with the New England territory, having covered it for the Oliver Typewriter Company in an executive capacity as well as a salesman.

Lancaster Theater Begins Continuous Shows.

Boston, Mass.—The Lancaster theater, Boston's newest downtown house, has met with such success that instead of two programs a day the house is running continuous from 1 to 10:30. Manager Ross has announced that any man wearing a United States uniform will be admitted to the Lancaster at any time without charge.

BANGOR, ME., NOTES.

Bangor, Me.—Bangor had a big patriotic demonstration recently, 5,000 turning out in a big parade. Daniel M. Maher, operator at the Park theater, got out his moving picture camera and took many views of the procession. The pictures came out very well and have been shown at the Park and the Bijou theaters for four days, drawing big crowds—Secret: 4,999 of the 5,000 who took part in the parade and 2,162 of their friends have been to the theaters to see how they looked in moving pictures. The visitors included militia from neighboring cities and towns and it is probable that the film will be shown throughout the state. This is a good tip for Maine theaters—to take moving pictures of local events and then have the participants come to your theaters to see themselves. The bigger the parade, the more will come. Taking photographs in motion of crowds on the street or at fairs, etc., ought to be a similar feature. Hundreds of Bangor people have visited the local theaters two or three times so as to see themselves more than once.

Emery Brothers Open Theater in Providence

New Majestic Photoplay House Opened on April 9—Has Many Attractive Features—Prominent Film Men Attend Opening.

From John P. Flanagan, 151 Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

BANGOR, ME.—The most important theatrical deal in Bangor for some time was executed last week, when the control of Bangor's two big Keith theaters, the Park and the Bijoju, passed into the hands of Bangor men. A new corporation, known as the Bangor Theaters Co., headed by J. Norman Towle, publisher of the Bangor Daily News, as president and treasurer, and with Stephen Bogrett, former Keith manager of the theaters, as clerk and director, has taken over the Bangor Amusement Co. and the Bangor Nickel Co., formerly the holding companies for the Keith interests. The theaters will be run on the same general plan as in the past as far as moving pictures are concerned. Bangor has not had very much legitimate drama during the past few years and Manager Bogrett is confident that he can come very close to satisfying the needs of Bangor in this respect. He will have more good road shows than in the past and between times will run vaudeville and moving pictures.

This transaction is similar to that which took place in Lewiston a short time ago, and looks like a gradual withdrawal of the Keith interests from the State of Maine, theatrically speaking. It is rumored that the corporation which took over the Lewiston theaters recently also tried to gain control of the Bangor houses, but fortune smiles on Bangor men this time.

Under the direction of Manager Bogrett, an experienced and astute theatrical manager, the Park and Bijou should ride the waves of life to success and prosperity. The Park, an exclusive moving picture house, will show only the best of photoplays.

The capital stock of the Bangor Theaters Co. is authorized at $30,000, all common, nothing paid in, par value $100, shares subscribed, three.

Getting Ready for Baltimore League Ball

F. C. Weber Reminds Exhibitors That Tickets for the Coming League Ball Are On Sale—Some Who Have Already Taken Boxes.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Sunday night, April 15, an audience composed of the exhibitors of Baltimore, with their families and friends, numbering about 300, assembled at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, for a private view of "Womanhood the Glory of a Nation" and a premier view of "The Butcher Boy," featuring "Fatty" Arbuckle. This was held under the auspices of L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New, and at the same time the Maryland Exhibitors' League held a meeting of the Board of Directors, and just prior to the screening of the picture a plea to those present to co-operate in making the "Dance of the Motion Picture Stars" a success was made by Frederick Clement Weber, chairman of the Ball Committee.

There are twenty boxes at the Lyric theater, where the ball is to be held, and ten have been taken by the following men: F. A. Hornig, L. Schlichter, T. D. Goldberg, Dr. F. W. Schanze, Joseph Brodie, J. Louis Rome, W. E. Stumpf, E. B. McCurdy, E. C. Sandell and P. Oletzky. Each box costs $15. There are also 1,500 seats in the balcony which are on sale. There will be two men in the lobby to-night ready to take your subscriptions, if any of you desire to do so, and I hope you will buy a box to-night."

Among those seen and recognized by the writer at this gathering were: L. A. DeHoff, Louis Schlichter, E. B. McCurdy, Thomas D. Goldberg, William E. Stumpf, L. Benesch, Frederick Clement Weber, Joseph Brodie, Julius Goodman, William Leicht, E. Cook, J. Louis Rome, A. B. Price, N. Goldberg, J. F. Diehl, Harry Blechman, J. Rabinowitz, Jack Levine, Miss T. Marks, M. Goldberg, Thomas McConnel.

Leader Manager Changed.

Baltimore, Md.—William Bowden, who for some months has managed the Leader theater, 241 South Broadway, has resigned this position, and it is understood that B. J. Fields, who now operates Fields' Photoplay theater, will probably succeed him. Mr. Bowden at one time had the maangement of the Ideal theater in Hampden.

Has Nice Words for Censors.

Baltimore, Md.—"I have always found the Maryland Board of Censors a very courteous and prompt body of people to deal with," said P. Oletzky, manager of the Baltimore Film Exchange, the other day. "Whenever this office has come into contact with them they have treated us fine, and we have always had pleasant associations with the Board."

B. Freeman on the Jump.

Baltimore, Md.—Barnett Freeman, representative for the Universal company in this territory, returned from a trip through Eastern Pennsylvania last week, and on Friday, April 20, started out on a trip through Western Maryland and West Virginia. Mr. Freeman celebrated his second anniversary with the Universal recently. He is an old timer in the film game, and in 1909 was associated with the Eagle and Lubin companies in Philadelphia.

Lubin's Is Changing Exterior.

Baltimore, Md.—Rumbling sounds can be heard in front of Lubin's theater, 404-6 East Baltimore street, these days, for William Tyler, manager, states that they are having all the stucco work ornamenting the front torn down owing to the tax that would have to be paid according to the new minor privilege schedule now in effect. When the exterior is entirely renovated and painted the theater will present a much neater and brighter appearance.

Wilson Exterior Changed.

Baltimore, Md.—Owing to the new minor privilege schedule of taxes in this city, Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, has had the electric sign removed from the front of this house, and in place of the huge gilt ball, which formerly surmounted the roof, a flag pole has been erected from which now proudly floats the starry banner.

McHenry Theater Will Soon Open.

Baltimore, Md.—It is announced by Harry Webb, president of the Parkway and McHenry Theater Companies, that the latter theater will be ready to receive the public about May 15. The McHenry is located on Light street, south of Poultney, and will probably seat about 1,000 people.

School Children See Dickens Play.

Baltimore, Md.—When the Fox production of Charles Dickens' masterpiece, "The Tale of Two Cities," was screened on Thursday, April 12, at the Picture Garden theater, 31 West Lexington street, Joseph Blechman made special arrangements to accommodate the school children from all over this city. It is understood that during the entire day about 2,000 children were brought to witness the performance by their teachers.

CAPITAL CITY NOTES.

Sidney B. Lust Takes on New Men.

Washington, D. C.—Nat. Glaser, formerly with the V-L-S-E, Inc., has joined the sales force of Sidney B. Lust, Inc., and will cover the large towns in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina and Delaware. Mr. Glaser for many years was manager of the Leader theater on Ninth street. He resigned to join the Stanley company in Philadelphia. Desiring to return to Washington, he joined the V-L-S-E sales force and now will handle the Selznick pictures and other features handled by Mr. Lust. H. P. Rhodes is also a new addition to the Sidney B. Lust, Inc., sales force. Mr. Rhodes will cover the smaller towns in the same territory that will be looked after by Mr. Glaser. He was formerly with the International Film and with the World Film. Sidney B. Lust, Inc., 903 E street, northwest, announces that it will handle the Mutt and Jeff cartoons in this territory. One of these is to be released each week. The cartoons are single reel features of 500 foot length.

B. C. Cunningham Stops Over.

Washington, D. C.—Among the visitors last week was B. C. Cunningham, formerly manager of the local exchange of the Mutual company. Mr. Cunningham has since joined the Artcraft and has been the Philadelphia manager. His visit to Washington was for the purpose of bidding farewell to his friends and relatives prior to his going to Seattle, Wash., to assume the management of the Artcraft exchange in that city.

Tom Moore Has Big Project

Washington, D. C., to Have Another Immense Theater Capable of Accommodating 3,389 Persons in Seats and Have Room for 3,000 to Stand—An Account of Some of the Theater's Details and Dimensions.

Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Another big motion picture theater is planned for Washington, according to an announcement just made by Tom Moore, who already operates the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters on Ninth street. The new project will be located near the northeast corner of Ninth and G streets, northwest. The contract for the erection of the building has already been awarded, and Mr. Moore states that ground will be broken within two weeks. The work is to go forward without delay so that the new playhouse may open for business next October.

It is declared that the site chosen is an ideal one. It is in the heart of the shopping district, and is centrally located near four of the largest department stores of the city. Besides, it is not more than a block from any car line, and is less than a block from lines which bring in the crowds from residential sections each day. The theater will occupy an area of 22,000 square feet. Its dimensions will include a lobby 75 feet by 100 feet, and a seating area of 100 by 102 feet. Designed for a two-floor house, the theater will have a main seating floor and a mezzanine floor, with a balcony or family circle. Plans include a seating capacity of 3,389, with standing room for 3,000 more.

Modeled after the Strand and Rialto theaters of New York, the new playhouse will be a distinctive amusement place here.

With the main entrance on Ninth street, the house will extend back to Eighth street. Inside the main entrance will be a spacious lobby done in white marble. Past this lobby will be a rotunda, with a glass dome which will admit light and which can be so arranged as to admit air and sun. Around the lobby will be a balcony furnished as a lounge and resting place. One of the striking features of the rotunda will be a natural flower garden, which will be automatically watered. A marble stairway will lead to the mezzanine floor and the family circle.

There will be an elaborately arranged stage adaptable to being decorated with scenery, illuminated flowers or other features. The orchestra will occupy a substage, lowered so as not to interfere with the view of the audience.

The displays of future productions, as well as those current, will be made by illuminated transparent material framed in white marble. They will prove both a guide to the patron and a decoration.

Along the Eighth street length there will be a 142-foot lawn, with flowers, benches, fountains, etc.

All told, it is expected to be one of the most attractive playhouses of its kind. The programs to be given at this amusement palace are in keeping with the theater. Mr. Moore plans to have nothing but the largest productions which could not otherwise be exhibited in a theater built for moving pictures alone. Such plays as the "Birth of a Nation" will be exhibited there, but they will be shown at the ordinary movie price.

On of the main permanent features of the theater will be an orchestra of more than 25 high class musicians, who will render scores by several of the most noted music writers.

Washington Wants Goldwyn Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Washington exhibitors are viewing with a great deal of interest the information which is being disseminated throughout the country concerning the probable release through their own exchanges of the Goldwyn Pictures. In a recent announcement in the Moving Picture World was the statement that this company would soon open its own branch offices in all the important distributing centers. Washington is a very important city from a distributing standpoint, because of the exceptional transportation facilities and connection with northern and southern points, this being a terminal city. Further, by the time that the company gets ready to engage in active operation in Washington there will have been completed the new fireproof film exchange building, which will give them an excellent location.

A number of prominent moving picture exchangemen have been mentioned as probable appointees as head of the business in this city should the company decide to invade Washington. The rumor has it that H. C. Wales, who so successfully held down the manager's chair at the World Film office, and who left to accept a position with the company in another city, will probably be the successful candidate. Other names have been connected up with the proposition, but in view of the fact that no definite announcement of the opening of an office here has been made, nothing can be said of it.

Local Business Notes.

Boston, Mass.—The New England Paramount office reports over three hundred bookings in this territory on Fatty Arbuckle's first release for this company, "The Butcher Boy." The following first-run houses in Boston will show this picture: The Beacon theater, Boston theater, Exeter Street theater, Orpheum theater, St. James theater. Second-run houses in Boston are: Keith's Bijou, Dudley Street theater and the Eagle theater. The first run in Providence are: Fay's theater, Modern theater, Strand theater and the Emery theater. All of Poli's circuit of theaters in New England have been booked first run on the "Butcher Boy."

The first of the series of O. Henry stories will be shown the week of April 23d at the Scollay Sq. Olympia and Gordon's Olympia theater, Boston.

"Mothers of France," the latest Bernhardt film, was shown for the first time in Boston at the Park theater on Tuesday, April 17th. Over three hundred exhibitors and invited guests were present and were unanimous in their praise of this beautiful and touching picture.

Harvey S. Bird Leases Truxton Theater.

Washington, D. C.—Harvey S. Bird, a local merchant, who was formerly connected with theaters in Norfolk, Va., has secured a lease on the Truxton theater and airdome at North Capitol street and Florida avenue, northwest. This house was formerly operated by Wickham Bros., of the Dixie theater at Eighth and H streets, northeast, and W. S. Wickham was in charge. A. N. Waters, who was recently with the K. & R. Film company, handling "The Spoilers" through North Carolina and other points in this territory, and who for several years was manager of the Dixie and Apollo theaters, respectively, will look after Mr. Bird's interests. These two were associated with each other in the theater business during the Jamestown Exposition.

S. J. Dudley Gets Midcity Theater.

Washington, D. C.—S. J. Dudley has recently secured control of the Midcity theater, a colored house located at Seventh and I streets, northwest. This place was formerly operated by Sherman Mason.

Two Philadelphia Theater Deals

Four Prominent Picture Houses Figure in Two Transactions That Are Causing Local Comment—Stanley Company Takes Over the Imperial and Empress—Nirdlinger Gets Interest in Strand and Leader Theaters.

F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Two important transactions affecting four prominent motion picture houses have been the subject of discussion in film circles here this week. By one of these Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger is reported to have secured an interest in the Strand and Leader theaters. The second announcement is to the effect that the Imperial and Empress theaters have come under the direction of the Stanley company.

Mr. Nirdlinger, who is an important figure in theatrical circles here, it is reported will give unlimited co-operation in any theatrical venture which may be attempted at the Strand. The house is equipped with a full size stage and the most modern appliances for handling scenery and housing a company, and could handle a nigger musical comedy if necessary. Herbert Effinger will remain as manager both at this house and the Leader, and will supply the cinematographic experience needed for the success of the photoplay programs.

Announcement in regard to the Imperial states that while programs in the past have been of interest they will be such in the future that patrons may be assured of seeing the first releases of popular stars in their new plays. All the resources of the Stanley company are to be placed at the service of Imperial patrons, and the same rules in conducting the business will apply as are enforced in other Stanley houses. Besides photoplays special attention is to be paid to music as an added feature, and there will be concerts by the Imperial concert orchestra, and organ recitals, with a change of program daily, on the grand organ by Professor Lovett.

The showings were largely society events, for women of prominence lent their aid in selling flowers and souvenirs for the cause.

New Coliseum to Have Good Music.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. F. Sisty, of the New Coliseum, has secured the services of Francis Hogan, an organist of reputation, whose performances on the grand orchestral organ have proved to be thoroughly enjoyed by patrons. An attractive feature of the house is the handsomely decorated lobby, which was arranged by Louis Ball, special publicity man of the house.

MORE BALTIMORE NEWS NOTES.

Pictorial Changes Hands.

Only Three Licenses at Towson.

Towson, Md.—Clerk of the Court Cole at Towson, Md., was quite a surprised chap on Wednesday, April 11, when he observed that only three applications for licenses for the operating of moving picture theaters had been filed, and that this was the last day on which applications for licenses to run moving picture theaters after May 1 could be filed. This number of licenses is just 16 less than the number filed last year. Evidently the profits of that 16 must have been torpedoed.

Manager Anderson Aids Recruiting.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles S. Anderson, manager of the Grand theater in Highlandtown, helped the recruiting considerably on Sunday night, April 15, when he loaned this house for a huge patriotic mass-meeting. Thirty-two stalwart fellows responded to the call after hearing the rousing speeches made by some of Maryland's most prominent men.

Bans All Films That Discourage Enlisting

Attorney General of Pennsylvania Issues Order on War Films—Censors May Revoke Licenses of Theaters That Disregard It.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Films that in any way might discourage enlistments are to be barred from the screens in motion picture houses of Pennsylvania. An order to this effect was issued this week by Attorney General Francis S. Brown in a letter addressed to all theater proprietors and motion picture houses of the state. The proprietors must judge for themselves which pictures are likely to influence young men against enlistment, as the Attorney General does not specify them. Mr. Brown reminds the proprietors that the Board of Censors has the right to revoke the license of any one who fails to comply with requests of this kind.

The Rev. Isaac Bagley, motion picture censor of Camden, N. J., has issued orders of similar content. The notice in this case states that theaters must not show any pictures of "horrible" war scenes during the duration of the war. Although Camden city ordinances do not specifically give authority for such an order, Dr. Bagley justified it on the ground that film plays or actual photographs of unusually bad conditions prevented young men from enlisting.

A. B. Price, manager of the Rialto and Mt. Royal theaters, ran a repeat on "Skinner's Dress Suit" on Saturday, April 14.

"The Fall of a Nation" played to large crowds at the Red Moon theater on Saturday, April 14.

For several days last week Frank A. Hornig, president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League and owner of the Horn and Royal theaters, was ill and confined to his bed.

B. Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theater, paid a short visit to New York City on Friday, April 13. C. W. Pacey, of the Garden theater in South Baltimore, also went to the big town last week.

A huge roof garden over the Maryland theater and hotel by that name may become a reality in the near future if the plans of Manager Schanberger are found to be feasible.

The building materials, constituting the old Holliday street theater, were sold at public auction on Monday, April 16, by Comptroller Thrift to Herbert and Prodoehl.

Pittsburgh Film Men Form F.I.L.M. Club

Local Exchanges Feel Need of Organization—New Club Elects F. C. Burhams as President and Miles Gibbon Secretary—Seek Quarters.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jen kins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—After a series of meetings extending over several months the exchange men of Pittsburgh have recently effected the organization of an F. I. L. M. Club, following the lead of practically every large film center in the country. The club has enrolled twenty-one exchanges out of the twenty-three concerns doing business in the city, has thereby started its career with the complete co-operation of practically the entire local film trade.

The officers of the club are as follows: President, F. C. Burhans, manager of the Vitagraph; secretary, Miles Gibbon, manager of the K-E-S-E; treasurer, John E. Davis, manager of the Metro. A film reporting bureau in charge of Attorney Harry Miller will be conducted in connection with the club. There have also been appointed a membership committee, an investigating committee and a grievance committee.

The club has placed in operation a method of bringing about an adjustment of all difficulties between the exhibitors and the exchanges, and the officers report that the initial results have been highly gratifying to all concerned. Reports of any grievances are presented to the attorney of the club, and the matter is then turned over to the investigating committee. The facts secured are laid before the grievance committee, and an impartial hearing is given both sides.

Commenting upon the work of the organization, President Burhans said: "Pittsburgh exchange men have for some time felt the necessity of a body of this kind, where the various film managers could become acquainted and interchange ideas which will prove beneficial to all. A spirit of co-operation is the object of the club, as well as the fostering of good-fellowship among the exchange heads of the city.

"The film reporting bureau conducted in connection with the club will serve as a protection to the legitimate exhibitor—the one who is in the business to stay—against the pernicious practices of the 'fly-by-nighters,' and those who admittedly are a menace to both the exhibitor and the exchangeman alike."

Arrangements are now under way to secure quaretrs for the club, where the regular meetings and the sessions of the various committees will be held in addition to serving as a place for the social gathering of the film trade. The club meets evry Tuesday.

Protest Against Ban on Children.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A joint committee representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pittsburgh and the F. I. L. M. Club went to Harrisburg last week and entered the protest of the moving picture industry against the bill now pending before the state legislature to prevent children under sixteen years of age from attending places of amusement unless accompanied by an adult. Several conferences were held with the legislators, and the committee reports that considerable pressure must yet be brought to bear to prevent the measure from becoming a law. The bill is now in committee, and its adoption or rejection is expected in the near future. The delegation also secured a conference on the proposed bill, which is designed to set an age limit on those employed as moving picture machine operators.

The committee states that there is a favorable attitude toward the bill to be introduced during the present session amending the present censorship law by the substitution of less drastic regulations. The delegation was made up of Al W. Cross, L. P. Miller and Harry I. Miller, of the F. I. L. M. Club, and George A. Sahner, Henry Poke and James E. Smith, of the Exhibitors' League.

Cleveland Mayor Can't Stop "Purity" Show

Judge Moylan in City Court Rules that State Censor Board's O. K. Is Enough—Police Not Permitted to Ignore Its Decision.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, O.—Another censorship obstacle has been demolished by stiff fighting in the courts.

Judge Moyland, in the city court of Cleveland, ruled this week that "Purity" could be shown in Cleveland. First he viewed the picture and then approved the O. K. of the Ohio Censor Board.

The city authorities stopped this picture at the Gordon Square theater two months ago, seizing the films. Only ten days ago the common pleas court decided that the O.K. of the censors on "The Birth of a Nation" could not be ignored by the mayor and police, who sought to prevent its being shown.

This double blow at the city authorities perhaps will prevent further interference in the showing of pictures which are approved by the state censor board.

Ed. Cohn Talks on Wastage of Posters.

Cleveland, O.—Ed. Cohn, of the Consolidated Film Service here, has submitted to the World correspondent the following interesting article on the conservative of posters:

"For several months I have been advocating the idea for the various exchanges of Cleveland to co-operate in the poster room as well as in the film department.

"Hundreds of posters are sent back to the wrong exchange, and when you figure the cost of paper, the losses at the end of the year are enormous, and right here is the answer why the exhibitors are paying for their posters today.

"Many of the exhibitors are careless about their paper, shipping it to the wrong exchange, not returning it at all, or else sending it back in such bad condition that it can not be used again. How many times have you got a six sheet and wondered why you could not get a better one? Put yourself in the place of the man who follows you and think how you would feel if you had received damaged posters from the exhibitor ahead of you. Or if you are your own operator and look down from the booth and see only a few seats occupied, don't take it out on the exchange by jamming their films, damaging the posters and not returning the slide. The trouble in the past has been that some people thought all it required to make a successful theater is a moving picture machine and a cashier, and the sooner we get rid of these undesirables, the better it will be for the industry.

"In closing let me say that this plan is being worked successfully by the Cleveland exchanges and I hope our idea will spread throughout the country.

(Signed) Ed. Cohn, Mgr.,
The Consolidated Film Service,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Walter W. Kulp in the Cigar Business.

Cleveland, O.—Walter W. Kulp, one of the pioneer film exchange men of Ohio, has quit the business, and opened up a barber shop and cigar stand on the ground floor of the Belmont building, Cleveland, occupied by many film companies.

"Now that I have anything against the film business," said Kulp, "but I saw an opportunity to get into another line in a location which will keep me in touch with my friends in the industry.

"I will say, however, that the motion picture business seems to be getting harder every day. It is more or less a survival of the fittest."

Mr. Kulp held several responsible positions with film companies during the last ten years, besides having been engaged in the independent side of the industry on two occasions. He was branch manager for World, Fox and Bluebird successively, and later opened the Ohio Feature company, marketing the Ivan productions.

H. C. Fourton Takes Charge of the Savoy.

Atlanta, Ga.—H. C. Fourton, who has so successfully managed the Odeon and Rialto theaters in this city since they have been taken over by Jake Wells, has now been placed in charge of the Savoy theater, and assumed the management Monday. Mr. Fourton is one of Jake Wells' most efficient managers, having had charge of Wells' theaters in many of the leading cities of the south. His career in the theatrical profession is a long one, he having been at the head of companies comprising some of the greatest musical artists in the country. His name is associated with the palmiest days of grand opera in New Orleans, in fact he was the organizer of the most excellent grand opera stock company which played for many months in that city. While located in New Orleans, Mr. Fourton was at different times manager of the Auditorium, Grand opera house and also the Lafayette theater. Thousands of professional friends and also personal friends here, as well as in other parts of the country, will be pleased to hear of his new appointment.

Enthusiastic Patriotism at the Forsyth.

Atlanta, Ga.—Patriotism was marked at the Forsyth theater this week. It started with the Pathe weekly. About midway in the picture there was a flutter of a flag. This was the signal for the start of a demonstration. Tuesday night the first wave of Old Glory began the applause. Then came pictures of the Seventeenth infantry entraining at El Paso for their trip back to Atlanta, and when the picture of Georgia Hulett, the private who killed Gervantes, was shown there was a tremendous outburst.

Then came troops and the Statue of Liberty, and a tumult that swept from pit to dome began. When the orchestra started into "The Star Spangled Banner" every person stood, and for a time the audience remained as silent as if taking part in a sacred ceremony. Then when Old Glory fluttered to the center of the screen there was an outburst that was deafening. And when a slide calling recruits was screened to the tune of "Dixie," people literally rose up and yelled.

Because of the popularity of the National Anthem and the equal favor with which "Dixie" is greeted, Manager Hickman kept the two tunes as part of the regular program the entire week.

A second patriotic outburst came at the end of the week's show, when the Burton Holmes travel pictures show how Uncle Sam's middies are trained at Annapolis.

Film Shows Georgia National Guard.

Atlanta, Ga.—Members of the Atlanta National Guard are showing this week at the auditorium the motion picture, "Is Georgia Prepared?" giving pictures of the life of the Georgia troops on the Mexican border. A small fee is being charged to meet the expenses of making the picture, which cost $2,000.

The film was made at Camp Cotton, near El Paso, and at other points where the Georgia troops were stationed, and friends are being given glimpses of the men while they were on the border.

The pictures were taken especially for the Georgians, and the majority of them are of the Fifth regiment. They are practically a living record of the daily life of the boys while on the border, and in addition to this contain scenes of sham battles illustrating the action which the troops would have in actual war time.

Among the activities featured are trench digging, battle formations, cooking, guard duty, drills, broncho busting, target practice and the like.

Macon, Ga.—O. P. Hall, manager of the Princess theater in Macon, was in Atlanta Saturday shaking hands with friends.

Atlanta, Ga.—"Joan the Woman" is showing this week at the Atlanta theater to capacity.

Atlanta, Ga.—Charley Kessnick, manager of Mutual, has returned from a business trip through the Carolinas.

Shall Horrors of War in Film be Banned?

Senator George Davis Is Advocating Placing a Restriction on the Showing of Films That Might Discourage Enlisting.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Shall the ban be placed on certain forms of war drama? A Buffalo man, who has considerable influence with the Government is advocating such a restriction. He is former Senator George Davis of this city, who, with Capt. Hamilton Ward, of Buffalo, represented this county at the Albany conference on home defense this week. Senator Davis made the suggestion at the conference that a censorship be placed on war dramas that depict the horrors of war and thus retard recruiting.

Ira Mosher Lectures to Rotary Club.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Ira M. Mosher, manager of the Palace theater, Bucalo, recently addressed the Rotary Club of this city on the subject, "Pictures Old and New." He showed moving pictures to indicate the advances made in the film industry in the past few years.

In the certificate Mr. Hutchinson assures the exhibitors that "The Railroad Raiders," starring Helen Holmes, is a superior production. This guarantee is in bank note style, and has been prepared at considerable expense. Mr. Hutchinson closes with the announcement that this serial "assures capacity business for fifteen weeks."

Picture Show Men Help Patriotic Movement.

Be Sure to "Put Up a Good Front."

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I have in mind a case where by false economy the best possible financial results were not attained at a theater in this territory playing a large feature production," said a Buffalo exchange man, who asked to have his name omitted for obvious reasons. "The sign and art display in the lobby were not up to the standard, and really detracted from the crowd-drawing nature of the show. 'Putting up a good front' is very essential to success in every line these days, and the theater that doesn't observe this rule will lose thousands of dollars to which it is really entitled in the course of a year."

Lieut. Bloomer Lecturing for Recruits in Theaters.

Frank H. Bloomer, lieutenant of the 74th regiment, National Guard, has developed into a successful moving picture lecturer. For several years he has been a police reporter on the Buffalo Evening News. At present he is featuring snappy talks to explain films showing the work of Buffalo troopers on the Mexican border. Canadian General Film Co. Reorganized Officers of the New Company Are T. A. Hubby, President, and T. Coppleman, Secretary-Treasurer—Head Offices Are in Montreal.

By W. M. Gladdish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, Ont.—The interests of the General Film company in Canada have been reorganized and with the reconstruction comes a new corporation known as the General Film of Canada, Limited, which has assumed charge of all branch offices and tangible assets in the Dominion of the General. Gulick, New York, William F. Rogers, New York, and Edward English, Montreal. E. H. Wells, formerly general manager of the General for Canada, has become sales manager with the new concern.

The new arrangement is the result, it is declared, of a desire to organize the interests of the company in such a way that a closer touch with Canadian conditions and developments would be maintained than was possible at long range. For the present two prints of all subjects will be imported by the Canadian company, one of which will go to Montreal and the other to Toronto. The head office of the Canadian company has been established at Montreal.

W. A. Sault Is Triangle Sales Manager.

National Exchange Association in Canada

Consolidation of All Local Exchange Associations Into Single Body Is Needed—Meeting Will Be Called to Organize Body.

TORONTO, ONT.—The consolidation of all local exchange associations throughout Canada is urged by the Exchangemen's Association of Manitoba, whose headquarters are, of course, at Winnipeg. The Winnipeg exchange managers have asked for a National organization to protect and promote the interests of the Canadian film industry from coast to coast and it has been suggested that a National convention be held in Winnipeg or Toronto next fall. Exchange associations are already in evidence in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg and other Canadian cities and the Winnipeg managers would use these as the foundation for a national body.

Garrick Theater Will Open.

Toronto, Ont.—For several years there has been an unnamed and dark picture theater at College street and Dovercourt road, Toronto. In fact the house was never opened for business after it was built, although its constructional type was appealing and attractive. A local syndicate, known as Playhouses and Theaters, Limited, has arranged to operate the theater, it is understood, and it will be known as the Garrick theater. A portion of the building is being remodeled.

International Bible Studens' Film Permit Revoked.

Toronto, Ont.—Because Judge J. F. Rutherford of Brooklyn, N. Y., made what is claimed by Canadian authorities to have been seditious statements at a moving picture entertainment of the International Bible Students in the Royal Alexandra theater, Toronto, on Sunday, April 8, Hon. J. F. McGarry, provincial treasurer for Ontario, has ordered the cancellation of the moving picture permit held by the International Bible Students. The association will, therefore, be unable to screen any more pictures within the Province.

Judge Rutherford declared, it is alleged, that Germany was an instrument in the hands of God for the scourging of all the earth.

W. A. Bach Changes His Plans.

Toronto, Ont.—W. A. Bach, advertising and publicity manager of the Canadian Universal, has not moved to the New York headquarters of the Universal after all. Bach made arrangements with M. H. Hoffman to do so, but when Mr. Hoffman resigned to start up in business for himself Mr. Bach decided to follow Hoffman. He left Toronto on April 18 for his new post after serving the Canadian Universal for the past two years, during which time he built up a fine exhibitors' service department and established a house organ known as "The Bulletin."

According to a wire, the first subject to be released from the Hoffman office will be "Sin Woman."

J. W. Cambridge, a Toronto advertising man, has succeeded Bach in the Canadian Universal.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—It has been announced that the Palace theater, the big house to be built by the Palace Amusement Company at Sixth street and Lodge alley, will be a popular priced vaudeville house, combining vaudeville and moving pictures with attractions furnished by the United Booking Offices, which supply the Keith houses in Cincinnati and elsewhere.

Among those interested in the company, which has the same backing as the Keith theater and the Strand, the Walnut and the Family moving picture houses, are A. Paul Keith, E. F. Albee, Joseph L. Rhinock, J. J. Murdock, John P. Harris, I. Libson, Maurice Goodman, R. K. Hynicka, C. S. Robinson and C. S. Humphrey. The new house will give these interests five big theaters in the heart of Cincinnati's downtown district. They are also building a big theater in Indianapolis for use in moving pictures exclusively.

"Daughter of Gods" Closes.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The third week of the great Fox picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," at the Lyric theater was its final week as far as the initial Cincinnati engagement is concerned. The Lyric management was unable to arrange to give further time to it on account of previous bookings of other features. Judging by the interest shown and the uniformly large houses which saw the production at the two daily performances it would have made money by a longer run. "A Daughter of the Gods" was followed by the film version of the Winston Churchill Civil War novel, "The Crisis."

Price Hill House Changes Hands.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The handsome photoplay house in Price Hill, at Warsaw and Wells avenues, has been sold by the company owning it to George Brink, who paid $6,250 for the property. The theater will be continued by the new owner of the building, he has announced.

Youngstown Council Bars "Nation" Film.

Youngstown, Ohio.—Local authorities have announced that they will not permit the exhibition in Youngstown of "The Birth of a Nation," taking the ground that it might incite race prejudice and thereby bring on trouble. The fact that the Ohio censors withdrew from this position when approving the film has not served to cause the mayor and his advisers to change their views. Several colored organizations were prominent in urging the authorities to take action along this line, and the city fathers yielded to their wishes. It is probable that the owners of the production will test in court the right of the city to refuse to permit the picture to be shown, as long as no question of morals is involved, and as it has the approval of the duly constituted censors.

"Purity" Well Advertised in Piqua.

Piqua, Ohio.—The exhibition at May's opera house of the Audrey Munson film, "Purity," caused the usual ripple of excitement, especially after an invited jury of clergymen reported adversely on the picture. The clergymen held a meeting after viewing the picture and finally expressed their disapproval. Manager Kress of the opera house indicated that he would be willing to abide by their verdict, but he found himself confronted by his contract to run the picture for two days, and had no legal alternative save to comply with the engagement. The matter created much discussion, and this naturally helped the picture to draw its usual large crowds. "Purity" has been exhibited in every city in Ohio where it has been booked, although there is always talk of municipal or other opposition.

"Mothers of France" Shown in Dayton.

Dayton, Ohio.—The great World-Brady picture featuring Mme. Bernhardt, "Mothers of France," was shown for the first time in Ohio recently at the Auditorium, the management reporting big houses to see the production, and marked enthusiasm at the striking war scenes shown, in many of which Mme. Bernhardt is said to have been actually under fire.

Dayton Strand Runs Newest Cash Register Film.

Dayton, Ohio.—The Strand recently ran the newest National Cash Register film in connection with its regular program, the subject being "The Evolution of a Cash Register," and showing the work of manufacturing the newest type of register from start to finish. The film was produced by the B. D. F. Film Company, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Manager Gruwell Appoints Assistants.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Manager J. P. Gruwell of the George Kleine office reports the addition of two important members to his staff. E. D. Otis has come from Chicago to take charge of the Linder comedies, which are now a leading feature of the K-E-S-E releases, succeeding W. F. Bugie, who resigned to assist Philip Selznick, of Philip Selznick, Inc., in his plans for showing stars and features simultaneously. J. P. Hamilton, formerly with the Paramount organization, has also been given a big territory under Manager Gruwell, and will travel Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia.

P. C. Mooney Visits With Joe Kaliski.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—P. C. Mooney, district manager of the Fox Film, came down from Cleveland to spend a few days with Manager Joe Kaliski, looking over the Cincinnati field. The Fox organization is looking forward with especial interest to the first showing in this territory of "She," featuring Valeska Surratt. The film is booked for its first run at the Star.

Kansas City News Letter.

Pretty Child's Room in Theater.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Frank Newman, proprietor of the Royal theater, has painted and redecorated his theater. One added feature which lends an effect of richness is the paper, which is in imitation of marble. The children's playroom is being changed from a mere Toyland to "Fairyland." Thirteen thousand feet of lattice work have been put in, from which will hang vines. A real tree is to be installed, on which will be the swing. In place of opera chairs will be rustic seats. New toys will be put in throughout. The color scheme is in ivory and baby blue, and taking into consideration the rustic effect, a cooler, prettier playhouse for the summer will be hard to find.

Interesting Bits from Local Theaters.

Kansas City, Mo.—Richards & Flynn, prietor of the Sapphire theater, opened remodeling and adding a balcony, which will raise the seating capacity 700.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. E. Elliott, proprietor of the Sapphire theater, opened the Grand theater April 16. The offering was "The Melting Pot." Mr. Elliott had several thousand circulars printed in Yiddish. These were deposited at strategic points such as the Kosher markets, etc., with every purchased article a reminder was inserted. In this way the advertising was carried into the heart of the Jewish quarter.

Kansas City, Mo.—Among subjects that are making money here at present are "Hell Morgan's Girl," at the Rialto, and Geo. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," at the 12th street. Both are running two weeks and drawing big crowds.

Wichita to Have Another Big Theater.

Wichita, Kan.—The Wichita theater, a $75,000 structure, is to be erected by the Wichita Theater Company. The plans call for a three-story building with an imposing front. It will seat 1,500 persons. On either side of the main entrance will be a store room. On the mezanine floor will be the rest rooms and refreshment parlors.

The theater company which was chartered early in April has elected the following officers: W. D. Jochems, president; J. H. Cooper, vice-president; C. C. McCollister, secretary and treasurer. Neva McCollister and E. D. McKeever, of Topeka, with the officers, will be the directors.

C. L. Martin's Family Group Night.

Pierce City, Mo.—C. L. Martin, manager of the Princess theater, is taking a long vacation in the west, stopping some time at Denver and San Francisco. His sister, Miss Ada Martin, will run the theater in his absence. The Princess is one of the most popular theaters in that section of the country. One drawing card is the Family Group Night (on which Paramount pictures are shown), when a percentage of the proceeds go to the schools. Mr. Martin claims that in this way he gets the patronage of the majority of the teachers and children.

New Downtown Theater Promised.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City is to have another elaborate downtown moving picture theater next year, in the heart of the shopping district. David H. and Samuel Barding of Omaha will be the owners and operators of the theater. It will seat 1,200, and be representative of all the latest ideas in theaters. The house will form a part of a new 8-story building to be erected at Eleventh and Main streets, for the Irwin Cloak and Suit Co. All the building, except the moving picture theater, will be used for retail sales purposes by the women's wear company. This property is among the most valuable pieces in the city, in the only cross-street downtown not having a car line, and at the end of Petticoat lane.

Exhibitors Fighting Hobbs Bill

Bill Seeking to Create a State Board of Censors Gets Its First Reading in Lower House of Legislature—Film Men Prepare to Oppose Its Passage—Said to Be Unconstitutional at This Session.

From Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—On May 16 the Kentucky House of Representatives, sitting in Frankfort, accepted from the Committee on Revenue and Taxation its report of the W. C. Hobbs bill, seeking to create a Board of Moving Picture Film Censors in Kentucky. Representative Spahn, of Louisville, endeavored to hold up the bill, moving to have it recommitted to the reporting committee. Representative Hobbs voiced vigorous objection to burying his bill in the hands of the committeemen, and the house, by a vote of 50 to 14, voted to give the bill its first reading, advancing it into the calendar.

This bill provides for the creation of a board to be appointed by the governor to view all films shown in the state, and imposing a fee of $5 for each inspection, and $5 for the right to exhibit. The fee is based at $5 for the first reel and $1 for each additional reel, which would make a $10 inspection fee for a six-reel feature. It is proposed in the bill that one of the three censors must be a woman.

Exhibitors from every section of the state are expected to go after their district representatives and use their influence in having this drastic proposal killed. A number of the exhibitors are working on the matter quietly at this time. An attorney at Frankfort, Ky., is assisting the exhibitors in the matter, and it is said that the bill is unconstitutional. The present session was called solely for the purpose of framing a new tax law, and the tax provisions in this bill are merely such as would make the bill self-supporting through paying the salaries of the people employed on the board. It is strictly a censorship bill. It is unreasonable in its provisions, and the exhibitors feel confident that it will never go through.

D. D. Smith Will Continue Capitol Theater.

Frankfort, Ky.—The Capitol Theater Co., composed of Fred J. Dolle, of Louisville; Dennis H. Long and A. J. Reese, which has been operating the Capitol theater of this city under a lease executed by the City of Frankfort, owner of the building, decided to withdraw, and on April 14 it was announced that D. D. Smith, owner of the Gem theater, has purchased the lease and will continue operations, closing his five-cent Gem. Manager R. L. McLean will continue with the new management, and the house will continue showing pictures and road attractions. The Sunday closing agitation was one of the strongest reasons why the Louisville men decided to withdraw.

Frankfort Business Men Want Sunday Shows.

Frankfort, Ky.—A formidable petition against closing the Sunday moving picture theaters has been drafted and signed by about 1,000 residents of Frankfort, among whom are bankers and prominent business and professional men as well as day laborers. The petition was to the effect that the signers considered Sunday shows as an asset to the city, and were opposed to their discontinuation, or to pressing suits now standing against some of the amusement companies on the ground of violating closing laws.

Warren Kerrigan Visits Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—Jack Warren Kerrigan, the well known film star, who is a resident of New Albany, Ind., which he claims as his birthplace, was recently in Louisville for a few days, and appeared on the stage at the Strand theater, and later met many of his old friends in the lobby. Mr. Kerrigan appeared during the screening of "The Beckoning Trail," one of his successful films. A few years ago he made his first stage appearance in Louisville in "Brown of Harvard," later appearing at Macauley's in "The Road to Yesterday."

Put "Garden of Allah" on in Fine Style.

Louisville, Ky.—The Strand theater recently presented the film production, "The Garden of Allah," featuring Helen Ware and Thos. Santschi, in impressive style, raising the ante during the week to twenty-five cents. A large symphony orchestra was employed, and also Gerald Gardner, a noted basso soloist, who sang the Bedouin love song. The mezzanine floor was reserved at fifty cents a seat, and the house drew excellent crowds. The show was well handled, and easily one of the greatest spectacles handled in Louisville in some time.

Col. William H. Meffert Dies.

Louisville, Ky.—Col. William H. Meffert, one of the best known theatrical men in the country and prominent in local politics, died last week of a lingering illness, climaxed with erysipelas. He was seventy-seven years of age, and a native of Louisville. In 1885 he became manager of the Masonic Temple theater, Fourth and Jefferson streets, the leading show house of the city at that time, and continued as manager until 1897, when he organized the Meffert Stock Company, in which were such well known players as David Wark Griffith, Oscar Eagle, Esther Lyons and Alexander Gaden. The stock company did a big business until 1891, when Mr. Meffert retired to go into politics. When the old Masonic temple was burned in 1893 Col. Meffert was manager of the big Hopkins vaudeville and moving picture theater at Second and Market streets, which burned about three years ago. This was his last theatrical connection. He is survived by his wife and three sons, Clarence, Larue and Milton Meffert.

Personal Notes and Business Jottings.

Warsaw, Ky.—The Lyric theater has been remodeled, a new front and box office being constructed. The house now puts up a decidedly improved appearance.

Paducah, Ky.—Police have been busy looking for the persons who recently stole two automobiles from in front of the Kentucky theater, the machines being abandoned after being used for joy rides.

Louisville, Ky.—Ushers Ray Mattingly and Martin Manning, at the Star theater, recently resigned to enlist in the army, and Manager Johnson Musselman has replaced them with girls, stating that girls could do the work as well, and aid the enlistment movement. Mr. Musselman stated that he would not be greatly surprised to see female operators in the booths if the war became serious.

Louisville, Ky.—While Easter Sunday was a frost with the exhibitors, due to a blizzard accompanied by snow and rain, the weather man decided to act nice thereafter, and business has been better than at any previous period since fall. Sunday, April 15, was a banner day with most of the downtown houses, they being unable to accommodate the crowds.

Michigan Exhibitors Should Begin to Act

Though No State Censorship Can Possibly Come Before 1919, Exhibitors in This State Should Guard Against Censorship Agitation.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—As we stated last week censorship of motion pictures in Michigan is officially "dead" at least for the next two years. The legislature does not convene again until 1919, so that meanwhile there can be no legislation of any kind. No doubt when it convenes again in two years hence the exhibitors of the state will again have to contend with censorship legislation. But there is a way, we believe, that adverse legislation of this sort can be prevented—and that is clean pictures. Give the patrons of your houses pictures that are clean—leave alone those that are objectionable—and the censorship fanatics won't have a leg to stand on at the next legislature.

Just because we are sure of there being no censorship for two years is no reason why exhibitors should let down the bars during that period, and "fall from grace," so to speak. There should be a stronger campaign than ever before for clean pictures, so that the clubwomen and clergy of the state can understand thoroughly that the exhibitors are endeavoring to do their own censoring, and that they know how to handle their own business without treading on the feet of the public.

The adjournment of the legislature not only kills both the Eaton and Bolen censorship bills, but also the Sunday closing bill, which means that the amusement business of the state will stand just as it is, with no new laws of any kind that are either more liberal or more stringent.

Consolidated Features a New Company.

Detroit, Mich.—Cleever and Sturgis, well-known exchangemen, have formed a copartnership under the style of the Consolidated Features, and have opened offices at room 42, 97 Woodward avenue, Detroit. They are taking bookings on "War's Women" from Michigan exhibitors.

Butterfield Notes.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—A number of the Butterfield theaters in Michigan discontinued their regular vaudeville policy on April 15th, and instead went to pictures, exclusively. The Majestic in Ann Arbor is now showing pictures, and will continue to do until some time the early part of September. Frank J. O'Donnell is manager of the Majestic, and he says he is in the market for all the big productions.

Trade Showing of "A Mormon Maid."

Detroit, Mich.—Col. W. S. Butterfield, of the State Film Co., Detroit, announces that there will be a trade showing soon of "A Mormon Maid," which he controls for this state. The screening will be in Detroit, and invitations will be extended to every exhibitor in the state. Several downtown theaters in Detroit are negotiating for first run.

Detroit Exhibitors Plan a Picnic.

Detroit, Mich.—A summer outing is being planned by the exhibitors of Detroit. The present plan is to take a boat trip some Sunday early in June to Put-in-Bay, chartering the big Steamer Put-in-Bay, and having dancing, music and motion pictures aboard the boat. It would be an all-day trip. Those who have been approached on the subject are highly in favor of such an outing, as they believe it would get the exhibitors better acquainted with one another, and would give their families a chance to become better acquainted. William H. Shiek, 819 Majestic building, secretary of the Detroit League, is handling the matter.

R. C. Visner Has Joined Vitagraph Force.

Detroit, Mich.—R. C. Visner, who has operated a number of theaters in the west, has joined the sales force of the Vitagraph exchange in Detroit.

"Good Programs" in Demand.

Detroit, Mich.—Robbert Cotton, of the World Film Exchange, is having a very good business. Mr. Cotton, following the advice from his superiors, is standing firmly for the program, and the increased bookings of the past sixty days show that while there is a growing sentiment for open booking there are still many exhibitors who want a good program at least four nights a week, and that the World is considered in the class of "good programs." Mr. Cotton says that putting "Mothers of France" on the regular program has stimulated interest and bookings for World Film pictures.

No Current Paramounts on Open Booking.

Detroit, Mich.—H. A. Ross, manager of the Paramount exchange, Detroit, wishes to impress upon Michigan exhibitors the fact that Paramount is not releasing its current attractions open booking, and that only those holding a franchise can get these latest releases. The open booking applies only to the first 52 released. Exhibitors are booking them in series of six, ten and twelve, while some have even booked as high as twenty-five of them. They are being sold at a price that, it is claimed, cannot fail to make money for the exhibitor.

New Michigan Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—Among the new theaters under construction in Michigan or about to be started are: Paul Schlossman is building a new house in Muskegon and remodeling another one.

The Iris theater, Jos. Campau and the Boulevard, Detroit, will be ready to open some time in May.

The Rialto theater at Ironwood is being remodeled, and will be renamed the Strand.

The Grand theater on West Jefferson is to be increased this summer to 2,000 seats.

A new theater is to be erected in Plymouth for Mrs. Kate Allen.

Then there is talk of a big new house to be erected on ? ? – ? ?

George J. Haas, architect in the Kresge building, Detroit, is preparing plans for a theater on Caniff avenue that will be 30 by 100 feet in size.

It is reported that A. T. Campbell, who operates the Grand theater in Menominee and the Strand in Escanaba, has closed negotiations for another theater to be erected somewhere in the upper peninsula.

J. M. Duncan, Manager of Detroit Vitagraph.

Detroit, Mich.—J. M. Duncan, manager of the Greater Vitagraph exchange here, says business has shown over a hundred per cent. increase since moving to the new and enlarged quarters at 42 East Larned street. A feature of the new quarters is that all film is handled direct from Detroit, which is now a regular buying exchange. In the past all film was shipped to Michigan exhibitors from Ohio.

J. M. Duncan.

"We are booking our features to the cream of the trade in Michigan," said Mr. Duncan. "I don't believe there is a town in the State where there exists a real progressive theater that is not showing Vitagraph pictures."

Mr. Duncan was at one time an exhibitor himself in Ohio. He has seen all angles of the amusement business, and has been in charge of Vitagraph attractions for over two years. He is one of the few Detroit exchange managers who have been with the same company continuously for two years. Before Vitagraph started the distribution of its own product exclusively through its own exchanges Mr. Duncan managed the V-S-L-E office.

The Man Who Made the Drury Lane Succeed.

Detroit, Mich.—Hal W. Smith, in charge of the Drury Lane theater, Detroit, is one of the most popular exhibitors in the city. Previous to taking charge of the Drury Lane he was a film salesman, connected with the John H. Kunsky enterprises. In addition he has managed the Empire theater on Woodward avenue.

Before locating in Detroit, Hal was manager of theaters in Albany and various other New York cities. For some time he traveled the state for the General Film.

H. W. Smith.

His management of the Drury Lane has brought "success out of chaos." In other words, when Drury Lane first opened it seemed to have the "jinx." There was no definite policy and the people in charge were not picture men, hence it was not to be wondered at that the policy was uncertain and the receipts far below what they should have been. Then a change of ownership. George W. Weeks was made director general and Hal W. Smith house manager. "Everything is up to you," said Weeks to Mr. Smith.

The responsibility placed upon Smith's shoulders was well taken. From the very day of the new management business improved and has been climbing steadily ever since. The policy is to change three times weekly, prices being 10 and 15 at matinees and 15 and 25 at night.

Illinois Legislature Passes Jackson Bill

Bill Introduced by Chicago Negro Gets Through Both Houses in Springfield—Prohibits Lynching Scenes in Films, Plays or Lithographs.

By Frank H. Madison, 632 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—The Jackson bill, designed to prevent such pictures as the "Birth of a Nation," has been passed by both houses of the Illinois legislature. Representative Robert R. Jackson, a Chicago negro, had introduced it into the lower branch and carried the fight into the senate, where it was passed by thirty-three votes. If it is signed by the governor it will prohibit reproductions of any hanging or lynching by moving pictures, plays, sketch or lithograph.

There was strong opposition to the bill by Senator Denvir, of Chicago, and Walter I. Manny, of Mt. Sterling, who declared that the measure was so broad that under its operation almost any play could be stopped. The fight for the measure in the senate was led by State Senator Samuel Ettelson, corporation counsel of Chicago, one of Mayor William Hale Thompson's henchmen. Senator Ettelson pleaded for the adoption of the bill out of justice to the black race. It is notable in Chicago that the Thompson administration has been very nice to the colored politicians.

Exhibitor Honored as Good Advertiser.

Decatur, Ill.—Because of his talent for advertising James A. Carrier, manager of the Avon theater, has been named a member of the publicity committee of the City Club of Decatur. Manager Carrier recently attracted considerable attention and aroused the ire of a few merchants by stringing from the door knobs of the business houses in the night cards announcing "Closed for the day." The other side of the card said "Gone to see Anita Stewart at the Avon theater."

Illiscope Corporation Changes.

Rockford, Ill.—Edwin J. Burley has resigned as general manager and director general of the Illiscope Motion Picture Corporation. John H. Sutherland, a local real estate broker, assumed charge of the company's office on the 6th floor of the Trust building. The Illiscope corporation originally applied for a charter, with $350,000 capital stock, in Illinois. Later the company was reorganized, and applied for a charter with $5,000 capital stock. This was later increased to $150,000. William E. Clode, claiming to have experience in Western studios, was at first interested in the project, but since has severed connection. It was announced last fall that the Coliseum had been leased for a studio, and that production would begin February 15. The Coliseum is still in use as a skating rink.

Sunday Closing in Memphis Explained

Arthur Lane, Leading Local Exhibitor, Describes Annual Reform Wave—Tells Where Sabbaterians Got the Blue Law—Is 100 Years Old.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Much interest is being taken at the time of this writing in the Sunday closing case, and the theater men have become actively engaged in a war with the agitators in an effort to overthrow the Sunday-closing influences. Arthur Lane, prominent exhibitor of this city, and a leader in all matters pertaining to the betterment of the theatrical interests, recently had the following to say in connection with Sunday closing:

"It is simply a case of the annual reform wave having struck this city, and we are handling it with tact and diplomacy rather than aggressive methods as applied to Sunday closing of theaters. Fortunately, public sentiment from the highest to the lowest is with us, and while the preachers and some of their political supports managed to get together about 700 names in the form of a petition to be presented to the mayor and city commissioners, we had no difficulty in getting 10,000 names, and it could be 25,000 if we so desired.

"It is interesting to note that in Tennessee there is no direct state law prohibiting the operation of theaters on Sundays, and Memphis has no city ordinance along this line. There is an old blue law enacted about one hundred years ago, when the Indians were roaming around this section, which says that no work or manual labor shall be performed on the Sabbath Day, so our good preacher friends in their endeavor to purify the community and cater to politics have resurrected this old law, and are trying to apply it to the theater. Of course, if this law was put in effect, we would not only close the theaters, but the street cars would have to stop running, the drug stores would close, and, in fact, any form of business usually conducted on the Sabbath would have to stop, but you know in this enlightened age, when people think for themselves, such a law is ridiculous to say the least, and the Memphis theater managers do not propose to be singled out and made the goats, as it were. We have the undivided support of the Business Men's Club, Chamber of Commerce, Retail Merchants' Association, Trades and Labor Council, etc., backing it up, and I think we will put an end to this silly agitation."

No Censor Bill Enacted.

Nashville, Tenn.—Although a radical state censorship bill was drawn up by a number of women's clubs and reform organizations in Chattanooga and presented to the Hamilton county delegation for introduction in the legislature, Tennessee exhibitors are congratulating themselves upon the fact that the law-making body has adjourned without having enacted a censor bill of any kind. Delegations of women were sent to Nashville in the interest of the bill, but largely through the activities of the picture men in this state the measure was kept off the statute books. This law, had it passed, would have worked a tremendous hardship upon the exhibitors, and its failure is considered a substantial victory for the industry.

Operators to Form Military Unit.

Memphis, Tenn.—According to information received by W. T. Powell, of the Lyric, three thousand men will be organized and equipped by the I. A. T. S. E. into a first class fighting part of the United States Army, in accordance with tentative plans recently formulated at a conference of officers and councils held in New York. Memphis contributes about 80 men to the total membership of 22,000, and it is understood that officers from the regular army will drill the theater recruits for this service. Advice of this move has been communicated to President Wilson.

Along the Lines of New Business.

Des Moines, Ia.—L. A. Sheridan, manager of the local Pathe exchange, held an important sales meeting Saturday afternoon, April 14. The sole object of this meeting with the roadmen was to place them in a position in which they could secure the maximum amount of business. Mr. Sheridan feels that he has discovered the keynote of success in salesmanship in a new system that he has devised.

Mr. Sheridan also reports that never before in the history of the Des Moines office has there been such an increase in business or such a volume of business carried on in any month as has been realized in the month just passed.

D. B. Lederman, manager of the Laemmle Film Service in Des Moines, is also enthusiastic over the spring increase in business. His roadman, Bruce Burgess, Wm. O'Haram, R. C. Crawford and Nicholas Amos of the Bluebird, were all in and each one had a tale of success all along the line to relate. Machine sales have been heavy, which goes to show that business must be good enough to warrant new equipment.

Manager Skirboll of the Metro exchange is another manager who is boasting of good busines all along the line. In addition to his big feature sales and "The Big Secret" bookings he is especially proud of his success with the Metro comedies.

Mt. Vernon, Ia.—L. D. Hendricks, manager of the Star theater in Mount Vernon, paid a visit to Cedar Rapids last week and while there was waylaid by a Pathe salesman and persuaded to show "Patria." Mr. Hendricks is an enterprising manager and ought to put the famous serial over big.

Creston, Ia.—Creston is a one-man town now since the burning of the Bungalow theater and the condemning of the Willard. Louis Rosenfield of the Temple Grand has things his own way now. One of the supports in the Willard gave way last week and the show house is somewhat dilapidated. The Bungalow burned to the ground.

What Came from a Press Agent.

We went in to smoke our pipe and set around with the editor of the paper the other day, he having nothing to do, and we got to talking about photoplays, and he showed us a piece of publicity matter received from one of the Eastern studios, marked "Rush—Important and Exclusive" with this bright line it it: "Miss ———— is a Southerner to the backbone, having been born south of the well-known Mason and Dixon line."

Minneapolis for Bouncing Big Success

Exhibitors and Exchangemen Are Working Hand in Hand to Make the Coming League Convention a Gathering That Will Be Remembered.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—With plans for the forthcoming exhibitors' convention practically completed exhibitors and exchangemen are working hand in hand to raise funds to make the gathering a "bouncing big success." Manager Walter K. Howard, of the Greater Vitagraph, and Manager Harry Rathner, of the Supreme exchange, started off the exchangemen's end of the entertainment fund with subscriptions of one hundred dollars each, and several other exchanges have subscribed amounts from twenty-five dollars up. If pre-convention interest and enthusiasm can be taken as a criterion the May gathering here will be the most successful, and without doubt the largest ever held in the West.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Fills the Strand.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Saxe Brothers' late film feature, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," was "tried out" at the Strand the week of April 15 and Manager James A. Keough of the Strand found it a "trying" experience endeavoring to convince the crowds that seats were at a premium. Capacity houses were the rule during the first four days of the week.

Man Who Succeeded Vic Scherlzinger Still a Success.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Manager Woodhouse of the Lagoon has gone other exhibitors of the city one better in the matter of music. Exhibitors here simultaneously but (perhaps not knowingly) began brushing up their music recently. All except Mr. Woodhouse enlarged their orchestras. Mr. Woodhouse secured Frank Pallma and his troupe of musicians and is advertising the fact far and wide as "Frank Pallma's Jazz Band." The Lagoon's business had picked up snappily. And, if you don't know who Frank Pallma is, he's the gent that succeeded Vic Schertzinger as director of the Supreme's "Civilization" musical staff.

Pickups at the Exchanges.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Mannie Gottlieb of the Favorite Feature exchange has sent out on her maiden voyage Miss Vivian Bullmer, who shares with Mrs. T. H. Swensen of the Universal the honor of being Minneapolis' first road saleswoman. Miss Bullmer was formerly engaged in the theatrical business all over the Northwest and is well known to "the villagers." Mrs. Swensen formerly operated her own theater at Hastings, Minn.

We have led off our columns so often with "New Exchange Managers" heads that we have to say down here that Ralph E. Bradford, formerly of the Triangle, has resigned as manager of the Universal exchange and has become manager of Saxe Brothers' exchange in the Jewelers' Exchange building. E. C. Davies, formerly of the Lochren and American Maid exchanges, has been appointed Mr. Bradford's assistant, aide-de-camp and first lieutenant.

The Friedman Film Corp. exchange has taken a second start on its advertising campaign on "Her Condoned Sin" and as a result bookings have been flowing in at a rapid rate.

We desire to thank Manager Peavey of the Paramount exchange for the good one cent stamp on a postal about Fatty Arbuckle received last week. We fully believe everything Mr. Peavey says in his attractive circular letter, but we cannot return the postal with stamp because we have no theater. We are told hundreds of others have returned them, with checks.

Ruben & Finkelstein Getting There Fast

Big Local Film Men Opened Their Eighth Picture Theater in Week of April 7, and Have Just Bought a Ninth—Their Present Holdings.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Ruben & Finkelstein, Minnesota's largest exhibitors, are getting into the "select" circles with Alfred Hamburger, Ascher Brothers, Marcus Loew, et al. The week of April 7 the two Minnesota exhibitors opened their eighth Twin City theater, the New Unique, and also purchased their ninth theater, the Lyric, from Messrs. Sherman and Elliott. Ruben & Finkelstein now own the five largest theaters on Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, in addition to the New Garrick, the Northwest's largest exclusive picture house, on Seventh street, Minneapolis, and the New Majestic, New Palace and New Princess in St. Paul.

Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick, will also look after the managerial end of the Lyric, Frank A. McInerny, former Lyric executive returning to the Shermann-Elliott publicity forces. The policy of the Lyric will be unchanged for the present, first run World, Metro and Vitagraph productions being the rule. The New Unique has secured the Triangle program recently displayed by the Strand and opened on Saturday, April 14, with W. S. Hart in "The Desert Man" to a good business. William Koch is in charge of the New Unique.

"Womanhood" Opens Here April 22.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager W. K. Howard of the Greater Vitagraph exchange here gave a special showing of the big feature "Womanhood," featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, at the Lyric, Wednesday afternoon, April 11, for the benefit of prominent society people of the city and clergymen, members of the press and critics. Admission was by invitation and a capacity house resulted. Kohlers' twenty-five piece orchestra furnished special music for the production. "Womanhood" has been booked in the Strand, St. Paul, and the Lyric, Minneapolis, for week runs beginning Sunday, April 22. Attractive 24-sheet stands and considerable newspaper space are being used to advertise the feature.

George M. Plays With S. R. O. Out.

St. Paul, Minn.—George M. Cohan apparently is as popular in the cinema as in the flesh in St. Paul, for Manager Maitland of the Strand was called upon to use the old S. R. O. sign frequently during the week of April 15, during which time "Broadway Jones" was being displayed at his theater.

Got Something Up His Arm.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Harry A. Sherman (not the man who said "war is hell," oh, my, no; but he who has been sharing with Mrs. Castle the publicity columns of numerous film magazines) has gone to New York (for the 987th time). Harry, er—Mr. Sherman—has something up his arm covering and it is expected that upon his return here an announcement will trickle out that Sherman-Elliott will have, perhaps, something to do with the Minnesota Metro Service. Whadythinkofthat?

3,000 Seat Casino Theater Opens

San Francisco's Newest Picture Theater Is Thrown Open on Easter Sunday—Cost $600,000—C. H. Brown Has a Twenty-Year Lease on House—Robert G. Drady Will Be Manager—Details, Programs and Policy of the Theater.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—On Easter Sunday the Casino theater, at Ellis and Mason streets, opened its doors as a combination vaudeville and moving picture house. This theater, which is the largest in San Francisco, with a seating capacity of about 3,000, represents an investment of about $600,000 and has been leased from its owners, the Ellis Street Investment company, for a term of 20 years by Charles H. Brown, long associated with the Orpheum and Hippodrome circuits. It is being conducted under the management of Robert G. Drady, for several years connected with the Pantages theaters in this city and in Oakland.

The Casino theater was designed and erected for a moving picture house and all seats afford a good view of the stage and the screen. It covers a ground area of 87½ to 187½ feet, with a ten foot paved alley along the entire east side. There are no steps at the entrance, a tiled flooring sloping from the sidewalk to the foyer. From here an incline leads to the mezzanine floor and the balcony is reached by broad stairs. At the head of the incline is a nursery, where children may be left in charge of a colored maid, and off the mezzanine floor is a large retiring room for women and a smoking room for men. The ladies' rest room has been furnished in exquisite style and enjoys a flood of sunshine throughout the whole day. A candy store and soda fountain is installed here and in addition there are drinking fountains for the convenience of patrons.

The house has forty rows of seats on the main floor and thiry-three in the balcony. The chairs have leather seats and backs and are uniform throughout the theater. The decorations are handsome, but by no means ornate, the proscenium arch being done in gold, with touches of robin's egg blue, a color note that is carried throughout the theater.

The projection room is on the main floor, with a level throw to the screen, and is equipped with two late model Simplex machines. The equipment of this room, as well as the stage effects, was furnished and installed by Walter Preddey.

The program consists of vaudeville acts, five reels of pictures, furnished by the World film, a comedy, a uews weekly and a serial. The serial attraction, "The Mystery of the Double Cross," was not shown the first week. The prices of admission are 15 cents for afternoons and 15 and 25 cents at the evening performances. A continuous show is given from 1 to 11 o'clock p. m. and full houses was the rule during the first wek.

Turner & Dahnken News.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has made arrangements for the erection of an office building on Golden Gate avenue, between Jones and Leavenworth streets, in the heart of Film Row, and plans for this are now being completed. This will be a two story structure, with the offices of the concern on the upper floor and ample room for the large stock of supplies carried for its chain of theaters. Bids will be invited at once for the work and construction will be rushed as it is desired to move from the present quarters at the earliest possible date.

A. E. Northy, maneger of the Richmond T. & D. theater, has been transferred to the Reno, Nev., house, and J. R. Wilson, who has had charge of the latter theater for some time, has been brought to Richmond.

Mary Miles Minter, the Mutual star, who has been working of late near San Francisco on "The Periwinkle," appeared recently in person on the stage of the T. & D. Tivoli opera house, and will probably appear soon at the Oakland house. During her stay here she was shown around the city by William H. Jobelmann, T. & D. publicity manager, and Mrs. Jobelmann.

Progressive Pulls Good Fat Boy Stunt.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Progressive Motion Picture company is meeting with great success in booking the forthcoming Fatty Arbuckle releases, and recently put over a clever stunt that attracted the attention of exhibitors and the public alike. A boy weighing about 300 pounds was dressed up as a butcher boy, with a white cap and apron, the former bearing the legend "Fatty Arbuckle's Special Messenger," and the latter "Watch for Fatty Arbuckle in the 'The Butcher Boy,'" and was sent to each theater in the city with a telegram from Fatty Arbuckle stating that there would no releases of his pictures except those released through the Paramount exchanges.

"Joan the Woman" Scores Big Success.

San Francisco, Cal.—On Easter Sunday the Cort theater, one of the largest and finest playhouses in this city, began a three-weeks' engagement of "Joan the Woman," featuring Geraldine Farrar. Since then there have been capacity houses at almost every performance and the outlook is that a much longer engagement will be necessary to enable all to see it who may wish to. Mr. Herman Webber, who controls the production in this territory, was in the East when the premier showing was made here and J. L. Partington, manager of the Imperial theater, attended to the publicity work and the details of the presntation.

Portoscopes Shipped to President of China.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Breck Photo Play Supply company recently made a shipment of two Portoscopes to the President of China, the order being filled the same day as received in order to make proper steamer conections. It has also shipped a Simplex machine to the Hawaiian Islands for the Consolidated Amusement company, this being one of the first machines of this make that have been sent there. Three machines have been installed in the enlarged operating room of the Strand theater of this city and one has been put in the Hotel Normandie for the enjoyment of patrons of this house.

Bomb Scare at Oakland Theater.

Oakland, Cal.—An exciting time took place recently at the Hippodrome theater when "America's Peril," a seven part film controlled in this territory by I. H. Lichtenstein and O. V. Traggardh, was shown for the first time. To give the presentation the proper atmosphere two battalions of sailors were brought over from Goat Island and were marched through the streets to the theater, moving pictures of them being taken on the way. The police received word that an attempt would be made to blow up the theater when the sailors entered and would allow no one in the house until thorough search had been made of the premises. Unable to ascertain whether or not the matter was a hoax the sailors were returned to their training quarters and visitors to the theater were carefully scrutinized.

Two Mutual Film Managers.

San Francisco, Cal.—The accompanying illustration shows Manager W. J. Drummond, of the local branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, on the left, and Assistant Manager F. E. McCoy basking in the glorious San Francisco sunshine and indulging in their favorite exercise of smiling as a means of increasing their embonpoint. It may be easily guessed what chance an exhibitor has of getting out of the local Mutual office without taking on some service, and many a tired theater owner goes there for the express purpose of acquiring, if possible, some of the good nature of the genial manager and his equally genial assistant. When this picture was taken they were thinking about the fun they would have shortly in moving a few hundred tons of posters and other advertising matter, together with a few thousand reels of film, to the new location on Golden Gate avenue, near Leavenworth street.

Mr. Drummond is comparatively a new comer in the local field, having came here from Los Angeles a few months ago to succeed X. K. Stout, who has entered the producing end of the business at Santa Barbara. Mr. McCoy, on the other hand, is well known locally, having formerly conducted an exchange business of his own in the Pacific Building, and since then been connected with the Progressive Motion Picture Company and the local branch of George Kleine.

Stories of the Films

KALEM.

THE SECRET OF THE LOST VALLEY (An Episode of "The American Girl"—Two Parts).—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King, her father (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Heann); Alvon Demetral (Edward Clisbee); Attias (R. E. Bradbury); his companions (Knute Rahm and Hart Hoxie); Olive Demetral (Grace Johnson).

Madge finds a stray dog with a note attached to its collar, reading: "Send help to Lost Valley and beware of strangers on the road. A. Demetral." Madge, with her father and his superintendent, Larry Kerwin, sets forth.

In Lost Valley, Demetral resides with his daughter, Olive. He seems to be living in constant fear, and tells his daughter how last night "I saw that face—always that face." She tries to persuade him that his dread is born of an overwrought imagination. Olive has two suitors, Chavez, a Mexican, and Ramon, the descendant of an early Spanish family.

King's party stop at the town of Shotgun. Madge overhears three strangers mention "Lost Valley." King loses the note from Demetral. Attias, one of the strangers, finds it. The next day King and his party stop to eat lunch. A mysterious shot hits the dirt near them and King realizes that the strangers from Shotgun are following.

That afternoon at Lost Valley, Demetral starts to explain his fears. He sees the face of Attias peering through the shrubbery and reels and falls. Later he regains consciousness and explains: "When a revolution broke out in his kingdom the Duke of Blauvelt was fleeing with his child. I was a brigand and those men my companions. We held up the Duke, made away with his child and the Blauvelt chest. Later Attias wanted to kill the child, but I refused, escaped with her and the chest. Olive here is not my child; the chest is hers. I've never opened it."

After the recital the old man expires. Chavez conspires with Attias to gain possession of the chest. The men attack the house, and Attias secures the chest. He is pursued by Madge on horseback. She lassoes him, drags him from his horse, and marches him back to the house. There Ramon, King and Larry have overpowered the other conspirators, and the chest is restored to its rightful owner, Olive.

Milt Bronson, a close-fisted small town merchant, teaches his daughter, Cleo, economy, and when she has saved several thousand dollars in the building and loan association he orders it placed in a savings bank. She does so, but takes out a checking account.

Cleo goes to the city to visit some girl friends. She has never spent over 50 cents at one time in her life. However, when she sees her girl friends with plenty of money to spend she draws upon her account and "squanders" some of her money for two-dollar gloves.

Herb Chillson, a wealthy mill owner, is the leading bachelor of the town. Milt Bronson would like to have his daughter marry Chillson, but the bachelor believes that the girl is close fisted like her father.

After spending her first two dollars Cleo discovers that she loves to spend money. She buys herself a solitaire ring and other feminine adornments. When her mother discovers the ring Cleo, in terror, says that she is engaged to Herb Chillson. Milt Bronson is so delighted that he writes to Herb Chillson, who is out of town. To make matters worse, Cleo receives a notice from the bank stating that she has overdrawn her account, and to make it complete for Cleo her father tells every one in the village of her engagement.

Herb finally arrives from the city, and in desperation Cleo goes to him and begs him to be lenient with her. The wealthy bachelor is astonished at the improvement in Cleo. From a plain, badly dressed, awkward girl she has become a stylish young lady. He realizes that he loves her and informs her that he wishes the engagement to be a real-for-sure one.

POTTS AND POEMS (Two Parts—May 3).—The cast: Lucas Rymer (Matt Moore); Jane Doolittle (Jane Gail). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Matt Moore.

Lucas is a fine poet, full of inspiration, but emtpy of food. He lives at Mrs. Spudds' boardinghouse, where there is a little drudge, called Jane, who adores him in secret. She steals food for him which she takes up to his attic, when the landlady denies him the privilege of her table, because he cannot pay his rent. At last she turns the poet out of the house, and in gratitude to the drudge he gives his "masterpiece" as he leaves for good. Jane is broken-hearted.

Jane sees an ad for a prize poem for Bunkum's Potted Meat for which $1,000 is offered. She finds that with a slight alteration Lucas' masterpiece will fit the case. She sends it in, with her address. The poem is acclaimed as prize winner, and Jane is sent for. They offer her the position as ad writer at $100 per week. She is to write another poem for that day's ad. She wracks her brains, but can think of nothing, and she tells them that she will return the next day.

The next morning she has not put in an appearance, and the editor is nearly crazy, for he is holding the paper for the Bunkum ad. Bunkum's offices are in an uproar, while Jane is studying "How to Be a Poet. By A. Barber. For Ten Cents." She finds it impossible to repeat her success, and they are frantic.

In the meantime Lucas has recognized his masterpiece in the paper as Bunkum's ad. He rushes to their office to complain of the theft of his poem. Jane sees him, and tells him that there is a hundred a week in it for him. She explains, and Lucas sits down and writes another masterpiece as wonderful as the first. Bunkum's entire force is delighted with him. Jane says, "Well, I guess this is no place for me." Jane goes home to Mrs. Spudd, finds the door locked, and sits down on the steps. Lucas comes after her, gives her half the money, and they are both happy.

A MIDNIGHT MYSTERY (Two Parts—May 4).—The cast: Simon Dudsbury (Thomas Jefferson); Elsie Wheaton (Betty Schade); Dickson Fay (Charles Perley); Hatch (Harry Holden); Dr. Adams (E. P. Evers); Mrs. Weed (Mrs. Hernandez). Scenario by A. W. Coedeway. Produced by Wm. V. Mong.

Simon Dudsbury is found dead by his butler, Hatch. Dickson Fay, a reporter, answers the butler's call for help and together they carry the body from the veranda where it is found into the house. Dr. Adams, Dudsbury's physician, attributes death to heart failure. The reporter is just leaving the room when he hears a woman's voice urging him to remain, as she fears that her uncle has been murdered. Fay then asks Adams to give him some facts for the newspaper, and the doctor tells about Dudsbury and his wonderful collection of antiques.

Elsie Wheaton, Dudsbury's niece, has hastened home and arrives that day, the housekeeper, Mrs. Weed, being the only one who knows of her coming. It is she who asks Fay to remain. The doctor thinks she is still in Europe. When Hatch goes to Dudsbury's bedroom where the body was taken he is horrified to find neither the undertaker nor the body. As Fay and Adams enter the museum to look about, the doctor goes out and locks the door, thus holding the reporter a prisoner.

Elsie is terrified by the sight of her uncle, who passes by her without speaking. There is blood on the side of his head. She hears the hammering of Fay against the museum door and opens it, but faints upon seeing Fay.

Adams and Hatch continue to search for Dudsbury and the undertaker, but, unsuccessful, they return to the museum. Fay and Elsie hear their approach and hide behind a mummy case. When the two men cannot find the reporter, they begin to look behind the large objects and soon come to the mummy case. They try to pull the door open and as it gives with a jerk, Fay and Elsie are thrown back, causing them to fall through a trap-door and disappear. Adams tells Hatch, the butler, that they will take anything valuable they can carry and make a getaway.

Fay and Elsie land in a room where they confront Dudsbury and the undertaker, who sits in a chair, tied hand and foot. Dudsbury then relates to them his story. Becoming suspicious of Dr. Adams, he began to watch him. Finally he saw the man drop some powders in a glass of wine, and although Dudsbury merely touched the liquor to his lips he fell as he was entering the house and regained consciousness only to find the undertaker working over him. They grappled, but Dudsbury at last forced him to enter the secret room, and fearing that he was an accomplice of Adams, tied him securely in the chair.

Hearing a noise in the museum, Fay and Dudsbury discover Adams and Hatch as they are loading themselves with priceless antiques. At the sight of Dudsbury Dr. Adams recoils in horror. Hatch is afraid to look his master in the face. When the policemen arrive Dudsbury tells them to watch Adams carefully, and pays the undertaker and the police a large amount of money to keep the affair quiet. So the mystery is solved.

UNDER THE BIG TOP (April 29).—This is a vaudeville act taken in the studio before the camera, and shows trained animals. First we see a performing pony with the three dogs which are its partners. Then we have a monkey act, and finally stunts by a kicking mule.

IN THE HEART OF CHINA (Dorsey Educational—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—The Dorsey educational takes us to the heart of China, and shows us the city of Hankow. Then we visit the city of Yuchang, formerly noted for its learning. There is at present a modern college maintained by American funds, for the education of the Chinese. We see them drilling for preparedness. Yuchang is on the Yang-tse River, which is crowded with commerce.

It is so wide and deep that six hundred miles inland its waters are navigable for ocean steamers. Intimate views along the river front close the picture.

BISON.

LITTLE MOCCASINS (Two Parts—May 5).—The cast: Dennis Reed (Millard K. Wilson); Portia Justin (Edith Roberts); Freddie Waldo (J. F. Abbot); Mrs. Justin (Louise Hutchinson); the Doctor (Malcolm Blevins). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Millard K. Wilson.

Portia Justin has been spoiled by her rich and indulgent mother, and now that the doctors declare that she has a touch of the "white plague," the indulgence is greater. With the family physician and Portia's admirer, Freddie Waldo, Portia and her mother repair to the Western mountains.

Living in the vicinity is one Dennis Reid, who knows every inch of the country. Besides his occupation of raising bees, he manages to find time to write novels of the Western country, which are published under an assumed name.

One day as Portia is lying on her couch reading, a small snake winds its way toward her, and Dennis throws it into the underbrush. Portia is grateful, but neither she nor her party recognize Dennis on their subsequent meetings. Only the doctor, who is concerned at the snobbery of the Justin party, tries to make amends to Dennis, who thus learns of Portia's illness.

Dennis has fallen in love with the girl. One day he swoops down upon her, takes her to a hut presided over by an Indian woman, determined by right living and open air to restore her health. Her family can find no trace of her.

At last Portia is well and strong. Restoring to her the clothes she wore when he abducted her, Dennis, who has now learned to call her "Little Moccasins" because of his compelling her to wear moccassins instead of her high-heeled shoes, places her upon a horse and sends her home. Freddie at last hears that Dennis was Portia's abductor, and with a party he starts out in search of him.

Meantime Mrs. Justin makes all possible speed to hurry Portia to their city home. On the road they encounter Freddie and his party, who have injured Dennis. Portia at last realizes her love for him, and insists upon remaining to care for him.

FLAT HARMONY (May 1).—The cast: Peter Duffer (Ralph McComas); Maybelle, his wife (Eileen Sedgwick); Foley (Milton Sims); Landlord (Edward Brady). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Peter determines to give his wife a birthday present—a bungalow, as she is tired of flat life. But the landlord will not break their lease. Peter meets a friend who tells him he has been put out of his apartment for making too much noise. Peter gets an idea. He induces his wife to go to her mother for a few days. Then he invites Foley, who is a manager of vaudeville acts and who has no place to rehearse a song and dance number, to use his flat. They dance till the ceiling comes down on the landlord's head, and he tears up the lease. Peter leaves, but the police, summoned by the landlord, arrest Foley as Peter, and the story gets into the papers. Mrs. Duffer reads it, and thinks she now knows why Peter urged her to leave home. She returns and finds the chorus girls installed. Foley has broken out of prison, and comes to the flat. The police appear and rearrest him. Thus Mrs. Duffer learns the truth, and harmony is restored.

Steve suggests that Lord Lovelace be asked to ride a bucking horse. The Lord accepts, and though they are all looking for the fun of seeing him thrown, he rides the animal to a standstill. The whole crowd is wild about him, including Mrs. Lancaster, and the management of Universal City offers him a contract as a crowning touch.

Joe, to save Mabel's feelings, determines to say nothing and to care for the child.

Jack, however, is not content to leave things as they are. He tells Mabel that the child is Joe's, in order to keep her from marrying him. Joe still keeps silence. As soon as he reached manhood Richard enlisted in the Northern army, for the Civil War had broken out. His mother sent the boy's father off to war, begging him to look out for the lost boy, whom he would know by the scar on his forehead. Her husband was killed. Almost crazed by the news, she sat every night with a loaded gun before the window in which the light was always burning.

Richard was sent to reconnoiter in the neighborhood of his old home. Cautiously approaching the house he was shot from the window by his mother, who took him for a spy. His body is recognized by the old slave whom he had loved, but the mother never knew that her watch was ended, and continued, even after the coming of peace, to place a light every night in the window.

Scenario by Charles Wilson, Jr. Produced by George Marshall.

Saunders jumps Bill Brennan's claim in Yellow Dog. The men are afraid of Saunders, and think the law is probably with him, but Pete writes Bill, urging him to return.

"Dad" Weston and his daughter, Nina, are headed for Crooked Creek when Bill meets them. He is instantly smitten with Nina, who is attracted to him. "Dad" is broke, but Nina encourages him, saying there have been some big strikes in Crooked Creek.

Saunders meets Weston and asks him to work his claim. Weston finally consents and accepts the money Saunders hands him. Saunders becomes interested in Nina and suggests that he might take Weston as partner. Weston encourages Nina to treat Saunders well, and when he proposes, though she loathes him, she accepts, for her father's sake.

Nina and her father are living in Bill's shack. Bill returns, rushes in with drawn gun, but, seeing Nina, thinks he must have made a mistake. They invite him to supper, but Weston sends Nina on an errand. Bill catches up with her and proposes to her. Sadly she tells him she has promised to marry another. People think Bill must be afraid of Saunders, because he doesn't fight with the claim-jumper.

Saunders makes arrangements to sell the mine to an Easterner; the money is being brought by Wells-Fargo. Saunders bribes a Mexican to steal Nina. Nancy, a dancer at the Yellow Dog saloon, tells a friend of hers, and is overheard by Bill, who rides toward the claim, meets the Mexican, who has Nina gagged and tied on a horse. He rescues her and hastens to the shack.

The Wells-Fargo man arrives and becomes suspicious. He recognizes Saunders' hands, and accuses him of theft. Saunders fires at the man, killing him, and snatching the money rides away.

Bill rides after Saunders, who jumps on a moving train, Bill after him. They fight and Bill throws Saunders off. With the money Bill returns to the shack, where he tells his story of his claim being jumped. Bill and Nina smile at one another as the picture fades.

life made her stern, subduing the softer qualities of her nature. Johnny Roberts comes into Mary's life.

His salary is small, but he earns enough to furnish a flat, so they get married.

At first Mary and Johnny were happy, but Johnny's habits began to grate on Mary's sensitiveness. Johnny found a pal in a dog he brought home, and the two became inseparable. Steadily the breach grew wider, and one evening, Johnny went out with his dog, and wandered through the streets, while Mary shed bitter tears. The lights of "The White Horse" attracted him, and he entered. He met Anne, the pretty bar-maid, and his visits became more and more frequent.

Johnny was weary, sick and feverish. Mary believed him drunk and, thoroughly angry, she had thrown a pillow and cover on the couch, saying: "You can sleep there! Your habits have disgusted me ever since we were married. I feel degraded and ashamed."

All night Johnny wandered aimlessly, half delirious. Morning found him at "The White Horse." When Anne arrived, she found him, and had him sent to her lodgings. With the return of consciousness, Johnny cried: "I can't go home! She said I disgusted and degraded her! I'm not wanted there——"

Anne whispered: "You needn't go back, Johnny boy! Stay here! I want yer all the time!"

Meanwhile, somewhere in France, many of the Cockneys were proving their worth. Johnny and many others decided to take up the cause. Many weeks before, Mary had followed Johnny from the office. Now, with a determined air, she approached Anne's lodgings and the two women met. Anne, infuriated by Mary's manner, and nettled by Mary's words, which predicted that Johnny would tire of her, raised the lamp, about to hurl it at Mary. They were interrupted by the dog, who seeing Mary, ran out. Together the two women followed to the flat, which presented a miserable aspect. Anne discovered Johnny's baby, which Johnny knew nothing about, and realized the baby was starving. Anne ignored Mary's protestations and took the baby home, while Mary followed.

Later came the news that Johnny had been killed. Anne sank into a fever, and Mary saved her. Anne, delirious, raved of the night of Johnny's departure: "'E was lookin' fer you—I've lost 'im!" A great understanding surged through Mary's soul.

One night the landlady brought a letter. The report had been false, and Johnny was coming home. It was then that Anne made her renunciation, as she realized that in Mary lay Johnny's happiness. Down in the street came Johnny, walking slowly, for the war had taken his sight. In the shadow Anne waited, to lead him up the steps, where, unseen, she kissed his sleeve. With a brave smile she whispered: "Good luck, and God bless yer, Johnny!" and ran out. Johnny passed into the room, where he found happiness.

THE VOICE ON THE WIRE (Episode No. 8—Two Parts—May 6).—The cast: Shirley (Ben Wilson); Polly (Neva Gerber); "Red" Warren (Francis MacDonald); Reynolds (Jos. W. Girard); Cronin (Howard Crampton); Short (Lou Short); Wayne (Willard Wayne); Dorian (Charles Dorian).

In the crook's apartment "Red" Warren's men are gathering and learn that a meeting will be held the following evening. They arrange to be in Washington on the 25th. Polly, locked in the room above them, is trying to glean some information by listening with her ear to the wall. Finally, opening the window, she manages to drop to the floor below and peer in the room where the crooks are assembled.

During this time Shirley has communicated with Chief Cronin, who begins to think Polly's disappearance is becoming a habit, and is beginning to suspect her. Receiving a mysterious message over the wire, Shirley begins to analyze the case, and is thoroughly alarmed and puzzled when he finds the murders include not only local politicians, but international ones also.

As one of the crooks steps to the window and throws it open Polly drops to the sill, hanging on by her finger tips, but is discovered and pulled into the room. Taylor starts to strike her, but "Red" stops him. On the outside of the building Shirley's men have located Polly, surrounded the building, and are anxiously awaiting the next move of the crooks. Observing a policeman in the distance, one of them gives a signal and all the crooks, with the exception of one guard, pass through the secret panel as Shirley climbs up the side of the building.

Mary Melville to please her invalid mother marries Claude Varden, a wealthy man of the world. On the eve of the marriage Mrs. Melville is stricken and Varden receives a business summons to Buenos Ayres. Tom Nelson, whose wife has been wronged by Varden, calls at the latter's apartments in a drunken condition and tries to kill him, but is overpowered by Varden.

Immediately after the marriage Varden insists that Mary leave her dying mother and sail with him. Angered by her refusal he sails alone telling her to follow. On the ship he is attracted by Nitra Ruiz, a South American heiress and they become engaged. Mary left alone with no income after her mother's death, and deserted by Varden, seeks employment. The papers announce a shipwreck and the death of Varden, naming him as the fiancee of Nitra Ruiz. Mary decides she will never use the name of Varden.

Varden is rescued but does not let Mary know. He marries Nitra and she signs her entire fortune over to him. Mary secures employment in the law office of John Herrick and they become attached to each other. Elsie Brandenham, in love with Herrick is jealous of Mary but pretends friendship for her. John and Mary leave for a nearby seaside resort to be married. John leaves Mary to make preparations for the wedding and she comes face to face with Varden. Mary faints and Varden putting her in an auto takes her to his apartments.

Varden having gained all Nitra's money has left her and comes to New York. Nitra kills herself and leaves a note for her brother telling what Varden has done. Ruiz follows Varden determined to kill him and comes into the apartment where Varden is holding Mary. During a fight between the two men Mary escapes and Varden kills Ruiz with Mary's hatpin, which has dropped on the floor. Mary unable to reach John, goes to the home of Elsie Brandenham for the night. An account of the murder in the newspaper and a picture of the hatpin tell Elsie that it was Mary's hatpin which killed Ruiz.

Herrick is retained as Varden's lawyer and Mary breaks her engagement with him but does not tell him of her relationship to Varden. The trial is going against Herrick because Mary Varden cannot be found. Elsie comes to the office and tells Mary she knows her secret. Mary goes to the courtroom and gives herself up but meanwhile Tom Nelson, a trusty in the jail, has killed Varden.

The judge runs Jerry down and he is marched back to prison through a cordon of mocking femininity.

JIMMIE DALE ALIAS THE GREY SEAL (Episode No. 7—"Devil's Work"—Two Parts—May 4).—Jimmie Dale, the gentleman burglar, has his pocket picked, leaving a theatre with Marie La Salle, this difficult task being performed by "Larry the Bat," notorious thief, who secures an important letter from "The Tocsin," Jimmy's control ordering action by "The Grey Seal" in an important case.

Jimmy recovers the letter, recovers the $10,000, makes the cashier sign a confession and once more thwarts "The Woman in Black."

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE—NO. 53 (May 3).—"Our Patriotic Maidens" is the title of an important section of this number. Inspired by the call for national service, women are enrolling in automobile schools. The pictures show them at work in the school shops, learning to drive machines, and then adepts at handling ambulances and armored motor cars. Two energetic young women are followed by the camera as they put on a new tire in record time.

The second section shows how both modern and ancient methods are being used in restoring the historic missions of southern California. The pictures were taken in the beautiful San Fernando valley. One hundred and twenty thousand adobe bricks, each weighing 40 pounds, are being used in practically rebuilding Mission San Fernando Res de Espana. The bricks are made with the same mixing wheel used when the structure was originally erected.

"Getting Rid of the Snow" illustrates the methods employed by a large city in ridding its streets of "the beautiful" which stops street cars, stalls trucks, and impedes traffic generally. There are also pictures of a metropolitan snow fall which cost $600,000 to remove.

One of the most remarkable pictures ever offered in this series is that of the strange religious rites of the tribe of Issa, residents of British Somaliland. These natives of East Africa pierce their bodies with swords and sharp sticks, eat thorny cactus plants and swallow nails while in a religious frenzy. They seem indifferent to pain as they are urged on by the priest or receive his blessing after the ordeal.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 26 (May 1).—First on the screen are picturesque views of the valley of the Lot River in Southern France. The principal city which is shown upon the banks of this tributary of the Garonne is Cahors. It was a populous town occupying its rocky peninsula at a bend of the river long before the Roman conquest. The Valentre Bridge here dates from the fourteenth century. The older part of the town has dark, narrow streets and closely-packed houses. The village of Cirq-Lapopie is interesting because of its age. A remarkable road cut in the mountain side along the river affords most unusual views of the valley of the Lot River.

From Goteborg to Christiania, from Sweden to Norway, is a pretty trip by water through the Skagerak and up the Christiania Fjord. Goteborg is a city of 170,000 inhabitants, of great commercial importance. At Christiania, Norway, capital, is the castle of Aggerhaus, built in the fourteenth century. Here are kept the crown jewels and the archives of the city. There are a number of water pictures which are typical of the Scandinavian peninsula.

The third section of the reel takes spectators to Warsaw, Poland, before the war. This is the chief city of Russian Poland. The Vistula river, spanned by a bridge at this point, is interesting to the new world because of its historic and commercial importance. The beautiful palace in the Lazienki Gardens, the open-air theater there, and the statue of John Sobieski, who saved Europe from the Turks in 1683, are particularly noteworthy.

THE MILLIONAIRE'S DOUBLE (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—April 30).—The cast: Bide Bennington (Lionel Barrymore); Constance Brent (Evelyn Brent); Richard Glendon (Harry S. Northrup); James Brent (H. H. Pattee); Stevens (John Smiley); "Kid" Burns (Jack Raymond); Bob Holloway (Louis Wolheim). Scenario written by June Mathis. Directed by Harry Davenport.

When the wife of Bide Bennington, a young American millionaire, elopes with another man, he goes abroad. In the ten years he remains away, he not only forgets about the affair, but practically is forgotten. When he receives news of his wife's death, he decides to return home.

He finds he cannot remain in the deserted house, and none of his old friends are at the club, so he decides to take a trip across the continent. He leaves in the house a sealskin coat containing valuable papers. A burglar steals the coat, and is later killed by other thugs, who throw him into the river and leave the coat on the pier to make it seem that he has committed suicide. The papers of identification are found, and it is believed that Bennington is dead.

Bennington is amused to read of his own suicide, and still more amused to read that his "widow" has gone to New York. He decides to return to New York himself, and see what his "widow" looks like. The "widow" is Constance Brent. James Brent, her father, has escaped from an English prison. This comes to the knowledge of Richard Glendon, the leader of a band of crooks, and he threatens to expose Brent if Constance does not aid him in his plan.

Bennington returns to New York. Fate favors him in his search for his "widow," for she and Glendon are at the same hotel, completing their plans for claiming the property. Constance notices Bennington's resemblance to the photographs of Bennington she has been shown, and Glendon decides to make use of this resemblance. He introduces himself to the young man. Bennington entering into the conspiracy with the greatest glee, tells Glendon he would gladly become a party to any scheme, criminal or otherwise, to obtain money, and he finally consents, on account of his "Likeness" to Bennington, to impersonate himself and claim the property.

Accordingly, he presents the credentials, which have come into the hands of Glendon, and is accepted as Bennington, having invented a story to account for the supposed suicide. Glendon, Constance, and Bennington take up their residence in the Bennington home. Bennington falls in love with Constance, at the same time being unable to understand her willingness to take part in such a scheme.

Although they are living in Bennington's residence, Bennington pretends to have difficulty in getting control of the money and other valuables accruing to the Bennington estate. This angers Glendon, who is further incensed by Bennington's attentions to Constance, whom he wants for himself. Constance receives a telegram announcing the death of her father, who has gone West on a trip.

With all necessity for deception gone, Constance confesses to Bennington the reason for her having been Glendon's accomplice, and says she will no longer further his schemes. Bennington tells her he loves her, and she promises to marry him, then leaving to attend her father's funeral. Bennington promises to have the conspiracy stopped while she is gone.

Glendon attacks Bennington as he is telephoning the police. There is a fight, overheard by the telephone operator, who sends an emergency call to police headquarters. Both men are detained pending the arrival of Stevens, Bennington's valet, who identifies him. Bennington is released and Glendon taken away to receive his just punishment. Constance returns to marry Bennington.

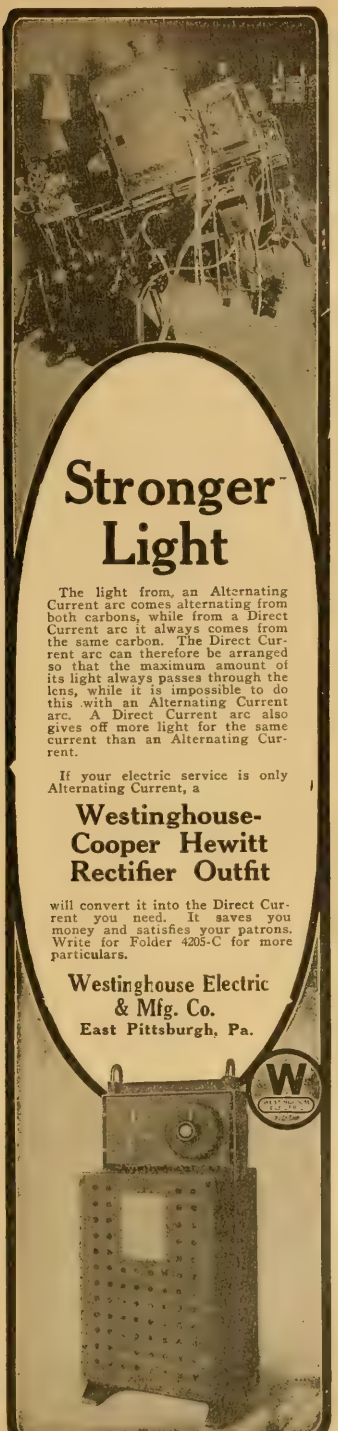
THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter XVII, "The Missing Finger"—Two Parts—April 30).—Before Zulph can put his plan into action—that of fatally operating upon Jane Warren—a message is brought to him that says he is not to operate and that Dr. Morgan, who has been engaged by Strong and Beverly, is outside and wishes to speak to him. Zulph obeys and comes face to face with not only Dr. Morgan but Strong and Beverly. He is non-plussed, but endeavors to preserve his presence of mind.

Strong tells him why he has stopped the operation, while Detective Sears advances and asks him to accompany his assistant, Cochran. With Zulph a prisoner in the outer room, Dr. Morgan performs the operation which is witnessed by Strong and Beverly. Zulph is taken to the dressing room in the hospital by Cochran where he is soon joined by Sears, Strong and Dr. Morgan. Sears confronts Zulph with the finger prints taken previously and it is found that the index finger of one of his hands is missing. At once Sears says: "There's the hand with the missing finger that killed poor Ackerton and left its print on his collar." Zulph is placed under arrest charged with murder and taken in charge by Sears. As Sears is leading him to the street door, Zulph dashes ammonia into the detective's eyes, making his escape. He then hastens to Sara Loring, with whom he is in love and asks her to flee with him. She scorns him.

Strong is at Beverly's home, when Sears, nothing the worse for his affair with Zulph, arrives and reminds Strong of the antidote that they must administer to The Great Master to revive him. He promises to return shortly. The Spider still nursing his old grudge against Strong, has trailed him to Beverly's home and stands at a window waiting to shoot him. Seizing a favorable moment he fires, but the bullet intended for Strong hits Beverly's mother. Sears, outside, hears the shot and turns to grapple with The Spider, but the latter proves too much for him and after knocking him on the head escapes, but not before he has searched Sears, on whom he finds a small phial containing a liquid which he mechanically puts in his pocket.

Sears recovers and re-enters Beverly's home to take Strong to the tomb to resuscitate The Great Master. He tells of his adventure with The Spider and reminds Strong that they must hurry. Strong, finding that Beverly's mother is in no danger, joins Sears and together with Cochran they hurry to the tomb where The Great Master lies. To their dismay Sears has lost the phial containing the antidote, and there are only five minutes to spare.

Faithful Wee See has been a witness to the altercation between The Spider and Sears, and has trailed The Spider. When in sight of a policeman Wee See seizes The Spider, recovers the phial and then has him arrested, after which he starts for the tomb. His courage and quick wit save The Great Master from death.



Stronger Light
The light from an Alternating Current arc comes alternating from both carbons, while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.
If your electric service is only Alternating Current, a

WORLD PICTURES.

Alan Winthrop, the younger son of an English family, accepts the blame for his older brother's loss of five thousand pounds at cards, and is turned out of the house. This gives the young man the opportunity he desired—travel. In America, Ralph Cornwell, an unscrupulous young millionaire, asks Edward Strong, a bankrupt financier, for his daughter's hand in marriage, in exchange for which Cornwell will clear all of Strong's liabilities. His need for money determines Strong to influence his daughter.

Edith tells Cornwell that it is to be a marriage of convenience. At the wedding supper Cornwell becomes intoxicated, and after the guests have departed Edith struggles to free herself from his embraces. She eludes him and leaves the house. Cornwell finds her note saying that she cannot live with him.

Alan Winthrop, now in America, gets a position as caretaker of Cornwell's mountain lodge, and is told to engage a woman to help him. Cornwell impresses on Alan's mind that in the mountains he is known as "Colonel Page." Unable to get work Edith applies for a theatrical position. When the manager intimates that he will give her a position if she is "nice" to him, she tells him she would rather die.

That night, while Alan is making his way to the railroad station, preparatory to leaving for Sylvia Lodge, he sees her jump off a pier. He rescues her. She tells him that she has nothing to live for, and he engages her to help him in the care of Sylvia Lodge. Cornwell has an "intimate friend" in Laura Le Moyle, who left her husband to go with him. At a dinner given by Cornwell, he pays marked attention to Kathleen Lorraine, thereby incurring the jealousy of Mrs. Le Moyle. Alan and Edith reach the lodge, and Jaeger warns them that the lodge is haunted.

Saul Potter, the half-crazed ex-caretaker of Sylvia Lodge, sees them coming, and realizes that Colonel Page must be coming back. He tells Jaeger that the chance to kill Page has now arrived. He stares through the window into Alan's cottage, and Edith is frightened. When Edith communicates her fears to Alan he gives her a revolver, telling her to use it in case of need. Going through the lodge to prepare it for Page's arrival, Alan comes across a boudoir, beautifully furnished. On a dressing table he sees a framed photograph of Edith.

Page arrives with his guests, among whom is Mrs. Le Moyle and Kathleen Lorraine. He again neglects Mrs. Le Moyle and she warns him not to goad her too far. He calms her, tells her to go to her room. Kathleen Lorraine has no maid, and while Alan is locking up the lodge Page tells him to send someone to help Miss Lorraine. Mrs. Le Moyle hears Page tell Miss Lorraine that he will come back to her later. Edith comes to help Miss Lorraine, while Pages goes to pacify Mrs. Le Moyle. Returning to Miss Lorraine's room there is a mutual recognition between Edith and her husband. Edith rushes from the lodge, goes to her cottage, and taking the revolver with her for protection leaves.

Page leaves the lodge to follow his wife, and then Mrs. Le Moyle is seen pointing a revolver out of her room at the same time that Saul Potter is seen pointing his rifle. Both fire, and Mrs. Le Moyle throws her revolver out of the window. Page falls in the snow, where his guests come down in time to see him die. Edith meets Saul Potter and seeks his aid in getting away. Alan finds her and the revolver gone and sets out to look for her. He learns that Edith must leave at once, although she offers no explanation. There being no train until the morning, she is forced to stay at Saul's shack over night.

At the coroner's inquest the guests give their testimony and then Edith is summoned. She says she is the deceased man's wife. Fearing that Edith is guilty, and wishing to spare her, Alan says that it was he who killed Page, giving as a motive the fact that he found Edith's photo in a secret bedroom, and knew that Page was a villain. Then Saul Potter tells his story:

A year ago he was caretaker at Sylvia Lodge. Page sent him on a trip to get him out of the way, and then he seduced his young wife, keeping her imprisoned in his secret bedroom. When his wife died he swore to have vengeance. He waited for Page to return and then killed him. At this point one of the guests brings a revolver which he found under Mrs. Le Moyle's bedroom window, and the coroner announces that the bullet which killed Page was of the same caliber as the ones used in this revolver. Unobserved, Mrs. Le Moyle takes poison. After telling that she left her husband and sacrificed everything, only to be thrown off like an old glove by Page, she dies.

Later that evening Alan receives a cable from his father saying that he knew the truth about the gambling episode, and bidding him return to his home at once. Alan tells Edith he will go on one condition—that she accompany him as his wife. She agrees.

IN AGAIN—OUT AGAIN (Five Parts—April 30).—The cast: Teddy Rutherford (Douglas Fairbanks); Janie Smith, the Sheriff's Daughter (Arline Pretty); Her Father (Walter Walker); Amos Jennings, Ford Pacifist (Arnold Lucy); Pacifica, his daughter (Helen Greene); Henry Pinchit (Homer Hunt); Jerry (Albert Parker); The Burglar (Bill Montana); His mother (Ada Gilman); The druggist (Frank Lalor); The Nurse (Betty Tyrell); The Trusty (Spike Robinson). Directed by John Emerson.

In New Jersey lives Teddy Rutherford, a vigorous exponent of preparedness. Before the populace realize it, the community becomes a hive of munition manufacturers. Teddy falls in love with Pacifica Ford who happens to be the daughter of an extreme pacifist. When Teddy's courtship is refused in favor of a youthful pacifist, the youth vows that he is through with the fair sex for all time and imbibes freely in spirits nectareal. On awakening the next morning he finds himself in jail with a girl nursing his discolored optic, the cause for which he does not seem to be able to remember.

After becoming acquainted with his fair nurse, Teddy decides that the world is not so bad after all and when he learns that she is Janie Smith, the deputy sheriff's daughter who is never allowed to venture outside the prison grounds by her watchful parent, he welcomes with joy the information that he is sentenced for thirty days in jail.

Someone's mania for placing bombs under Jersey ammunition plants and blowing them into the thin air disturbs the sheriff's peace of mind to the extent of promising the hand of his daughter to the person who can throw some light on the mystery. When his worries are at their height the sheriff discovers the new trend of Janie's affections and orders the prison authorities to allow Teddy to go free on the ground that the prisoner's health is in great danger. The latter finding that he is by no means a welcome caller at the jail, decides that he will get back, and proceeds to live the life of an unlawful citizen. He tries speeding only to find that he has crossed the city line and is sent to the wrong jail. Breaking up a pacifist meeting conducted by the father and fiance of his former sweetheart, robbing a house, and other disorderly acts fail to attain the desired results.

As a last resort Teddy impersonates the mysterious stranger who has been sending the munition plants skyward, from a description of the culprit which has been spread broad-cast. He finally realizes his great ambition but is given little time to rejoice over his success for things take an abrupt and serious turn when he discovers that he has no means of proving that he is not the desperate criminal he is impersonating. Fate intervenes, however, at the last minute just as Teddy is about to be lynched by the angry Jerseyites and not only does he go free but he catches the real criminal, thus winning the hand of his sweetheart.

THE DERELICT (Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Teddy Brant (Stuart Holmes); Rose Hare (Mary Martin); Claire (June Daye); Victor (Carl Eckstrom); Walt Collins (Dan Mason); Helen (Wanda Petit); Olga Hare (Olive Trevor). Written and directed by Carl Harbaugh.

Teddy Brant, while in an intoxicated condition, proposes to Rose Hare. Although she rejects him, gossip, started by two girls who saw the wooing, compels her (as she believes) to accept him.

Teddy soon finds that married life and fatherhood are too irksome for one of his temperament. Eventually he seeks solace in Claire, an artist. Teddy tells a friend, Victor, who was once a suitor for Rose's hand, to get a divorce for her and then marry her. In a more sober moment, Teddy regrets this, but he finds his home closed to him. Gradually his fly-by-night friends abandon him also.

To cut himself off from the world entirely, Teddy arranges a fake suicide. After his supposed death is published, Rose and Victor marry. Teddy continues sliding down the ladder of life, until he becomes a porter in a railroad station.

One night he discovers his own daughter has been trapped by white slaves. He rushes to the home of the man and sees his child fighting off the attentions of her "benefactors." Teddy strangles the man and flees.

The police arrest the girl. While they are putting her through the third degree, Teddy staggers into the police station. He takes the lieutenant aside and confesses. Helen, his daughter, is released in care of Victor, who, though recognizing Teddy, nods in reply to his unspoken plea for silence. Brant is taken to a cell.

A keeper passing sees Teddy huddled on the floor. Father Duffy gets a telephone call a few seconds later.

"Come at once to the Forty-seventh Precinct Station house," the lieutenant says.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE HAWK (Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: Count George De Dazetta (Earle Williams); Marina, his wife (Ethel Gray Terry); Rene De Tierrache (Denton Vane); Mme. De Tierrache (Julia Swayne Gordon); Marquis De Sardaloup (Mario Majerone); Jeannine Duperre (Katherine Lewis). Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Hawk, Count George De Dazetta, preys upon society with the aid of his beautiful wife. She seems to be in love with a young French nobleman, who is the real aggressor in this triangle. De Dazetta finds that the young nobleman's love for his wife is changing her for the better—that she begins to abhor his gambling profession and his inroads upon society. However, he continues to use her beauty as a lure to his gaming tables and wins heavily. In the meantime the nobleman breaks with a young woman aristocrat whom his mother wishes him to wed.

During a transaction with an American from whom he borrows money to repay his gaming losses to De Dazetta the nobleman learns of the Hawk's love for his wife, and that she is helping her husband to win.

Marina, the wife, washes her hands of the whole gaming enterprise and is accused of infidelity by her husband, who tried to kill the nobleman. Failing, he leaves, and the nobleman protects the wife while attempting to locate the gambler and get his consent to a divorce.

Finally this is effected, and Marina herself pleads for the divorce, that is until she learns that De Dazetta is now penniless, having lavished his every cent upon her and really loves her, and has consented to give her up only because he thinks it best for her future welfare. Her womanhood comes to the surface and she goes to him, renouncing the nobleman, her love for the latter having been without sin throughout.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—Tree Animals—April).—Here are portrayed the possibilities of filming creatures of the night in a specially arranged studio. The flying lemurs and long-tailed tropical opossums show their adaptation to a life in the trees. Two types are shown, the active and marvellously adept, and the slow but sure creature that depends upon the use of a prehensile tail. The surprising thing about them is the fact that in flight they form a perfect square, similar to the heavier than air machine of the human inventor, but with the length of the planes reversed in the direction of travel. Their enormous, scaling leaps show Nature's success as evolution has developed among these animals.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—Feeding the Odd Animals—April).—Amusing scenes of likeable little creatures, some of them the original owners of our fur coats. There are few animals that do not develop a keen insight as to the exact hour of feeding time, and many are the droll antics that develop as they impatiently await their dinner. The scenes are of raccoons, coatis, pole cats, civets, agoutis, porcupines and other odd creatures. Not only are the close-up views of much value in showing strange forms, but all of the little animals are on the go and doing characteristic things.

PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH (April 23).—The cast: Hazel (Hazel Alden); Neal (Neal Burns); Rev. Jones (Eddie Barry); Father (George French); Mother (Stella Adams); Cousin Lucy (Ethel Lynne).

As college closes, Neal and Hazel wonder how their engagement will strike her father and mother. Neal goes home with her and on the station platform loses his nerve. Hiding behind a trunk, he hears her father tell her that she is to marry Rev. Timothy Jones. They have never seen the minister, but are sure he will make a fine husband for Hazel. Neal goes back and enlists the aid of two college boys. With Neal in ministerial garb they start back on the same train as the Rev. Jones. The boys kidnap him, while Neal goes on and is received as Jones.

The first shock comes when he is informed that he is to preach the morning sermon. He and Hazel write a sermon over night, but he forgets his notes in the morning and has to faint to get out of it. Then he is called on to marry Cousin Lucy. He performs the "ceremony" and he and Hazel take the young couple for a ride and tell them the truth. Meanwhile the Reverend has escaped his captors and been carried by an automobilist to within a mile of Hazel's. As he walks along he is spied by Neal and the bunch. Neal sheds his clericals and Jones marries both couples.

THE VALENTINE GIRL (Famous Players—Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: Marian Morgan (Marguerite Clark); John Morgan (Frank Losee); Robert Wentworth (Richard Barthelmess); Lucille Haines (Katherine Adams); Mrs. Haines (Maggie Holloway Fisher); Joe Winder (Adolph Menjou); Mme. Blache (Edith Campbell Walker).

Marian Morgan is the only daughter of a gambler and master crook. The only home Marian knows is that of Lucille Haines, as she has never seen either her father or her mother, her mother having died when Marian was born. When she is about twelve years old, Lucille marries and Mrs. Haines breaks up the home, informing Marian that she will be sent "home" to her father.

Although Morgan is much displeased at the prospect, he soon leans to love the little daughter he had never seen and strives to make up to her all that she has missed. For a while they are very happy, although the child is lonely without companions of her own age, for none of the children of that fashionable neighborhood are allowed to play with the gambler's daughter.

AMONG THE HOLY HINDUS (Paramount—Burton Holmes—April 23).—From the Ganges to the Himalayas is the sort of a journey that no one ever forgets. The good ship "Burton Holmes" will take your patrons on an unusual trip this time, and when their eyes behold the various kinds of religions performed in this strange land, they will sit in their seats entranced. Leaving Benares, the city of worship, the train, which is a special mountain climber, starts for Darjiling, high in the mountains. After going through a wonderful country, the city in the sky is finally reached. From this little Tibetan village, surrounded by quaint and little known people, they may gaze upon the loftiest mountains in the world.

HER IRON WILL (Black Diamond Comedy—April 30).—The story tells of the comedy company of the Foolish Film Company which starts out to make some scenes near the Nitro Munition Factory. The comedian is made up as a villain, and as he strolls about the grounds of the munition factory Mr. Fidgit, the owner of the factory, sees him from the window. Fidgit thinks him a bomb thrower, as he is carrying an imitation bomb. He phones to the Dubb Detective Agency. Susie Speed, the fearless girl detective, is put on the case. She meets Fidgit with his insurance papers and other valuables. He directs her to the place where he last saw the supposed bomb-thrower. Fidgit goes back to his office while Sue starts around the building.

Having found the location satisfactory, the comedy director has a dummy of the comedian made and set up with the bomb in its hand, planning to have the hero shoot off its head in the next scene. Sue rounds the corner, thinks the villain is about to hurl the bomb into the factory, and dives into him. After a battle, she tears its head off and realizes it is only a dummy. Thinking herself the victim of a joke, she returns to Fidgit's office and "bawls him out."

When the director finds the dummy wrecked he orders it repaired and goes on with the next scene. The villain and his aide bind the heroine and carry her to a stake, where they are to burn her. From the window Fidgit and Sue see them tying her to the stake, and, thinking it real, they rush to the rescue. Sue empties her revolver at them and the whole picture company makes a dash for safety. The actors and the director start back and a blow-out on a passing auto scatters them again. The director says, "Some lunatic is shooting at us. Let's find another location." And they start for their auto. Sue looks around as they are helping the heroine into the car and says to Fidgit, "They're kidnapping her. I'll get them."

The company arrives at another location. They tie the heroine to a stake, pile wood around her and prepare to "burn her." Sue sees this and summons the police and the fire department. Sue seizes the hose from the first fire engine to arrive and turns it on the fire. The fire is extinguished all right, the villain put to flight, and the heroine nearly drowned. The director charges on Sue with all his men, and she puts them to route with the hose. The police arrive and are about to arrest every one, when the director demands of Sue the reason why she broke up his scenery. Sue then realizes her mistake. Fidgit dashes through the crowd and asks Sue, "Did you get them?" This is the last straw. Sue turns the hose on him and rushes away. She comes to a street car track and sees a car coming swiftly toward her. Disgusted with her career as a detective she decides to end it all and lays down on the street car tracks, the car rushes right up to her and, instead of running over her turns a corner swiftly and goes down a side street. She sees another car coming and moves over into the track running down the side street, while the next car passes her and runs straight up the track upon which she was lying previously. In desperation she gives up the attempt to end her life, tears off the badge and throws it after the car.

PATRIA (Episode No. 15, "For the Flag."—Two Parts—April 22).—The cast: Patria Channing (Mrs. Vernon Castle); Donald Parr (Milton Sills); Baron Huroki (Warner Oland).

Unable to take Patria's second line of intrenchments, Baron Huroki planned a night attack. Well fitted out with the latest inventions of modern warfare, he hoped to surprise the enemy he thought had nothing with which to make resistance. Patria's defenders brought out by Huroki's fire lights, and, assisted by the scouting planes, he was able to come up for a hand to hand trench battle, but the resistance of the defenders was too much for him and he was forced to lay back. He then resorted to liquid fire. This allowed him to creep up on the trenches and in the fight which ensued Donald Parr was wounded.

Patria was at her wits end. What was she to do? If they could not force the battle in the morning, all was lost. Morning came and with it came the latest of all the inventions of machine war. The Caterpillar, able to travel over any kind of ground and able to go right into the midst of the enemy, there was nothing to resist it. And thus the end came. Led by the Caterpillar, Patria's men on foot and on horse soon had the Japanese and Mexicans madly running for the border, but few reached it alive.

The battle was over. The invasion, thanks to Patria's forethought, was a failure. Patria received the thanks and compliments of the army officers and rushing to the wounded Parr, greeted him with that good news always welcome to those who love.

Shortly afterward Brewster's inert body is found in the library by Philippa and Bentley, but when they return with the police the body has disappeared. It was Bentley who had attacked the father, but even he did not know how the body had disappeared. Philippa had admitted overhearing quarrels between Peter and her father, but the next day at the trial claimed that everything had been perfectly pleasant between the two.

Later, when Bentley remonstrates with her, she tells him he must be foolish, because the day before she had been kidnapped and had just returned to the city. Dick Annesley, the young reporter, follows them to the castle up the Hudson in which she says she had been taken prisoner. They discover a note pinned between two doors which reads, "Behind one of these doors lurks death. Enter at your peril.—The Masked Stranger."

The cowardice of Bentley is shown by his refusal to enter, but, stung by a jibe from Philippa, he enters. In the room he discovers several suits of armor, and as he moves the armor moves. Scared to death, he flees. Annesley enters, but nothing happens. He and Philippa decide to return to the city, and as they are passing a bush the Masked Stranger appears and reveals himself to Annesley. Who and what is the Masked Stranger? Next episode, "The Stranger Disposes."

SUNSHINE AND GOLD (Balboa—Five Parts—April 29).—The cast: Little Mary (Baby Marie Osborne); the chauffeur (Henry King); James Andrews (Daniel Gilfether); Dr. Andrews, his son (Neil Hardin). Directed by Henry King.

Shouts of joy and the clapping of many tiny hands welcomed the arrival of the big birthday cake. For this was Little Mary's birthday. To celebrate all Mary's little friends had been invited and the big event which preceded the supper and the cutting of the cake was a performance of Cinderella and the affair of the glass slipper. Little Mary forgot to leave at the hour of 12, and when she was called away by the fairy she dropped her glass slipper on the stair. Of course, to every one's amazement, when the Prince went looking for the owner of the slipper, the only one whom it fitted was Little Mary.

The party and the excitement was all over, and, as an added help to recuperate from the strain of starring, Little Mary the next day went auto riding with the chauffeur. But fate then took a hand in the story of Mary's life. Captured by Gypsies and later escaping in the midst of a battle royal amongst the tribe she finally made her way to the hut of a crabbed old man, but she finally overcame his crabbedness by her cute and winning smile. Unknown to Little Mary, her benefactor was in reality her grandfather, James Andrews, who had taken his money to this backwoods place because of his son, Dr. Andrews, who had married against his wishes.

The chauffeur, wild with anxiety, finally located Little Mary in the cellar, where she had gone to help the old man, who had fallen while miserly counting his money. Would they be able to reach the city in time? They faced a hard task, but Little Mary had known harder work when she had starred in Cinderella.

ABRAMS & WERNER.

THE BAR SINISTER (April—Nine Parts—World Rights Sold by Frank G. Hall, Newark, N. J.).—Stolen when a baby by a mulatto woman, who becomes a half crazed witch, and raises her to beautiful womanhood with the belief that she is her own daughter, Belle cannot bring herself to mix with her race and accept the attentions of a noble character in the person of Ben Swift, in whose veins the blood of the red, white and black races are mixed. A handsome white stranger, Page Warren, from the North, who believes her a white girl, falls in love with her. She returns his love while at the same time hiding the fact that she is the negro witch, Lindy's, daughter. Page incurs the hatred of the bad element among the blacks, while failing to appreciate that there is also a good element among whom are men and women as noble as any of his white companions. He incurs the hatred of Ben Swift, who misinterprets his attentions to Belle, and resents the mixing of the races, not knowing that Belle has not disclosed her identity to Page.

The attacking of Page by a gang of bad blacks, following his fight with one of their leaders, his rescue by Ben Swift, who has learned of Belle's love for the white man, the discovery by Page that Belle is a mulatto, the sensational disclosure of the fact that she is the last daughter of a prominent Southern family, the death of Ben Swift while defending Page and Belle from an enraged mob and the beautiful handling of the subject of the spiritual equality of men makes "The Bar Sinister" an intensely interesting drama with a powerful appeal to all classes.

The Customary "Summer Slump" Can Be Avoided!

Every little annoyance that is to be found in a majority of the photoplay theatres is magnified during the warm weather. Unless the service given is practically perfect, there usually comes a "Summer Slump" in business.

Gentlemen:-

With reference to the two Motiograph machines that I personally used out of the eight that you supplied the Birth of a Nation Co. with, I want to say that I operated these machines, set them up in 106 towns, took them down after the show each night and used them every day, during the period I did not have one stop. There was never a hitch in my show and the up-keep on the two machines was 75¢ for one set of Tension Springs, which really were not necessary, but as I was under instructions to keep my equipment up to the highest standard of perfection that I could, I made this purchase and I really could have finished my trip without them.

On account of casing used on the Motiograph as a protector, my machine heads that were left outdoors over night many times in 25 and 30 below zero weather and on opening up I found white with frost, never showed the slightest sign of rust

I was never a booster of the Motiograph machine, having only operated one of the old models, but in appreciation of the good results that I had with the machines sold to the Birth of a Nation Co. by you, I am writing this so you may understand that operators are not adverse to giving praise where they think it is due, and the present Motiograph machine, I do not hesitate to state will do all the work and in just as perfect a way as any machine on the market and I have run them all.

Respectfully yours,

A. Hickman

The Winning Combination—A Good Story and the Best Lens

Even more important than location is the combination of lens and story. For a good film well shown, with every detail lifted out with snap and clear outline, will bring the crowd back and back again, no matter where you are located.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses are scientifically computed to intensify every detail and insure brilliant illumination to the edge of the screen.

Leading owners have found that Bausch and Lomb objectives and condensers help pay for themselves. That is why you will find them in practically all successful theatres.

Edison and Nicholas Power machines are regularly supplied with Bausch and Lomb Lenses.

EXHIBITORS—Take Notice!

YOU can do what W. O. Hopkins, of the Evansville, Ind., Terminal Station, is doing with a Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine.

$600 to $3120 Extra Profits Yearly

He stated March 17th that he had kept account of the number of sales of Butter-Kist Pop Corn which he had made in the year 1916, by a tabulation on his register. He has just a little stand there, and his Pop Corn Machine served 49,015 people in 1916. He said he would go on operating that machine if he lost money doing it. For in his estimation anything that would bring 49,000 people into his shop was worth while even if operated at a loss. His sales of Ladies' Home Journal, for example, jumped from 6 a month to 80 after his Butter-Kist Machine began to operate. His sales of Popular Mechanics jumped from about 15 a month to 75. His sales of bottled drinks increased. And the profit on Butter-Kist itself is over 200 per cent. As he states, he has no unusual location. He says he just used a little brain work, and he believes that anybody ought to be able to not only make big money out of the Pop Corn Machine, but make it a leader that will bring business amounting to more than its own sales, by attracting people into the Butter-Kist place.

C. R. Baird Company, for the past ten years the largest manufacturer of motion picture machine parts in the world and the only one dealing direct with exhibitors, not only offers special figures frequently but is the only concern that at all times names a straight discount of 20% from list prices on the entire line. Some distributors and dealers, now working to effect a combination, at times call attention to some special article but demand full list prices for machine parts, as there is a large and constant demand for same. Buy your machine parts and supplies at wholesale rates direct from an INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURER instead of at Bunco figures.

SILVERTIP'S
Have Maximum Carrying Capacity

Exhibitors Say New Negative Projector Carbon Fulfills Every Requirement

Extremely high amperage arcs are a necessity today on account of the long throws used in most new houses. And in addition the negative carbon must be designed to hold the arc absolutely steady.

Exhibitors the country over have turned to the Silvertip as the one negative projector carbon which most satisfactorily combines these diverse qualities. Its small diameter insures a steady arc, while the heavy copper coating carries the maximum current, thereby giving ample light for the most extreme throw.

Our new booklet explains Silvertip's points of superiority in the simplest language—sent free on request.

Localize Your Fire Risk

YOU can't eliminate your fire risk where inflammable film is directly exposed to heat. But by restricting the spread of flames you can minimize the danger to your audience and the material loss to yourself—and it's a protection that yields big returns.

When a film flares inside a booth, your theatre and audience are safe if there's a fire-barrier of Johns-Manville Asbestos around the flame. Johns-Manville Asbestos Booths CAN'T burn, because they're all-mineral—made from a combination of asbestos fibre and cement. Nor will they warp or shrink, even when hot and deluged with water.

Johns-Manville Asbestos Booths conform to insurance requirements and to all ordinances covering fire-proof booths. Supplied in "knock-down" form, light in weight and easy to handle and assemble, and equipped with door and window shutters which close automatically in case of fire.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN MORE THAN AN IMPERSONATOR

Creator of the Lincoln Cycle of Photo-Plays Has Absorbed the Character by Study and Given the World an Immortalized Portrayal.

By FRANCES AGNEW

History has given us many great men, but none whose memory is dearer than that of Abraham Lincoln, "the man of sorrows," he who preserved the Union and fathered the sentiment which is one of the keynotes of Americanism. Art or commercial enterprise have given us many impersonations of the man, especially on the screen, but only one immortalized portrayal.

Benjamin Chapin is, no doubt, the most artistic exponent of the character of Lincoln that the world has ever known. For more than eighteen years he has lived very close to the great man. In lectures, vaudeville playlets and a four-act drama from his own pen he has thrilled audiences all over the country with his graphic presentation of the character. And now his years of study and experience are the basis of his work in giving to the world a series of screen adaptations—the Lincoln Cycle—showing important dramatic incidents in the life of the man.

Nature made Benjamin Chapin a "double" of Abraham Lincoln, and it is this physical resemblance as well as his admiration for the character which no doubt inspired his interest in the work when a young man. He has absorbed so much of his study of the character that many who remember Lincoln and others who have studied his life and habits consider Chapin's delineation the product of genius.

His Efforts Discouraged.

In the beginning he was regarded as a crank and fanatic. His best friends discouraged his ambition to vividly impersonate the character, and to-day it should be a source of pride to him to know that the same friends have been fully convinced by the success he has won in "riding his hobby" with real effort and self-confidence. While discussing his work last week at his up-to-date studio plant in Ridgefield Park, he said:

"Several years ago my friends tabooed the idea as impossible, and a famous dramatic critic to whom I sent the manuscript of a four-act drama I wrote around the life and character of Lincoln, returned it with the characteristic comment, 'I am not looking for trouble.' They said Lincoln was not a dramatic character. To me he is the most dramatic character in all history. His life combined comedy, tragedy, drama, and though my opinion does not agree with all authorities, I contend that out of all these elements strong drama can be evolved, and that is what I have tried to do in the Lincoln Cycle.

Fiction and History Combined.

"I have taken dramatic incidents in his life and developed them into two-reel features, each one an independent story, and yet the influence of each incident carried over to the next. It has been, and always will be, a delicate task to inject enough fiction into the incidents to hold the interest and at the same time faithfully observe our historical limitations."

His interesting library, containing many ancient volumes which he has secured at great expense, includes probably every book ever published on the life of Lincoln and a complete set of Harper's Magazines, both before and after the Civil War; and those who have seen any of the Cycle can appreciate the study and research work he has done and the way in which he has not only adhered to historical facts and conditions, but also staged his films in settings that are exact reproductions of locations photographed and described in these old volumes and magazines.

"I have never played Lincoln on the screen," said Mr. Chapin, in reply to my inquiry, "except in this Cycle. I have had many offers, and only recently received a proposition covering 50 per cent. of the profits if I would 'walk through' the part in a feature. I refused. A sculptor may, according to his own idea, complete a statue of Lincoln within a week, but a great sculptor requires months and perhaps years, and every week he does as much or more on it than during the preceding week, working diligently until it satisfies him, and not merely shows the features but reveals the character. So with these Lincoln plays. We have been laboring on the Cycle for four years, and have only begun. Some call me a crank because, after working long and hard over the slightest scene, I lay it aside and come back to it with a refreshed mind and vision and perhaps discard all that was done and begin the work again.

"We have not decided when or how these films will be released. I have refused scores of offers for them because the time was not opportune nor were they ready. Picturizing Lincoln's life is not the work of a moment. Practically any actor who is a certain type can 'walk through' the part, but an impersonation is something more. Lincoln was very human. He was weak and strong; he had his faults and his virtues, and it is the universal simplicity of the character that appeals to every life."

Excellent Business Ability

Few would credit such an artistic nature with the possession of as great a commercial instinct, but those who know Mr. Chapin in this work know a dual person—a clever business man and a creative artist. He is the moving spirit of the Charter Features Corporation, in which many enterprising and progressive names are associated, as well as the director-in-chief, with a staff of about twenty people—excluding the players, and including his sister, who always remembers if he forgets. He is a believer in the idea that "two heads are often better than one," and not only receives suggestions from members of his staff, but debates on these and his own ideas regarding every detail of the work. While going through his interesting studio, with its antique properties, and also the wardrobe room, where he is housing a collection of old spinning wheels for some scenes to be taken during the summer, and two wonderful old drums—one said to have been used in the Revolution and the other in the Civil War—Mr. Chapin revealed the motto of his efforts.

"Many are wondering how we have continued our work all these years without releasing. Of course, it takes money, but not such a great amount as one might think. We try to work systematically and economically and be happy in the work. After all, it doesn't take an awful lot to make one happy. It is the mad rush for money and more money that brings unhappiness and discontent. The money that has been offered me for the release of these films means nothing until we are absolutely ready to do it, and being ready means that they must be entirely satisfactory to us. When the films satisfy me, they will satisfy the public, I think.

"We have set ourselves to the task and are 'doing our best.' That is what Lincoln did. It is all that anyone can do—just his best—and in doing one's best, one is bound to succeed."

HUMAN INTEREST IN THE LINCOLN CYCLE

It is difficult to imagine a series of more human films than the Lincoln Cycle produced by the Charter Features Corporation, with Benjamin Chapin appearing as the great President and also as his father. The first four of this series, of feature pictures were exhibited at a trade showing in the Strand Theatre, Friday morning, and all who saw the features were enthusiastic regarding the merit of the films themselves and the commendable spirit which has inspired and produced them.

"My Mother."

"My Mother" shows the spiritual influence of Nancy Hanks Lincoln on the boy, Abe. Discouraged by her husband's lack of interest in books and his refusal to learn to read and write, she found comfort in the boy's inherent desire for an education. A wealth of pathos and heart interest is revealed in this story of Lincoln's boyhood days and his mother's influence which shaped his character and guided his career till the end. It is doubtful if the screen has ever shown a more pathetic and touching scene than the death of Lincoln's mother when the boy was nine years of age.

"My Father."

Closely connected with this story and yet complete in itself is "My Father," showing Lincoln's influence in building the physical man. This episode tells how the boy Abe prevented his illiterate father from signing a fraudulent deed which would have lost his property. The father, brought to a realization of the value of the education the boy was striving for, restored the treasure books left him by his mother and the incident brought a better understanding between father and son.

"Myself."

"Myself" reveals more real boyhood days. It shows Lincoln's instinctive belief in fair play at all times and the amusing scene where he "wins a case" as "attorney for the defense" in the "jury trial" of a pickanniny who stole a white chicken. It gives a keen insight into the make-up of the boy who became a great man.

"The Call to Arms."

The fourth, "The Call to Arms," shows the man Lincoln during that crisis, when, as he himself said, he was the "most-advised man in the history of the world." The same boyhood influences that had shaped his character held him firm and steady, determined to follow the road that bore the word "Union." His decision against war was unchanged till the firing on Sumter, and with this news he affixed his signature to the paper he had hoped never to use and issued a call for the militia. At the Strand showing on Friday this episode was followed by scenes from the Patriots' parade on Thursday, in which Mr. Chapin rode as Lincoln, these added scenes emphasizing the similarity of conditions then and now.

More Than Instructive.

Each of the four plays is a film feature, complete in itself. Together they form an interesting program, or shown separately on a varied program any one of them would make a distinct impression. Contrary to expectations, these Lincoln films are far more than instructive. They are wonderfully entertaining, giving important incidents in the life of the great statesman, not merely as incidents, but as complete comedy-dramas. Pathos and humor abound in each story. Perfect continuity of scenes, a wonderful attention to the most minute details of direction, simple, yet effective titles and remarkable photography, lighting and tinting effects make these films unique.

Better acting has rarely been seen. Every player no matter how unimportant is a distinct type. The actress who plays Lincoln's mother really lives the part. She possesses an almost ethereal countenance, a wonderful expression that fairly thrills, while the boy who appears as little Abe contributes a portrayal that could hardly be more perfect. He seems to have caught the spirit of the part, and his work with that of the other boys is a genuine credit to Mr. Chapin, the real backbone of the productions. His more than realistic characterizations of "old Tom" Lincoln and the grown-up Abe are remarkable. Better character studies and better character building scenes have never been screened.

These films should be shown not only in all schools and colleges, but in every theatre where the masses may know Lincoln, the boy, the man and the statesman, and know him in a human way. It would be impossible to even suggest the many fine touches which distinguish these features. They are a tribute to the genius and ability of Mr. Chapin and all associated with him in any capacity. The screen could not be employed to better advantage than as a medium by which such delightful stories, entertaining and instructive, can be told everywhere.

The hardest heart would be moved by these films. More than any stories ever produced on the screen, perhaps, their influence and life are infinite. Their appeal and the way in which they have been produced will make them as valuable and entertaining to the coming generation as they are to-day.

Big Booking Records

The Entire Circuit of Marcus Loew Theatres Books "The Voice on the Wire" Serial

A Tense Situation from "The Voice on the Wire."

IMPRESSED by the initial showing of the Universal's latest and greatest serial, "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE," the bookers of the big Marcus Loew Theatre Circuit booked it for every house on the list. This magnificent serial opened in the big Broadway and Brooklyn Houses of the circuit to tremendous crowds. The deep, mysterious plot captured the first episode audiences, and the following episodes showed record attendances.

Featuring Ben Wilson & Neva Gerber

The leads are played by Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, two of the most popular Universal Stars. There is great scope for their pleasing personalities of which they make the most. The plot has to do with a series of mysterious events each of which is preceded by a ghostly warning given by a weird "voice on the wire." A strange muffled figure and a dismembered hand serve to intensify the mystery, and in the character of John Shirley, professional investigator Ben Wilson attempts to locate the owner of the "voice."

Written by Eustace Hale Ball

The fascinating story is from the celebrated novel of the same name written by Eustace Hale Ball, photoplaywright and author of note, who novelized among other huge successes, "Traffic in Souls." The lavishly produced picturization is eagerly enjoyed by the multitudes who read the book.

Directed by Stuart Paton

The superb direction of "The Voice on the Wire" comes from the master mind of Stuart Paton, who produced the Universal's stupendous spectacular drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." It has the peculiar quality of thrills and punches in each episode and suspended action at the end which brings the crowds back week after week. Exhibitors who are looking for a sure-fire serial photoplay that will insure them capacity houses for fifteen straight weeks should communicate immediately with their nearest Universal Exchange, or with the Home Office at the address given above.

The stories are taken from the famous "Yorke Norroy" series, which were written by George Bronson Howard, the celebrated author of "God's Man," and which were enjoyed by millions when published in a big popular fiction magazine. Mr. Howard himself directs the series. The dramas are of especial interest in these times of international complications, showing, as they do, the actual operation of Secret Service men in their perilous occupation. STATE RIGHTS OPPORTUNITY

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company presents herewith two magnificent opportunities for State Rights buyers who know their territory and who also know how to put over tremendous productions in the big way which these two pictures deserve. Get full particulars on both of these and prepare for a genuine clean-up.

"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"

It is the most colossal money-getter for State Rights men and Exhibitors the trade has seen in years. In Portland, Ore., New York City, Detroit, Chicago and Brooklyn, and in scores of other cities, crowds have stood hours in line for blocks and blocks. In some towns where managers advertised 2 p. m. matinees they were actually forced to start as early as 11 a. m. to accommodate the surging multitudes. At the time of the writing of this advertisement 42 out of 48 states have been sold. Six states remain open—Kentucky, Indiana, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. Direct bookings will also be considered in these six states until the territory is sold. Getting "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" is like stumbling onto the secret entrance of the Philadelphia Mint. Address as below.

"GOD'S LAW"

—Formerly bearing the title, "THE PEOPLE AGAINST JOHN DOE," is without a single doubt the most gripping moving picture ever shown on any screen in the entire world. In its new title, "GOD'S LAW," it conveys to the public far more of the real meaning of the production than its former title "THE PEOPLE AGAINST JOHN DOE."

It is a LOIS WEBER picture. Shrewd Exhibitors need know no more about it than this. With such tremendous financial successes as "Where Are My Children?" "Idle Wives," "Shoes," "Scandal," "Hypocrites" and many others, LOIS WEBER'S pictures stand without a peer.

While a number of State Rights have already been spoken for, we will accept bookings for "GOD'S LAW" direct from Exhibitors in any State in the Union.

No picture of recent years created such a sensation as "GOD'S LAW" did when presented before the State Legislature at Harrisburg, Pa., by Stanley Mastbaum.

Woodrow Wilson, Col. Roosevelt and Reputation

THE PRESIDENT of the United States or Colonel Roosevelt would bring the entire population of a city flocking to your door. Such is the magic of fame and reputation. Consider the fame and reputation of Goldwyn's stars:

Mae Marsh is the heroine of a film that is a national epic. More millions have seen her than have seen President Wilson and Col. Roosevelt combined.

Mary Garden is America's most famous woman. Millions have heard her sing via the medium of the phonograph. Every woman knows the perfume that bears her name.

Maxine Elliott's name and fame have reached into every household in the English-speaking world.

Jane Cowl is the heroine of the most successful plays produced in America in the last ten years—she is known to millions.

Madge Kennedy is acknowledged to be the greatest farce comedienne in America or England.

Have you thought of all of these things while weighing Goldwyn Pictures in your own mind?

Quality—Not Footage For Goldwyn Exhibitors

THOUSANDS of exhibitors write to ask the length of Goldwyn Pictures. Here is our answer:

They will be as long as the story demands, or as short as it demands. Pictures free of padding; pictures that are complete, yet never drag; pictures that know how far to go and when to stop.

In motion pictures we will make the works of Irvin S. Cobb, Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn, Roi Cooper Megrue, Porter Emerson Browne and other famous authors the same tremendous successes that they were in the national magazines and on the stage.

There is a nation-wide demand for vivid, well-told, dramatic and well-directed film productions—a demand for power, quality, sanity and cleanliness.

Goldwyn, from the beginning, hopes to satisfy that demand.

The Possible Earning Power of a Feature Production is Determined Solely by the Number of People Who Have Opportunity to See It in All Localities

HE who makes predictions is called a prophet. Some prophets have proved to be "the real thing." Real prophets found their warnings and forewords on causes that surely indicate certain results.

Having something real to found a prophecy on—two years of most exhaustive inquiry into every phase of moving picture production, distribution and exhibition—we will venture to make a prophecy.

OUR PROPHECY IS THAT WITHIN TWO YEARS THE MAJORITY OF PRODUCERS AND DISTRIBUTORS OF MOVING PICTURES WILL ATTEMPT TO DO BUSINESS ON LINES SIMILAR TO THOSE ON WHICH THE PARALTA PLAN IS FOUNDED.

There is no mystery about the Paralta Plan. It is APPLIED COMMON SENSE. It is experience and investigation brought to an actual working basis.

THE PARALTA PLAN is based on that exact fairness and equity which must prevail in the end in all things. Hence we venture to predict the early passing of all oppressive conditions and the coming in of the Paralta Plan in all phases of the moving picture industry.

WE have spoken of evils in the present "SYSTEM" of distribution. Here are three examples of the many we observed in our two years of research work in this industry.

We found that a substantial feature distributing company was supplying special features to an exhibitor at the price of $7.50 per day. Further investigation disclosed the fact that it actually cost this company $12.60 per day to supply such features.

How could such a proposition be carried out without injustice to some one? Somebody had to lose $5.10 on each feature on this basis of doing business. Result—loss to either producer or distributor or some one exhibitor paying too much and another too little—LOSS TO SOMEONE. MAYBE IT'S YOU!

IN another locality it was found that one of the largest feature program distributing companies had been "LOCKED OUT" of fourteen towns ever since they started in business almost three years ago. They had an arbitrary price on their service and the management of the chain of theatres covering these towns had refused to pay it.

"IF THE EXHIBITOR IS BIG ENOUGH TO LOCK US OUT, WE ARE BIG ENOUGH TO STAY OUT," was the comment made on this situation by the "general manager" of this distributing company. This was a very heroic statement for this chap to make, but where did this policy land him?

STUDY "THE PARALTA PLAN"

WRONG!"

The Box-Office Value of a Feature Production Lies in its Actual Merit as an Entertainment Being Properly Exploited in a Sufficient Number of "Local Showings"

BY not "getting together" with the exhibitors controlling this chain of theatres on a basis fair to both sides, this feature film distributing company LOST THE INCOME FROM FOURTEEN IMPORTANT TOWNS. This was income-loss tacked on to the rental price of film service in some other locality. As an economic fact, this situation meant—WASTE.

In a certain city in the mid-west there are three exhibition territories in each of which there are ten thousand population. In each territory there are two theatres, and in each territory the conditions are practically the same.

IT WAS FOUND ON INVESTIGATION THAT THE SAME FEATURE FILMS IN THE TERRITORY CALLED NO. 1 RENTED FOR ABOUT ONE-HALF OF WHAT THEY BROUGHT IN DISTRICT NO. 2, AND FOR ABOUT ONE-THIRD OF WHAT WAS CHARGED FOR THEM IN ZONE NO. 3.

THESE special inquiries demonstrated that FILM RENTALS ARE NOT BASED ON ANY OTHER PROPOSITION THAN WHAT THE DISTRIBUTING COMPANY CAN SQUEEZE OUT OF THE EXHIBITOR; and positively not on the earning power of production, which is the only way it can be done in EQUITY.

It is inevitable that under the present "SYSTEM" of distribution of films a premium is put upon waste and the operation of a motion picture theatre is made a gamble and a speculation, and not "a real business."

UNDER THE PRESENT "SYSTEM" THE INDIVIDUAL ABILITY OF THE EXHIBITOR TO PAY THE PRICE DEMANDED DETERMINES THE RENTAL CHARGE ON FILMS.

This "System" results in LOSS, WASTE and INEQUALITY—a condition which the PARALTA PLAN will remedy.

The Paralta Plan Exhibitor Begins to Work for Himself the Moment He Secures a Paralta Exhibiting Franchise.

"THE FRAME-UP" STARS WILLIAM RUSSELL IN CHAUFFEUR'S ROLE

STURDY, good-looking William Russell is starred the week of May 7th in a most unusual five-reel offering. "The Frame-Up" is its title. Julius Grinnell Furthmann wrote it. Edward Sloman, who directed the "Sequel to the Diamond From the Sky," "My Fighting Gentleman" and "High Play," besides numerous other productions, staged it.

A Twelve-Cylinder Story.

"The Frame-Up" is the story of an automobile chauffeur who finds himself doing many things besides "chauffing." It can be referred to as a twelve-cylinder story if one phrases it in the terms of the motor world. Certainly William Russell, the star, is going at full speed from the moment he first enters the scene until he clasps the heroine in his arms at the finish. Berated by his father for his idleness, the young millionaire resolves really to go to work. Sheer accident leads to his being offered a job as a driver of a taxicab. He accepts it and from that moment on things begin to happen at a mile-a-minute clip. He finds himself in the very heart of a criminal conspiracy and discovers he is himself being sought by the police. There are thrills aplenty in "The Frame-Up" and audiences will be stirred to enthusiasm and wonder over the daring leap Russell makes from the running board of a speeding auto to the side of another car.

Directed by Edward Sloman.

Director Edward Sloman has taken full advantage of the many big situations offered and there isn't a dull moment in the whole picture. "The Frame-Up" is in every respect fit to rank alongside the other American-Mutual Pictures in which William Russell has appeared. The nearest Mutual Exchange will arrange booking dates for you.

Edna Goodrich's First Will Be "Reputation"

"Reputation," from the pen of John Clymer, will be the first vehicle of the beautiful Edna Goodrich as a Mutual star. This production is now well along toward completion. It will be released the week of May 28th. Director John O'Brien, who has produced features in which were starred such notables as Mae Marsh, Blanche Sweet, Bessie Love, Lillian Gish and others, is superintending the staging of "Reputation." He possesses a delicacy of imagination and a constructive artistic vision which make him a director of unusual ability. Exhibitors may look forward to a rare offering in "Reputation."

FOUR SERIALS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT MUTUAL EXCHANGES

Four big photo-novels are now available at all Mutual Exchanges. They are "The Railroad Raiders," "The Sequel to the Diamond From the Sky," "A Lass of the Lumberlands" and "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." All of them feature stars of note, whose names alone will attract thousands. "The Railroad Raiders" is the newest of Helen Holmes productions. It is the third big Helen Holmes serial success. Trade journal reviewers, newspaper photoplay editors, exhibitors and motion picture fans themselves have enthused over it. One and all are agreed that it equals any previous Helen Holmes release—that it is crammed with action—punch—thrills. Hundreds of exhibitors who ran "The Diamond From the Sky" to capacity business at every show, are now cashing in on the sequel which, in four two-reel chapters, depicts what happens to all the interesting characters shown in the original serial. Still another big serial offering is available for the houses which haven't yet run "A Lass of the Lumberlands," the fifteen-chapter story of the big timber country, starring Helen Holmes. A fourth serial is entitled "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" and consists of a stirring series of newspaper stories in which are featured such well-known and popular players as Earle Metcalfe, Zena Keefe and Helen Greene. In addition to the serials mentioned above, Mutual Exchanges can also supply such series chapterplays as "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" and "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal'," both of which are money-getters as proven by actual demonstration in thousands of theatres.

IBSEN'S IMMORTAL PLAY, "HEDDA GABLER" WITH NANCE O'NEIL

FOR years Nance O'Neil has been one of the speaking stage's greatest drawing cards. And the one play in which she was always proclaimed at her best was Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler." Now Nance O'Neil has enacted "Hedda Gabler" for the screen. The production has been staged in five reels. It is released as a Mutual Picture the week of May 7th.

Second of O'Neil Pictures.

"Hedda Gabler" is the second of the Nance O'Neil-Mutual Pictures. It was directed by Frank Powell, who supervised the production of Miss O'Neil's first Mutual Picture—"Mrs. Balfame," which is now showing to standing room at many theatres throughout the country. The dramatic critic of the Seattle Times in discussing Miss O'Neil's appearance in "Hedda Gabler" says: "The character presents a tremendous study, but it is a study that Nance O'Neil knows how to assimilate. The picture should be worth going far to see." While on the speaking stage Miss O'Neil developed such a following that the mere announcement that she is to appear in pictures at any theatre will assure capacity business. Ibsen's plays are known and admired by theatregoers everywhere. "Hedda Gabler" is considered among his best. The combination of Nance O'Neil and "Hedda Gabler" is one which spells certain success. The exhibitor announcing such an attraction is appealing to the most cultured and refined people of his community. He is winning new patrons for his house—people who perhaps have seldom attended a motion picture theatre—but who, attracted thither by such an unusual offering, will return again and again.

Released the Week of May 7th.

Mutual Exchanges everywhere will release "Hedda Gabler" the week of May 7th. Booking arrangements can be made now. Prices, open dates, publicity helps, etc., will be supplied by your nearest Mutual manager upon request.

"Jimmie Dale" Created by Frank L. Packard

Frank L. Packard, the celebrated author, is the creator of Jimmie Dale. Mr. Packard's own story of the millionaire criminal appears in the People's Magazine under the title "The Professional Adventures of Jimmie Dale." The film version bears the title "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'the Grey Seal.'" Monmouth Film Corporation staged the series of stories.

"The Railroad Raiders Is All That Mr. Hutchinson Guaranteed!"---

Rob Reel in CHICAGO AMERICAN

MOTION PICTURE AND REVIEWS
Helen Holmes' "Railroad
Thrills
Two Big Serials
BY ROB REEL
Samuel S. Hutchinson is right.
He sent out a certificate of guarantee that "The Railroad Raiders," starring Helen Holmes, is a "superior production of extraordinary merit."
Furthermore, he guaranteed that it is "crammed with thrills, alive with action," and has a punch in every chapter.
Mr. Hutchinson merely is the head of the producing company, the Signal
Film, which releases through Mutual.
Perhaps you who do not know Helen Holmes in pictures if there be any such benighted fans might believe him a bit prejudiced. The first chapter of the serial has its showing this week. The title is "Circumstantial Evidence." Those who have been fortunate enough to see it will return to view "A Double Steal," and the rest of the fifteen installments of the best work
Miss Holmes has yet done.
Runaway locomotives, burning bridges, wrecks, explosions, blazing trains, daring flying switches, wrong signals, mixups in dispatching—all the exciting incidents of life on the rails—are pictured. It is a railroad picture through and through, with a lot of the rough and ready life of the West and the liveliest of detective fiction thrown in.

IN NEW YORK — "The Whip" had a real run at the Park Theatre in New York, playing to capacity business. Its success on the screen surpassed all the popularity it enjoyed on the stage both in this country and in England. "One of the most gripping things ever shown on the screen", said THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE, and THE TIMES praised it as "especially fine".

IN NEW ENGLAND — "The Whip" was played over the Poli Circuit of theatres in New England with great acclaim. It showed at Poli's in New Haven, in Bridgeport, Waterbury, Meriden, Hartford and Worcester. R. C. Miller of the Poli Circuit has this to say: "The Whip" is one of the best money-getters we ever played."

IN CALIFORNIA — On Sunday, April 29th, "The Whip" opens at the Cort Theatre, San Francisco, for a four weeks' engagement. The advance sale is very big, and the picture is getting all kinds of attention. Sol Lesser, who has bought rights for California, says the demand for "The Whip" is phenomenal.

IN NEW JERSEY — "The Whip" opened an engagement at the Strand Theatre in Newark, N. J., last Monday (April 23rd). Frank G. Hall, who owns the New Jersey rights and shows it at Newark, says this: "The picture opened to good business, jumped Tuesday 33⅓% in receipts, and Wednesday jumped 100%. Sold out for the remainder of the week. That is what I call real box office results."

IN CANADA — Rights for the Dominion of Canada were bought by Charles L. Stevens, general manager of Superfeatures, Ltd., Toronto. He reports that he opened "The Whip" in Montreal, its first Canadian showing, (St. Denis Theatre) to $1760, which was $300 more than "The Birth of a Nation" opened to, and his receipts for the week were $7005.

One of the most fascinating stories ever screened. A handsome young rector of an ultra-fashionable church reads a newspaper report of his own death while on a vacation in the North woods. Indignant because his church appeals to the rich instead of the poor, he disguises himself as a laborer in order to aid them. A woman of the slums mistakes him for her missing husband. Together they carry on the work of aiding the people of the tenements. Love and happiness follow for them. Rapid action and beautiful scenic effects make this picture of Fate's playthings wholly delightful.

Mr. Warren's production of THE WARFARE OF THE FLESH marks the beginning of a new epoch in Motion Picture Drama. It is the first conscientious movement toward establishing a high moral standard in photo-plays.
Mr. Warren presents a more convincing argument for morality and character than all the sermons I have heard in an entire life-time. Our churches have been trying to impress the Seventh Commandment upon the human race for nearly two thousand years; The Motion Picture Drama, "The Warfare of the Flesh," accomplishes this purpose in two hours.
Mr. Warren is more than a moralist in Motion Pictures; he has proved himself to be a psychologist. He evidently intends to solve our great social problems through the medium of the Photo-Play. This is the next important step in this remarkable art. We may expect notable achievements from Mr. Warren not only as an artist and dramatist, but as a man of strong character. We may expect him to portray in his pictures the motives behind human conduct for he has the intellectual force to analyze character and then put it into action on the screen.

FRANK HALL PRODUCTIONS, Inc.
LONGACRE BUILDING, NEW YORK

Produced by the great Edgar Lewis, who made "The Nigger," "The Barrier" and other famous moneymakers, "THE BAR SINISTER"—a magnificently staged production—a vivid story, tense and appealing, with beautiful touches of pathos and humor—and a theatrical attraction of tremendous drawing power—is proclaimed the most wonderful picture of his remarkably successful career.

It is natural that such a pronounced hit as "The Bar Sinister" should attract unusual attention. Prominent state right buyers are vitally interested. Because it is such an exceptional feature—such a sure winner—the usual attempt to stampede buyers will not be resorted to. Prices for Territorial Rights are now available.

Ask the Nearest Pathe Exchange for these Thanhouser Features:

HINTON'S DOUBLE

"Aside from the drawing power of the star, the play itself is of exceptional interest and will do much toward upholding the high standard set by Thanhouser productions during the past six months."

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD

"It is almost as human and delightful on the screen as it is between the covers of a book; and Frederick Warde, who acted before the camera as the kindly old Vicar, interpreted the character with as close an approach to perfection as cinema interpretations can hope to achieve." N. Y. World.

WHEN LOVE WAS BLIND

"The characters portrayed will arouse sympathetic interest, while the fine continuity will please. What little of the "sex problem" there is in the story has been handled with great delicacy." Telegraph.

POTS-AND-PANS PEGGY

"Another very entertaining Thanhouser picture. It is a grateful relief to view a picture that avoids the sordid side of modern life." Exhibitors' Trade Review

HER BELOVED ENEMY

"A mystery story from a little different angle, that may be added to Thanhouser's ever-growing list of unconventional screen stories." Sunday Telegraph.

HER LIFE AND HIS

"A mingling of the lives of Henry Ford and Thomas Mott Osborne, told in an entertaining and melodramatic way. Climaxes are well constructed, human interest strong, and acting first class." Sunday Telegraph.

The Ginger Boy Only Hits High Spots in His Latest Fox Play

"Smiling George" Walsh, the Ginger Boy, follows in the footsteps of countless scores of famous men in his next full-of-action, mile-a-minute, razzle-dazzle pictureplay.

The role assumed by the peppery George in his forthcoming photo-drama of speedy comedy was taken in real life at one time or another by such headliners as John D. Rockefeller, Thomas A. Edison, Andrew Carnegie, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas F. Ryan and James A. Garfield.

Walsh's newest production is called "The Book-Agent," and in the hero you see a composite picture of the noted men, as well as those unsung, who once sold "The Housewife's Handbook."

"EMPRESS OF FASHION" SCORES

Valeska Suratt wears so many costumes in "The Slave," a forthcoming Fox production, that she could go to the Thousand Islands and appear in a different gown on each one of them.

FOX "KIDDIE" FILMS SOON HERE

A Real Treat Awaits Young and Old in Child Features

Fox "kiddie" pictures will soon be here to gladden the grown-up and the youngster. They are brand-spanking new and will be the brightest spot in any program.

Fox "kiddie" pictures will show you all the famous children of the screen doing just as their elders do—with a naturalness and charm that will amaze you. They will invade the "land of make-believe," the nursery, the school, the home—everywhere and all the leading roles will be taken by "kiddies."

These pictures will delight both young and old.

JAZZ BAND INSPIRES HOLMES

Fox Star Acts While Musicians Play in Studio

Stuart Holmes is the original minute-man of 1917. He's so up-to-date that the calendars can't keep up with him. His latest stunt is the hiring of a Jass Band of nine pieces to furnish some strident strains while he is making a new picture, "The Broadway Sport." Every ten minutes the director has to halt the action because Holmes, who put both the "tang" and the "go" in tango, insists on fancy-stepping while the band jazzes. Earmuffs are in great demand at the studio.

"HIS BOMB POLICY" NEW COMEDY

"His Bomb Policy" is the latest comedy to be made by Director Charles Parrott for the Foxfilm program. It has to do with plots and police and street sweepers.

Charles "Heinie" Conklin, Director Parrott's pet star, is the featured comedian, and he is supported by Alf Goulding and Ann Ivers. Conklin is already well known on the Foxfilm program, having been featured in "His Merry Mix-Up" and "The Film Spoilers."

"His Bomb Policy" is a comedy of the "thriller" variety. Its principal character is a lowly street sweeper, portrayed by Mr. Conklin, who wishes himself onto the police force and assists in the capture of a gang of bomb plotters.

"THE SILENT LIE"

New R. A. Walsh Production of a Larry Evans Story

"The Silent Lie," written by Larry Evans and directed by that master of the film world, R. A. Walsh, is a coming William Fox release.

Neither the author nor the director needs an introduction. R. A. Walsh made "The Honor System," the greatest human story ever told, which has run for four months at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, to capacity business. Just a reminder of some of his others—"Carmen" and "Regeneration."— You all remember these.

"HEART AND SOUL"—BARA SUPER

"Heart and Soul," with the illustrious Theda Bara in the stellar role, is the incomparable Fox star's fourth super de luxe production to be released. The photoplay will undoubtedly rank as one of the most elaborate and pretentious cinema offerings of the year.

The picture is a stirring film adaptation of Sir H. Rider Haggard's remarkable novel "Jess." It was screened, with a superior cast, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

When Jewel Carmen was born her parents must have known (1) She would grow up to play opposite William Farnum in such films as "American Methods." (2) That she would be a perfect gem. So they named her Jewel.

135 BOOK "THE HONOR SYSTEM"

Leading Houses of New York and New Jersey to Show It

That "The Honor System" is regarded as a real "box office sensation" by the exhibitors of New York and New Jersey is shown by the fact that more than 135 of the leading theatres in these two states have, during the first ten days of booking, contracted for this attraction. Included in the list are:

The William Fox theatres:
B. F. Keith's theatres in Greater New York and Jersey City;
F. F. Proctor's theatres in New York City, Mount Vernon, Portchester and Yonkers;

Marcus Loew theatres:	Montclair Theatre, Montclair
Strand Theatre, Newark;	Palace Theatre, Orange;
Regent Theatre, Albany;	Montauk Theatre, Passaic;
Cecil Spooner and Elsemere Theatres, Bronx;
Century Theatre, Brooklyn;	Pastime, Union Hill;
Eckel Theatre, Syracuse;	Summit, West Hoboken;
Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo;
Star Theatre, Mechanicsville;	Palace, Morristown;
Opera House, Cohoes;	Oxford, Brooklyn;
Empire, Glens Falls;	Mt. Morris, New York City;
Hippodrome, Gloversville;	And scores of others.

There has been a mad scramble of live-wire exhibitors at The Honor System Booking Offices No. 128 West 46th Street, New York City, each anxious to secure dates before shut out by "that" competitor.

"A DAUGHTER OF GODS" GOOD SUMMER SHOW

"A Daughter of the Gods" is ideal summer entertainment.

In those hectic few months when everything and everybody begins to sag and wilt, the million-dollar Fox fantasy is like:

A jaunt to cool, green woods; a long drink jammed to the brim with ice; two and a half hours in Greenland; a cold shower on a warm afternoon; a jug of mountain spring water.

THEDA BARA AS THE SIREN "CLEOPATRA"

Screen's Supreme Artiste Portrays Role of History's Greatest Sorceress

Theda Bara as "Cleopatra," the Siren of the Nile, is the extraordinary release announced by William Fox for June 4th. Never has an actress been given a vehicle in which to better display her versatility.

Egypt's great queen was in many ways a refined and cultured woman; of wonderful charm and personality, but with a limitless ambition. History has definitely fixed her position as a sorceress among the men of her time. She was a woman whom men might easily love, for she was active, plucky, high-spirited and dashing. She viewed life with a light heart, except toward the end, having a greater familiarity with laughter than with tears.

J. Gordon Edwards, who made "Cleopatra," has presented some of the greatest scenic effects ever shown.

CAPRICE IS SUPERSTITIOUS

June Caprice, star of "A Small Town Girl," is super-superstitious. She refuses to sit down at a table of thirteen persons unless there is something to eat.

The Fight Is On ! !

This industry is facing today the most critical period in its existence. Censorship, regulation, heartbreaking taxation, over production, destructive competition, pyramiding costs, decreasing receipts: all these and many other menacing conditions threaten to destroy us.

Inevitably, unless he is helped, the exhibitor will be the first to be forced to the wall. And if the exhibitor is to be helped it is to the producers and distributors he must look for assistance.

There are two kinds of distributors: those who are earnestly and honestly studying the exhibitors' problems and evolving policies to solve them, and—those who are only interested in earning dividends on grossly inflated capitalizations, disregarding entirely the serious needs of the exhibitors.

Triangle is proud indeed not to have to tell exhibitors in which class it belongs. The policies we have recently announced have definitely established our position. And these published policies are but the fore-runners of others just as constructive in character, just as helpful to exhibitors.

We are fighting for stability and permanence in this great industry and we are striving for success by assisting exhibitors to succeed. We are the pioneers blazing the trail to better things. We have earned the loyal support of every right minded exhibitor.

Our abolishment of the deposit system has brought us the endorsement of many of the largest exhibitor organizations in the country. But we want more than approval; we want contracts. We must have the exhibitors of the country with us in our battle for sound, ethical business policies in the film industry.

We are entitled to this support, not only because we are fighting for you, but also because we are marketing productions of the very highest type obtainable, which we offer at prices low enough to admit of your making a profit as well as ourselves.

We are supplementing these productions with service, real service, the type of service which looks for success only through your success.

Get into line and help us in our fight for a reasonable, permanent prosperity.

My Dear Bernie:-

Am writing this letter the morning after I reviewed your picture, "WHO KNOWS", and this letter is occasioned by the fact that I have been so impressed with the film that it has been impossible to get the story out of my mind. Want to congratulate you on this, as it is indeed worthy of every word of praise an exchange man can utter.

The film is clean, wholesome, and interesting. The direction is flawless, and the photography beautiful. It is easy to be seen that your master hand has been, as we might term it, feeling the pulse of the production, because the cutting is so perfect and padding lacking. The picture is destined to be successful, and from what i saw of the production "SEVEN CARDINAL VIRTUES", when I was on the lot, it is easy to be seen that you are spending a great deal of money for it.

I have commuted my impression of the film to Sol, and you can anticipate an advice from him within a day or so.

Wishing you every success, and again congratulating you, I am

Sincerely yours,

World Film Corporation,

Gentlemen:

I have before me your circular letter number nine regarding Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France."

I desire to express my appreciation to you for the fine stand you have taken in behalf of the exhibitors. Your action is so unusual that I cannot help but comment on it. However, if any film company made a decision of this kind it would naturally be The World as we have always found them head and shoulders above the rest in all their dealings with the exhibitors. I think all exhibitors will be very thankful the day that State Right Pictures become a thing of the past. If we are compelled to play the poor ones as they come we should likewise be entitle to a good one occasionally and the practice indulged in by so many companies of taking their good ones off the circut and making State Right pictures of them has certainly been discouraging.

If all other companies would only follow your lead things would be much nicer for the exhibitor.

Yours very truly,
O W Lambert

Facts and Comments

"MORAL Uplift," "Moral Propaganda," etc. It should not be necessary to warn exhibitors against booking films advertised in this manner. What an insult to ordinary intelligence is the suggestive titles of such productions, the vile and lurid paper and the suggestive wording of the advertising. It is just as reasonable to expect pure water from the sewer as to find a film of this sort that will give good, clean, wholesome entertainment. If you want to kill your theater and disgust your patrons and outrage public decency, we can think of no better way than the showing of films of this class.

ORGANIZED and unorganized exhibitors should be interested in the trip of National Organizer Fred J. Herrington, complete itinerary of which we published on page 771 of the May 5 issue. Mr. Herrington began his trip on April 25 and it will not end until June 5. The need for organization among exhibitors was never more urgent. The reason a few men are manipulating the Exhibitors' League to suit their own ends is because so few exhibitors have taken an active interest. Take a hand. Look up National Organizer Herrington's list of dates on page 938 of this issue and hear what he has to say. It will be worth your while.

INTIMATION that the film industry was trying to dodge its fair share of state taxation has been freely indulged in by some of our legislators at Albany during the past few weeks. This is an entirely unjust accusation, we believe. On the other hand, the need for additional sources of state revenue was the excuse brought forward in support of the proposed Wheeler bill. No wonder more taxes are required when the sponsor for the above bill brings in another calling for an appropriation of $125,000 for the first year's expenses of the state moving picture commission, an unheard and entirely unnecessary office and expense. Why this commission? Why this expense? WHY, OH WHY!

GETTING people into the show house is what the exhibitor wants to do; but unless he can get them into the show they won't be so certain to come again. The problem has to be solved anew every day and with every offering. To do it needs that genuine sympathy we know as showmanship. Entertainment is not merchandise that an agent can buy. Every spectator brings half of the show to the theater with him and pays for the other half. For him the best part of the bargain is that he doesn't know what he wants, but leaves it wholly with the showman. Take the use of the national anthem in theaters. If it follows a deeply impressive event, the audience may want to stand and listen to it as a fitting accompaniment to some accomplished glory. On the other hand, if it follows a theme of triumph that is wholly joyous and not solemn in the same sense, the people may want to shout it out. Let them do so. Prepare to have them led and let them get the gladness in their hearts out into the music—that's what it is there for and that's what the showman is there for. It ought never to be used with trivialities.

AN Albany legislator is reported to have said the other day that the chief idea of the Wheeler bill was to "get after" a certain few who are putting out objectionable films. In other words, "Censorship" pure and simple is the "nigger in the woodpile." Moving picture men, why not eliminate that "certain few" rather than have the whole industry branded on their account?

CENSORSHIP howlers and other biased enemies of motion pictures might do well to carefully peruse and ponder over the following item, which appeared in the London Daily Telegraph of March 27, 1917: "Mr. J. W. Barnett, probationer officer at the Westminster Police Court, told the Cinema Commission that he had brought together as many as ninety married couples who otherwise would have separated. 'I take them to a picture show,' he said, 'and they can squeeze together as closely as they can, and very often the pictures and their appreciation of them bring a new understanding into their life.'"

LATEST reports from Albany indicate that there is some hope that the bill to legalize Sunday motion picture shows may pass the legislature despite the opposition that has been developed among upstate communities. Miracles have been performed.

Exhibitors Can Improve

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IN the long stretch, from the original conception of a story until its visualization is watched by an audience, there are so many elements of production and exhibition that an occasional success of presentation, far from depreciating this youthful art of ours, should command our wonder and respect. One has only to glance through the departments of this paper to realize how many contributory effects go to make up the complete ensemble.

From its inception, the story passes into design, structure and method at the hands of the author. It may then be criticised at the studio and returned for decided changes. It may be rewritten and offered in new form, only to be changed again and again before it is ready for the director. Then follows an infinity of studio preparation, the selection of types, their costumes and make-up and their rehearsal in action; the interior settings and exterior backgrounds must be selected; lighting and camera work become important, and more criticism follows.

At every stage of production there is criticism and re-criticism before the press showing is arranged, and then some more. It is not unknown for important changes to be made in a release after it has been privately exhibited to reviewers. Within the limitations of a sincere company, and within certain limitations of cost as a rule, all that artistry and science can afford is given to the completed product before the real publicity campaign is well under way, though a certain amount of advance publicity may have been started. The best that is placed in an exhibitor's hands comes near being as good as the resources of a producing company can make it, and that means a vast amount of complicated work in a large number of departments.

There will be a steady advance in quality of product without doubt, but it is just as well to give that which is now being shown every chance for the sake of building up that most valuable asset of a theater, good will. The satisfied patron of the picture show is the finest publicity agent in the world. He comes again himself and brings others with him. He spreads the news that the theater which pleases him is giving the best general performance or circulates a dangerous report to the contrary. He is satisfied or dissatisfied according to the whole effect of what he has seen, and it is just there that most exhibitors fall down.

Speed of projection can ruin the finest release in the world, especially at the end of a five-reel feature. Any strong story has what may be designated as a whole effect. While reading a printed novel, you raise your eyes at certain moments to get a better mental grasp on what has gone before, and so at the conclusion of a screen portrayal the mind needs a moment of retrospect to fully grasp the full significance of what has been shown. If the general effect has power, it then becomes more deeply impressed, yet it is not unusual for another picture to be projected so promptly as to entirely destroy this favorable impression.

Then put yourself in the position of a spectator watching a big feature for the first time. Mind as well as eyes is under a strain for five reels. A slight relief at the end, if only a bit of music in accord with the play's mood, would afford the needed rest and a chance for readjustment for the next thing on the program. That one little minute would also show that the exhibitor is not attempting to speed up and get rid of those who have come to his place for entertainment and recreation. Screen courtesy is quite as valuable as personal politeness.

Nothing is more disappointing to an audience than the chopped up reel, yet one was recently shown on Broadway with the end lopped off—it was about as interesting as a novel with the last page torn out. Even slightly mutilated films are the equivalent of your morning newspaper, delivered with a portion of the reading matter torn away. It may not be of serious consequence at the time, but its repetition will eventually result in your changing your news dealer. It is not a question of the penny you pay, but you are entitled to good service and resent that of an inferior kind.

Those whose lives are dull incline strongly to graphic presentation of what they have never known. The written word does not reach their minds so swiftly and effectively as what is seen at a glance. From the outset, moving pictures were fascinating to people generally designated as the working classes, those who have very little time to study books, but who are all the more eager to learn. As a matter of kindly justice, quite as well as from sound business judgment, such people should be given the best, not the worst, that is offered by producers. The exhibitor can become a discriminating critic, not only for his own financial benefit, but for the good of humanity as well. His selections should never "play down" to what is poor, gross, primitive and raw in faulty human nature.

A good critic never goes to view a picture with any prejudice in his mind. He is not for or against any kind of picture which has intrinsic merit. This is as it should be. It is not the kind of story that counts—it is quality of that kind. There have been a lot of poor war pictures shown, but, on the other hand, war pictures have been the most popular shown on the screen. They have also been the most profitable—it is all a question of superior quality. The same may be said of "costume" plays. It is not a question of whether or not the dress is of today, but whether or not the subject matter is vital to the moment.

Producers prefer the modern guise—it costs less in time and money, but there are cases where the point to be brought out can be more strongly enforced by a setting and attire foreign to our own. It is just as well to go to the viewing of a release with a mind free from all bias. The most important thing to keep in mind is that truthfulness of representation is bound to count with intelligent members of an audience and bound to be of most value to those who need to know the truth.

When all is said that can be said against moving pictures, it will be found that depreciation of them comes from the exhibition of unsatisfactory examples. These are the mistakes of an art in the vigor and crude enthusiasm of youth. It is part of the exhibitor's broad duty to build up public confidence. The art is established in popular favor because of its direct appeal. That direct appeal is irresistible, but we do not wish to rely upon the value of our medium alone. Critic and exhibitor are one in purpose. Their object is to bring production up to the enjoyment of all classes, and this makes the duty of carefully studying what is shown all the more important.

We Need It. Go To It

By Sam Spedon

AN old fellow in Rochester who had been a horse trader experienced conversion and when called upon in meeting for a prayer made the following generous supplication: "O Lord I pray that every man will have a barrel of potatoes this year, I pray every man will have a barrel of apples, a barrel of flour, a barrel of salt, a barrel of pepper— Oh h—l, that's too much pepper!"

Let us pray—that every organization in the industry may have a barrel of money this year; they can't have too much of it. They will need it in their business. Every Exhibitors' League and the National Association will need it to contest adverse legislation and do other things that are necessary for the maintainence of its organization and the good of the whole industry. We must do something more than pray; we must pay our dues and assessments and see to it that we have a reserve fund on hand to meet the exigencies which are bound to arise. The Lord helps those who help themselves and the Lord help those who help themselves to what we get after we get it. We want to see to it that it is put in the treasuries of our organizations before any grafters help themselves to it.

At a meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Brooklyn, New York, it voted its treasurer a salary of one dollar a year so they could bond him. Wise guys these Brooklyn boys. We hope that the Chicago League will do the same thing, if it hasn't done it already, to the manager and treasurer of the Exposition to be held at Chicago this July. Experience is a great teacher and the only trouble with all of us is, we are human. We are all subject to the same human weaknesses. If we know ourselves we know others, and if we want to do right we should be willing to safeguard ourselves against our own human weaknesses as well as to safeguard against others. The fellow who invented the slogan, "Safety First," said it, and he said it for all of us. Some time ago we made a suggestion that all organizations that appealed to other branches of the industry to support their expositions, and balls, should publish a public statement of their receipts and expenditures, either to the contributors or in the trade papers. Up to the present time we have not seen this done and the question is still open to speculation. It is a fair proposition and due all those who are directly interested.

Every man who goes to the Chicago convention and has the privilege of the floor or ought to go there as a business man of lawful age, open and aboveboard, prepared to speak right out in "meetin" without fear or favor. Declare himself and assert his independence. Don't go there with any strings tied to you. We are looking for great things from the exhibitors. The convention of film circuit exhibitors at the Hotel Astor in New York City last week shows they are getting their stride and going to do things. Everything points in the direction of progress and business development. The exhibitor is no longer waiting for the other fellow to lead the way.

We understand the National Association of the M. P. I. is going to hold its convention at Chicago at the same time as the National Exhibitors' League. This is good news. It will bring the two interests closer together and they ought to accomplish wonders. We hope they will work in conjunction and harmony with each other. One is as essential to the industry as the other, and one should act as a balance to the other. There is great work in store for both. This is a great get together year. If we don't do it now we will never do it.

"Three Guesses"

By Sam Spedon.

THE Wheeler tax bill is still in committee at Albany, and it is a mooted question whether it will be dragged out on the floor of the legislature. It has been changed three times already, the last time the tax on the footage of film was cut in half, and still Assemblyman Heber Wheeler, who investigated the industry and framed the bill, is up a tree as to whether he has done it right or not.

He has his weather eye focused on an appropriation of $125,000 for the establishment of a commission to pass and censor films, and has now introduced another bill for that purpose. The commisioner is to receive a salary of $7,000 a year, but to whom the balance, $118,000, is to go, is not being published.

Since the hearing of the Wheeler tax bill on April 19th, it has met a great deal of opposition from the members of the judiciary committee, and Assemblyman Wheeler is no surer of his ground than when he first framed it. Evidently he doesn't know any more about the film output in the State of New York than when he started his investigation of the industry five months ago. He apparently has no more idea of what is an equitable tax to place on films than a cat has of his grandmother and nobody knows, not even himself, how by placing a tax of one-half a cent to five cents a foot on positive films shown in New York State you can only get a total of $100,000. You are all wrong, Heber, you're all wrong. If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.

It looks as if Wheeler has gotten over his head, and we are of the opinion he has pulled his bill in with him. It is possible it will not be brought up before the legislature adjourns on May 4.

"Getting Down to Business"

By Sam Spedon.

IT would have done your heart good to have seen the aggregation of leading exhibitors from all parts of the country in convention assembled in New York at the Hotel Astor recently to inaugurate the first circuit. They were a representative body of business men, clean-cut and thoroughly alive to their business interests. In appearance and general bearing they do the industry proud. They are the kind of men we like to have with us and expect to see at the National Convention at Chicago next July. This National Exhibitors' circuit will do a great deal toward the establishment of better conditions in the industry. They were not lonesome; they brought many of the representatives and heads of the exchange and producing companies within the portals of the Astor—just dropped in, don't you know, accidentally on purpose at an opportune time to meet everybody you know and would like to know.

What the National Exhibitors' circuit will do is a matter of much speculation. As far as could be learned, its chief object is to obtain the best pictures possible by purchasing them outright, and after they have been given first showing in the big houses, and then distribute or lease them equitably, without confliction, to the lesser ones, who will have in addition the advantage of the prestige of the bigger presentation and advertising accorded them. Furthermore, it will do away with all factional competition and unnecessary expenses that accrue by passing through intermediary channels. They calculate that it will encourage the production of better pictures by giving the manufacturers more business and profits, by reason of eliminating expenses and making quicker sales. They have no intention of depreciating production by using the organization to dictate prices or compel the producer or exchange to conform to their demands regardless of fairness. Their attitude is not antagonistic to any other branch of the business, much less to drive any one out of business. Their only desire is to better conditions of the whole industry by taking a step in what they consider the right direction.

Of course there always will be a difference of opinion, and already we heard one expressed to the effect that the First National Exhibitors' circuit does not include all the best and first run houses, and there still exists enough big houses to bid against the organization for the big run stuff. This thought is in accord with what we have just said, that the new organization will stimulate healthy competition and establish equitable distribution.

A Most Worthy Anniversary

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THE Rialto theater of New York celebrated the first year of its existence during the week of April 22 to 28. That the year has been a successful one there can be no doubt, situated in the very heart of the greatest city of the world its prestige goes out into all the world, making it, with other strong pictures house of the city, a Mecca for all enthusiastic moving picture people no matter in what way their interests may lie. The tens of thousands of people which have always thronged the place is sufficient evidence that the public requirements have been fully met and sustained, and, while we have no knowledge as to the financial results of this great enterprise, we are interested to the extent that its financial prosperity is thorougly deserved for the good of the picture trade.

The Rialto is also widely known as being the picture trade expression of S. L. Rothapfel. Conceived by him the theater building is at once a place of beauty, of comfort and attraction, and ranks at once in all these ideals as having no superior. A pioneer in his particular way Mr. Rothapfel has shown the world that the moving picture house can be lifted to the highest possible level, as we believe we are right in saying that to him belongs in a very large degree the credit for giving the educational pictures a proper and permanent place in his program. Educationalism, as found in the right and proper setting of all good pictures, has at this theater made the questions of censorship and Sunday closing entirely unnecessary, as not only are the programs beyond criticism, but they have become examples for all other theaters. Along distinctly educational lines the Rialto has not been exceeded by any other theater in its use and advocacy of the educational pictures; during the year as a result of the work of this theater the use and profits of the educational pictures have been most marked, and a great impetus has been given to the cause of educational pictures, as well as the educational power of all pictures, a result so dear to so many whose conceptions of the powers of the moving pictures are so high.

As a place of entertainment the Rialto has both set a high standard and proved a great success, true, its great and justly famous orchestra under the leadership of Hugo Riesenfeld has proved a wonderful attraction, rewarding its patrons, and in turn being rewarded by them with evidences of the highest possible appreciation. Dividing the work of the year into three parts, it may be said that patrons of this theater have seen the greatest pictures of the year; marking the progress of the moving picture as an entertainer without a superior, and as an educator unequaled in its powers and possibilities as an auxiliary to the schools. In the third place there has been given at the Rialto the finest and best music possible for any orchestra to render, so much so that this theater has the reputation of being one of the notable attractions of the great metropolis.

To the moving picture trade (with the exception of the great orchestra) there is nothing that the majority of picture houses everywhere may not emulate. They can procure the same pictures, both entertaining and instructive; they can present similar programs and secure the same patronage and praise, they can at once command respect and disarm criticism and still further build up a reputation equal in proportion to that enjoyed by the Rialto, which deservedly receives the congratulations of the moving picture trade for its present successes and best wishes for its future; thereby continuing to earn and maintain its title of the Temple of the Motion Picture. It is with a feeling of deep satisfaction that the Moving Picture World, and its founder, the late J. P. Chalmers, were given a due measure of appreciation by Mr. Rothapfel in his contribution to the tenth anniversary number in which he placed upon record that in some measures at least his earliest inspirations came from Mr. Chalmers and his paper.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONVENTION MAY 9.

The South Carolina Exhibitors' League will meet in state convention in Columbia on Wednesday, May 9. A big attendance has already been assured by the enthusiasm of theater men throughout the state.

Men prominent in local and national film circles will make addresses, the convention committee announces, and the committee also states that several film stars have signified their intention of being on hand.

It is expected also that all matters pertaining to the activities of the delegates to the national convention in Chicago will be gone over, with a view to making South Carolina a factor to be reckoned with more than ever in national work.

LOUIS GELENG TAKES UP ADVERTISING WORK.

Louis A. J. Geleng, charter member of the Screen Club and also a member of the Cinema Camera Club, is now technical director and cameraman of Screen Advertising, Inc., of Washington, D. C. Mr. Geleng is devoting his attention to national products only. In his subjects he is employing experienced actors and using regulation sets. The productions average 200 to 250 feet in length. Screen Advertising intends building a studio soon. Mr. Geleng's many friends in the trade will wish him success in his new venture.

MacMAHON WRITES ON ADAPTING NOVELS.

Henry MacHahon, general press representative of the Fox Film Corporation, contributes an article to a recent issue of the Saturday magazine of the New York Evening Post in which he illustrates the new art mode of "film novel" by analyses of "A Tale of Two Cities," a Fox production, and "The Manxman," by George Loane Tucker.

"The first filmed novels were admittedly crude affairs," says Mr. MacMahon. "Today the distinguished novelist who has permitted his works to be screened frequently acts in an advisory capacity to producer and director. But the big factor that has driven film fiction ahead by leaps and bounds is the complete revolution in the art itself. It is no longer regarded as an appanage of the stage. It has been found possible to tell an action story very much as the literary fictionist tells it."

Rothapfel Heads Exhibitors Combine

New Organization Also Names J. D. Williams as Manager—To Begin Business Immediately

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit is now a fact. For five days beginning April 23 the subscribers to the agreement were in session at the Hotel Astor. The Moving Picture World of the last two weeks has told of the steps leading up to the organization by many of the big exhibitors of the United States and Canada of an association for the purchase and distribution of independent features. These exhibitors control in the neighborbood of $20,000,000 worth of motion picture theaters. They have incorporated under the laws of New York, with a capitalization of $50,000, full paid and non-assessable.

S. L. Rothapfel, President.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater of New York, and representing in the new combination the corporation owning that house, was elected president. T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, owner of Tally's theater in that city, is vice-president. Harry O. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, is secretary-treasurer. The directors are the three officers named and Frederick Dahnken, of Turner & Dahnken, of San Francisco; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago, and Earl H. Hulsey, of Dallas, Texas. J. D. Williams, who conceived the scheme, was elected manager. All legal matters in connection with the formation of the association were in charge of Jacobs & Jacobs, of New York.

At the opening session on Monday, Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, was chosen temporary chairman. It was decided to divide the country into four districts—A, B, C and D—the western, central, Atlantic and southern sections. Two directors were apportioned to each division, except for the south, which was given one. These seven men will control the policy of the organization. Headquarters have been taken in the Rialto Theater Building.

T. L. Tally, Vice-president.

Mr. Williams, upon whose shoulders will fall the active management of the enterprise, is one of the best known film men in the world. For a long time he was the head of the J. D. Williams Enterprises in Australia. As far back as 1909 he built the Lyric, a 2,000-seat house, in Sydney, Australia, and it is being successfully operated today. Inside of two years he built forty commnuity theaters. He has a keen sense of showmanship.

"The new association means a big step forward in the development of the business of exhibiting pictures," said one of the members of the circuit. "It will go far to stabilize our end of the industry. It will add to the confidence of capital seeking to invest in a large way. One serious handicap in the past has been the lack of security in program—the absence of assurance that features on which a house depended would not be transferred to a rival. The circuit will give encouragement to manufacturers to produce their best, knowthat if they turn out a great subject or a good subject there will be an immediate market for it, and a cash payment awaiting it."

Harry Schwalbe, Secretary-Treasurer.

"The purposes of our organization," said Mr. Rothapfel at the conclusion of the meeting, "are to band ourselves for our mutual advantage, to exchange ideas, and to raise the standard of the entire motion picture industry to a higher level. The board of directors has been given unlimited power to buy, lease, or otherwise procure films on the open market. Once purchased, the film becomes the exclusive property of the circuit. Each mmber will control the rights to it in his respective territory, and can dispose of it as he sees fit.

"It is not our purpose to antagon ze any department of the picture industry, nor to put anyone out of business. Our organization will not injure the exchangeman. It will create competition for certain productions, and we feel sure it will foster and encourage the manufactu e of better pctures. The details of the method for purchasing the pictures we want remain to be worked out, that being left to the discretion of the board of directors."

James D. Williams, Manager.

The firms compristhe association and their respective territories are: T. L. Tally, Southern California and Arizona; Turner & Dahnken, Northern California and Nevada; Greater Theaters Company, Washington and Alaska; Jensen & Von Herberg, Oregon; Silver Bow Amusements Company, Montana and Northern Idaho; Robert Lieber, Indiana; Thomas Saxe, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota; E. Visiting Exhibitors Entertained.

On Wednesday evening nearly a score of the visiting exhibitors were entertained by the Moving Picture World at an informal dinner. Thursday noon, under the guidance of C. R. Seelye and Tom North, of the Pathe forces, a party was taken in automobiles to the Astra studio in Jersey City, where for an hour or more they were the guests of L. J. Gasnier and George Fitzmaurice. Still and motion pictures were taken at the party. One of the latter included a reception by Mrs. Castle, with Mr. Tally making the presentations. The exhibitors also met Creighton Hale, Mollie King and Leon Bary. President Rothapfel submitted to a close-up and staged a few stunts. Thirty-seven feet also were photographed for inclusion in the Hearst-Pathe Weekly.

Present other than those named were J. Eugene Pearce, Frederick Dahnken and Mrs. Dahnken, E. B. Johnson, N. H. Gordon, E. Mandelbaum, Earl H. Hulsey, Tom Moore and Mrs. Moore, Harry O. Schwalbe, W. P. Dewees, W. H. Brouse, Mrs. Tom North, John Poole, president of the Federal National Bank, Washington, D. C., and J. D. Williams.

On the return to New York a stop was made at the headquarters of the Firemen and the members of the party were duly made members of the Visiting Firemen, Company No. 1 and formally "tagged" with the button. Messrs. Seelye and North also were hosts at luncheon.

Calcutta Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

THE Elphinstone Bioscope Co., of Calcutta, announces a Charlie Chaplin night. To confess, Chaplin is not a particular favorite of the Calcuttaites. I often hear people complaining about the sameness of his gestures and postures. A leading Calcutta paper will not be sorry if Chaplin films are no longer projected on Indian screens. It remains to be seen, therefore, what reception the Calcuttaites will accord to the Elphinstone people's venture. If the Chaplin night proves a failure I feel certain Chaplin films will not figure on our screens frequently.

The following films have been banned in India: "Undine," "Satan," "New York," "The Yellow Menace" and "The Campbells Are Coming." I may state here that "New York" was shown in Calcutta two nights only. Certain films, which have recently been shown, should never have been projected, before Indians especially. I make no doubt, however, that our Commissioner of Police will continue his "purity campaign" vigorously.

In a previous letter I wrote that Mr. Dicasse of the Bijou of Calcutta and M. E. Bandmann had combined to exhibit all British—specially Hepworth—pictures. Mr. Dicasse has just announced to the public that his "combine" is dead, "owing to the different views of the parties concerned as to outlay and returns." The moral is obvious.

The Ripon Theater of Madras has managed to secure "The Girl from Frisco." For once, benighted Madras has scored over Bombay and Calcutta. I hope, however, Mr. Madan will enable us to see it in the Elphinstone before long.

By exhibiting "Britain Prepared" and "The Battle of the Somme" in various parts of India, Mr. Bandmann has been able to send $15,000 to the war fund. He is bringing out the third part of the "Somme Battle," and I have no doubt it will be well patronized.

Mr. Dicasse prints the following paragraph in his "Film Gazette":

"The Thanhouser Co. would probably be amused to hear that, noticing one of their posters outside the Bijou recently, a lady walked in and asked when the next performance would take place, adding she was so fond of Wagner's music." She doubtless felt sorry when matters were explained to her.

Messrs. Bandmann, Dicasse and Madan do a considerable business in second hand films. It is understood that, owing to the damage done to films through faulty operating, Mr. Madan will not do much business in future with the smaller picture houses in India. Messrs. Shetna and Ardeshin, of Bombay, will, I fancy, be better patronized than before. I may state, in this connection, that Messrs. Ardeshin have secured two exclusives, viz., "The Sultan's Treasure" and "Justice," a 22-reel serial in 8 episodes.

The Grand Opera House of Calcutta has been leased by Mr. Dicasse, who is having it reconstructed and made fit for a truly first class picture theater. All fittings and requisites are being supplied by a local decorating company, which specializes in this class of business. We are promised an opening night shortly.

Wheeler All At Sea on Film Tax

Reduces Footage Rate Again, but Seeks Appropriation of $125,000 to Pay First Year's Expenses of Commission

AGREEING to a futher reduction in the proposed footage tax and likewise fixing the age at which operators in first and second class cities are to be licensed at 21 years, Assemblyman Heber Wheeler is making the fight of his life these days in a final effort to secure the passage of his bill at Albany which seriously affects all branches of the motion picture industry. The bill is still in the hands of the Senate Judiciary committee, of which Senator Henry Walters of Syracuse is chairman. Whether or not it is to be reported out of committee and sent to the floor for a vote can only be surmised. It is openly known that Senator Walters is opposed to the bill being reported out. Senator Halliday, who hails from Ithaca, is also in opposition to the measure. Assemblyman Wheeler, apparently fearful of the outcome, refuses absolutely to make any prediction as to the bill coming forth from the hands of the judiciary before the Legislature winds up its session on May 4th.

Up until the time of the hearing the Wheeler bill enjoyed comparatively smooth sailing. Since then its path has been a somewhat thorny one. Certain concessions, forced, have already been made by Assemblyman Wheeler and ex-Senator Harvey Hinman, counsel for the committee. When the bill was first framed Mr. Wheeler asserted that it would bring approximately $150,000 annually to the State in the way of a revenue. These figures have been most emphatically disputed by persons prominent in the motion picture industry. There have already been two reductions in the original tax on footage, and now if the bill is passed it cannot help falling far short of returning the revenue first intended.

Assemblyman Wheeler has now introduced a bill in the Legislature seeking an appropriation of $125,000 for the purpose of meeting the first year's expenses of the proposed commission. He does not state how he figures this out. The bill provides for a salary of $7,000 a year for the Commissioner, but the salaries of all other persons to be employed by the commission are not being published.

The appropriation bill is taking an odd course these days. Instead of being pushed to the front, it has apparently been allowed to drop with the understanding that it will be a part of a supplementary bill generally passed on the last days of the session and intended to take care of any matters which require expenditures in relation to the enactment of new legislation.

The Wheeler bill in its latest remodeled form practically cuts the footage tax in two and at the same time advances the age of operators in first and second class cities to 21 years. In third class cities and in villages the age limit remains at 18 years, as originally provided.

Other changes seem imminent. Assemblyman Wheeler stated that he did not care to make public the exact footage now more or less definitely decided on until after he had conferred with Senator Walters. Senator Harvey Hinman reached Albany Wednesday night and lost no time in meeting Mr. Wheeler and other members of the committee in the hope of untangling the situation so that the bill may at least be reported out of committee and take its chances in a general ballot.

"We have played on the level with the motion picture industry, but I cannot say that the committee in some instances has been treated freely and above board," said Mr. Wheeler. "I understand that Mr. Thornton is now preparing certain figures which will be handed to Senator Walters. My committee proposes to give the motion picture industry plenty of rope with the idea of seeing exactly what they want done. The situation seems to be one where touching a man's pocketbook brings forth the usual howl. The tax, to my way of thinking, is absolutely a just one, though naturally enough a bill such as this must meet with opposition. Following last week's hearing, the Wharton interests, the Triangle Company and Mr. Powers came to us with certain objections to the footage fee and they have received consideration by both the Senate Judiciary committee and my own committee.

"I am in favor of recommending cutting the footage tax practically in two. Frankly, I don't think the figures we first had were any too high, but for the sake of doing away with present arguments I am also agreeable to fixing the age limit of operators in first and second class cities to 21 years, giving third class cities and the country districts the privilege of using operators of 18 years. In many of the smaller communities one finds a man and one or two members of his family running a motion picture house and getting a fair revenue out of it, frequently using his son to run the machine.

"I understand that some efforts are being used these days to smother the bill, but whether or not these reports are true I am not at liberty to state. When Walter Irwin spoke at the hearing last week he offered objections to a section of the bill appearing on page 14, the wording of which he feared might be interpreted as calling for a submission of a film for review. We do not intend that this section shall be construed in any such way, and we have now changed the wording so that it reads that the positive shall be submitted for the computation of such fees, etc.

"I do not wish to predict the outcome of this bill. I feel that it is a perfectly just one and that the industry should be taxed. I have twice tried to meet and confer with Senator Walters, but have so far been unsuccessful. I know, however, that he is against the bill."

In figuring out the footage tax, as it is now proposed in concessions made in the hope of getting the bill through, the revenue will amount to less than $100,000, according to Mr. Wheeler's own statements. Assemblyman Wheeler is not satisfied with the treatment which he received from certain persons connected with the motion picture industry who came before the committee at its hearings in New York City. He is frank in saying so. There were some thirty-odd persons who in confidence gave the committee figures showing the profit in the industry. Mr. Wheeler said that if he wished to violate his agreement in this respect it would be an easy matter for him to offset all the arguments advanced at the hearing that the industry was not in such shape as to be taxed. These figures were given him in confidence, however, and they will be so retained.

Senator Hinman Explains.

Ex-Senator Harvey Hinman had a conference behind closed doors Thursday morning with Senator Elon R. Brown, at which time the Wheeler Motion Picture bill was discussed in all its phases. Senator Hinman expressed himself as being perfectly willing to stand for a reduction in the film footage tax and the advancement in the age of operators in first and second class cities to 21 years. According to Senator Hinman's statement, the present friction is due to the fact that on two trips which Assemblyman Wheeler made to New York for the purpose of getting the leaders in the motion picture industry together to talk over the provisions of the bill in its embryonic form he was successful. Had there been a disposition on the part of the picture people to meet with Assemblyman Wheeler, Senator Hinman says, there would have been no occasion for the hearing of a week ago and that a quiet conference would have smoothed out all difficulties.

In conversation with Senator Brown, Mr. Hinman said that he was not the person who had drafted the bill, contrary to the ideas of many. He said that while the committee entertained hopes of being able to get enough money through the provisions of the measure to run the proposed department, the taxation was really only an incidental feature.

"The chief idea of the bill," said Senator Hinman, "is to get after a certain few in the industry who are putting out pictures these days which, if continued, will do great injury to the entire business." Mr. Hinman expressed the opinion that it would not be advisable to confer too great a power on the commissioner of motion pictures in this State, if one is appointed, although persons or concerns entertaining any grievances could have recourse to the courts.

Senator Walters Against Bill.

The attitude of the chairman of the Senate judiciary committee toward the Wheeler Motion Picture bill can easily be inferred from the following conversation which took place in the Senate lobby at Albany on Thursday afternoon, April 26th:

"Did the Wheeler bill come out of committee this afternoon?" was asked of Senator J. Henry Walters, chairman of the committee.

"It did not," replied the Senator with much emphasis.

"Will it come out of committee this week?" was asked.

"You can bet your money that it will not," was Senator Walters' reply.

Kansas Convention

Big Gathering of Exhibitors at Hutchinson Combats Deposit System—Much Important Business Transacted.

NO DEPOSITS! This was the ultimatum declared to the exchanges by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas, at Hutchinson, April 23 and 24. The League adopted a resolution that the deposit system was unfair and unjust in every respect, and that further action would be taken at a meeting in Wichita June 4 and 5.

As to the Triangle's new bonding system, the Kansas League suggested that the bond be made equitable, so that if an exchange does not live up to its side of the contract the exhibitor will be reimbursed.

The Kansas League is not merely attacking an undesirable condition, however, in its action on the deposit system. It is formulating a definite and constructive plan of co-operation with exchanges, for the benefit of the whole industry. It declares that the exhibitors of Kansas are responsible business men, and at the same time declares that the league will discipline and eliminate any members who fail in the slightest respect to live up to their contracts.

"What we want to do," said Chris Glamann, president of the League, "is to assure the exchanges that the League stands for straight business methods and will not stand for anything else, whether the offender is an exhibitor or an exchange. We want to help the exchanges put the business on the highest possible standard."

The predominating subject at the convention was the deposit system. The meetings opened Monday morning, April 23, everybody being admitted to this session, and informal discussion prevailing. Exchangemen, exhibitors, supply men, and visitors participated. Nearly every exhibitor had something to say against the deposit system. Lee Ochs, president of the National League, had something to say on both sides, pointing out that there was some basis for the desire of the exchanges to get a deposit, but declaring his inability to suggest a remedy for the situation. Exchange men told why the deposit system had been adopted. Many interesting impromptu debates arose between exhibitors and film men—notably one between P. J. Concannon, former secretary and stalwart worker of the League, and Phil Ryan, of the Standard Film Corporation, which brought many of the mooted points to a clearer issue. These debates had the effect of showing each side of the question the actuating motives of the other side.

On Wednesday the League met in executive session, and thrashed out the matter, with the result that the definite resolution was adopted, and further discussion set for the Wichita meeting in June. It was believed best to make it very clear at this time that the deposit system was not desired and would not be tolerated.

It is also very clear that the Kansas League is going to build itself on the foundation of co-operation, and of insistence that members live up to their contracts. The League is stronger than it ever has been; it has more members, and more money. The members are heartier in their support and stand more nearly as a unit. There is a deeper appreciation of organization purposes and possibilities. And the League is, therefore, in shape to insist on the high standards among its members. It will force its members to observe their contracts explicitly or get out of the League. It will desire complaints of exchanges against improper business practices of members; if investigation shows that the member was palpably in the wrong the member must make good or quit the League. In all such matters the League will work hand in hand with the exchanges, to make membership in the League synonymous with square dealing and punctilious business practice.

This constructive program of the League met the enthusiastic indorsement of the members. There were many comments that exhibitors had been looked upon long enough as outside the class of business men, and that the Kansas League would show that the Kansas exhibitors were business men.

In this connection many references were made to the credit departments of the exchanges. Such departments, said the exhibitors, were quite in line with their own idea of the proper developments of the industry, and in the building up of credit work, they would be glad to help the exchanges.

"If some of the exchanges can get along so nicely without certain restrictions that others impose, and seem to get their satisfactory results through an efficient credit department, this must be one good tip for the other exchanges," said one exhibitor. "We are business men—we know there is interchange of credit information among the manufacturers and jobbers in merchandise—why not among exchanges?"

The strength and the solidarity of the Kansas League has been shown in the past few months in many ways. It was announced at this meeting that no exchange was now charging any fee for censoring of pictures, a result which was brought about by the League's action in reducing the cost of censorship in Kansas. For the League was entirely reasonable for this reduction. It had fought the entire censorship bill; and while not winning the death of the bill, had won out in the removal of the censoring headquarters to Kansas City, Kansas, where the expense on the exchanges would be much less than at Topeka. The League also secured the setting of a maximum fee of $2 for censorship and a rule that the censoring should be done at cost. The League is also said to be responsible for the elimination of the Rev. Festus

Foster from the board of censors. Foster is now said to be seeking a position as a salesman of film.

The co-operative function of the League has been demonstrated in its conduct of grievance cases, which have been of several types. Among the grievances adjusted have been controversies among exhibitors and specific disagreements between individual exhibitors and exchanges. At this meeting written grievances were handed to the committee, which will take action and report at the next session.

C. W. Green, who has been secretary of the League, automatically resigned when he became connected with an exchange. His successor was elected, Charles Barron, of Augusta, one of the live wires of the League, who will help Mr. Glamann keep things moving briskly. Mr. Glamann lives at Wellington, and he and Mr. Barron can conveniently get together frequently.

The following delegates to the National Convention, in Chicago, in July, were named: Merritt L. Beeson, Dodge City; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; Fred Savage, Hutchinson: C. B. Yost, Hutchinson; William Meyn, Kansas City; J. J. Marshall, Manhattan; W. H. Willey, Mulberry; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; C. E. Glamann, Wellington.

This list may be increased to eleven because of added membership between now and the convention.

The association adopted resolutions thanking the Commercial Club, the Rotary Club, the people of Hutchinson and Mr. Savage and Mr. Yost in particular, for their many courtesies, and particularly generous hospitality. The resolutions declared that Hutchinson was the greatest of convention cities.

Notes of the Convention.

This was the seventh semi-annual convention of the Kansas League, and by far the best; there were 85 theaters represented in the attendance.

The mayor of the town was unable to welcome the League; but Judge J. R. Beeching did the job very effectively. He incidentally, in the exuberance of his hospitality, promised that if any delegates got into trouble he personally would see that they got out of it. That night, a policeman edged in between a hotel clerk and his call board, preventing an alarm, while other officers softly crept to a room where several persons, not residents of Hutchinson, were gathered in social converse. The men were taken down the street—and after much alarm and more telephoning their release was secured, presumably through the intercession of the Judge. Each convention has to have some such stunt as this.

The usual fake play at taking a moving picture was made with one of the machines on exhibition at the Chalmers Hotel, the convention headquarters. The fire department came rushing down the street, the crowd stared—but it had heard of the stunt, it was not extremely interested. The fire department, however, was actually running to a fire—and the cameramen missed a golden opportunity by not having film in the camera.

Nearly every exchange at Kansas City was represented at the convention with live wires who helped greatly to enhance the fun and good feeling of the occasion.

The Commercial Club provided the meeting place for the convention; and likewise entertained the visitors at a smoker Monday evening at the club rooms. The program included a boxing bout, cabaret numbers by local talent and by exchangemen from Kansas City. Everybody knows by this time that Kansas is bone dry—and the smoker was over by 10:30. President Lee Ochs was one of the speakers at the smoker, telling of the evils of censorship.

A parade that was the best the Kansas moving picture industry has seen yet, was put on the afternoon of April 24. There were more than fifty cars in line, including a dozen floats by Hutchinson exhibitors and by other business men of Hutchinson. All the motor cars were decorated lavishly, and many held full loads of girls.

The increased energy and efficiency of the Kansas League is indicated in the authorization of a paid assistant secretary. Mr. Barron is to employ one when needed, at a salary to be decided on by the president.

The big event of the convention, from the standpoint of public interest, was the ball, in convention hall. Hutchinson has a real convention hall with a large dancing floor, and seats for some 5,000 people. The hall was not packed, but it was well filled. The door opened at 7 o'clock, with people eager to see the first presentation of a group of comedies brought down from Kansas City. At 9:30 an impersonation contest was conducted, which was followed by dancing. Hutchinson responded even more fully than have many larger cities to the appeal of the screen in this event. It was successful in large measure. General admission was 25 cents, and dancing tickets $1.

There was one woman exhibitor present, Mrs. C. E. Miles, manager of the Photoplay Theater, Argentine, Kan.

Strong Organization of Exhibitors Urged

Preparedness and Organization on the Part of Exhibitors Will Prevent the Imposition of Many Evils, Ludwig Schindler Says.

LUDWIG SCHINDLER left for New York City Friday, April 20, where he will call on moving picture producers and others regarding the space required for the coming National Exposition at the Coliseum in July.

Before leaving, Mr. Schindler in a conversation referred to the necessity for a strong national organization of exhibitors. "The moving picture industry is confronted on all sides by evils in the form of unjust taxation, censorship and many others," said Mr. Schindler. "In order to meet and defeat these evils concerted action must be taken by one big, strong organization which will include representation from every state in the Union.

"The League in New York, Indiana, Illinois and Pennsylvania has considerable strength, likewise in several other states, but what we want at the coming convention is a representation from every state, from Maine to California. Every exhibitor in a state that is not affiliated with the National League will find it well worth his while to attend the coming convention.

"We want to meet him. We want to know what he is up against in his home state and town, and we want to help him.

"An exhibitor may state that he has gotten along all these years without a league; but we might reply that the United States has also gotten along with a very small army and an inadequate navy; but now in time of danger we all agree that the $7,000,000,000 would never have been voted by Congress, nor the 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. tax on your theater receipts would never have been thought of, if we had been in a state of preparedness that would have made any foreign power think twice before it tramped on Uncle Sam's toes.

"Organization and preparedness should be the watchword of every exhibitor in the United States.

"The producers of moving pictures are much pleased to know that the Exposition and Convention will be held in the same building in July. This means that every exhibitor who attends the Exposition will be able to meet manufacturers or their representatives and still be able to attend to their convention duties."

Mr. Schindler stated that he has already had correspondence with several stars who are anxious to learn the details of the coming Exposition, and who hope to be able to be in Chicago during Exposition and Convention week. He stated that Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Robert Warwick have already pledged to attend the coming Exposition, as the Selznick Pictures Corporation is planning an elaborate exhibit, and Mr. Selznick has already promised to have all his stars present.

Ohio Convention Called

Exhibitors of State Requested to Meet at Cleveland Headquarters on May 15—Important Business Scheduled.

AN IMPORTANT business meeting of the Ohio Exhibitors' League has been called for Tuesday, May 15, at 11 o'clock, to be held at the state headquarters, room 409, Republic building, 647 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. On this occasion the election of officers for the ensuing year will be held and delegates to the National Convention at Chicago, Ill., will be selected.

Other matters of vital importance to the exhibitors of Ohio will be acted upon, including war tax on tickets, tax on copyrighted music. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance of exhibitors from all parts of the state, as a general invitation has been extended, regardless of membership.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York City Exhibitors' Local, announces that there will be a meeting of the local at 218 West 42nd Street, on Wednesday, May 2, for the purpose of receiving reports on the Sunday law, copyright tax and other legislation. The local will also elect a new secretary at this meeting.

Maryland Exhibitors Dance

Hold Social Function with All the Class of an Embassy Ball—Four Thousand Persons Present.

RESPLENDENT, scintillating and brilliant are the words which should be used in describing "The Dance of the Motion Picture Stars" which was held in Baltimore on Saturday night, April 28, at the Lyric, under the auspices of the Maryland Exhibitors' League. There is room for a doubt as to whether any Embassy ball ever held, in the annals of history, could possibly eclipse this event at which there were assembled 4,000 enthusiastic adherents of the screen.

Abundant credit should be extended to those stalwart exhibitors who constituted the committees, who with such great fortitude, strength and force promulgated and carried this event through to such an exceptional finish. The officers of the league are: F. A. Hornig, president; L. A. DeHoff, vice-president; E. B. McCurdy, second vice-president; W. E. Stumpf, treasurer; Thomas D. Goldberg, secretary, and J. Louis Rome, counsel. The committees were made up as follows: Frederick Clement Weber, chairman; F. A. Hornig, Louis Schlichter, L. A. DeHoff, finance; E. B. McCurdy, hotel; L. A. DeHoff, publicity; G. Horton Gaffney, Joseph Brodie, program and printing; F. A. Hornig, banquet; F. C. Weber, J. L. Rome, players; L. Schlichter, W. Pacey, C. W. Henderson, F. Durkee, B. Rosenbauer, W. Stumpf, N. Burns, W. Leicht, W. W. Tyler, hall and music; J. L. Home, T. D. Goldberg, G. H. Gaffney, W. Leicht, E. C. Sandell, B. F. Seligman, reception.

The attending stars were received by the reception committee at 5 p. m. and were taken immediately in automobiles to the Hotel Emerson, where, upon their arrival, a crowd of onlookers had congregated.

The doors of the Lyric were thrown open to the public at about 7.30 in the evening, and from that time the crowd began to assume pretentious proportions until the limit had reached to an estimated 4,000. As each person entered the theater they were presented with a handsome souvenir program measuring 8 by 11 inches, which included a short greeting from the league to the patrons, the program of the dances and photographs of the attending stars with room for their signatures beside each one.

The opera house was magnificently decorated with the national and state colors, and during the dancing four spot lights played over those gliding about the well waxed floor. The music, which was appropriate and beautiful, was furnished by Prof. E. V. Cupero, leader of the New theater orchestra, and his band. All the members were dressed in red, white and blue uniforms. The dancing floor was in charge of Prof. T. F. Physioc, of the Garden theater roof. An exquisite stage setting, depicting a handsome interior, formed a suitable background for the band.

Keyed up to the highest tension, the assembled throng waited patiently for the appearance and presentation of the stars. This did not happen until a little after ten o'clock, and when the honored guests did arrive about 400 people were backed up against the stage to get a close glimpse.

Finally, however, the happy moment arrived and the plush curtains were drawn across the stage. An expectant hush fell over the thousands in the theater. Then, after a few moments' wait, during which the stars present had been marshalled in the wings, Frederick Clement Weber had the curtain parted and stepped upon the stage, introducing Earl Williams, who made a short speech and then retired amidst great applause. Then the others followed in quick succession, there being a short intermission before the last two arrived, each making a few remarks or bowing and retiring: Viola Dana, Edward Earle, Violet Mersereau, Anita Stewart, Shirley Mason, Rudolph Cameron, Alice Joyce, Harry Morey and A. Roosevelt.

Never before, probably, have the walls of the Lyric resounded with the thunderous applause that came from the throats, in lusty tones, from the 4,000 assembled. When Anita Stewart appeared the old building shook on its foundations. She, however, said nothing, but bowed and distributed carnations from a large bunch which she carried to many nearest the stage.

After the entire constellation of filmdom which were present had been presented to the people it was about 11.10 p. m. and they were then taken through the boxes and many were presented to them.

In the meantime all during the evening a delightful entertainment was proceeding in the cabaret, which was located on a lower floor. Any beverage desired, from beer to champagne and all sorts of cakes, sandwiches and salads were ready for serving, while a four-piece orchestra and four singers rendered popular airs.

At about 12 o'clock the crowd began to dwindle, for it was generally understood that a banquet was to be served after that hour to the honored guests of the league. About 200 covers were laid for this banquet and at 1 a. m. the diners took their seats in the light panelled, Corinthian pilastered, Italian renaissance, high domed dining room on the second floor of the Lyric,

Here the epicurean taste might well have been assuaged, for a sumptuous feast, satisfactory to even those with the tastes of Belshazzar, was served in about seven courses, with champagne. The tables were so arranged that dancing could be participated in between the courses, and full advantage was taken of this.

Many of the film men were accompanied by their wives, sons or daughters and an air of conviviality and good will pervaded the atmosphere of the lofty ceilinged room.

It could be observed that nothing had been spared to make this banquet as faultless and as excellent as delicate viands, soft and fleet-footed waiters and excellent music could do. It really resembled more the reunion of a huge family than anything else. You talked and chatted with your neighbor, called across the tables to your friends, sang with the music and danced with the priceless stars and the beautiful specimens of American womanhood assembled, which might well be called "The Glory of a Nation!"

At 2.30 a. m. the demi-tasse signalled the time for the toastmaster to call for his volunteers—although some had to be drafted. So Mr. Weber arose and said he thought the honor should be turned over to Perry N. Vekroff, who was present. Mr. Vekroff gracefully accepted the honor and then made a stirring speech, the main theme of which was that it was absolutely necessary for the exhibitors, who have their hands on the pulse of the public at all times, to make known to the scenario departments just what style of plays seems to make the greatest impressions. O. D. ("Nick") Weems was next called, but he stated he thought the best thing he could say just then was "Good-night!" The next request was Earl Williams, who stated that as he had to get up in time for church the same morning, he would not retain the people for a speech. Dainty Violet Mersereau was then drafted into service and, even though L. A. DeHoff lifted her to stand on a chair, she seemed to be all fun and laughter—well, her smile is as good as a speech. And then staunch old Harry Morey was requested to rise and say something, and in his earnest way he thanked all for the good time he had had. This, in fact, is what they all did. This was the close of what we will venture to say is the most successful affair of its kind, both financially as well as socially, that has ever been held in Baltimore.

But as a fitting climax Mr. Vekroff arose and in his ponderous voice exclaimed: "Let us drink a toast to the United States of America, to President Wilson and to the flag!" This was met with immediate action and the orchestra, as all stood in homage to the greatest of nations, played Key's beloved anthem.

Among those present, besides the officers of the league and the committees, who, with the exception of a few, attended the banquet, were: Guests: Earl Williams, Viola Dana, Edward Earle, Violet Mersereau, Anita Stewart, Shirley Mason, Rudolph Cameron, Alice Joyce, Harry Morey, A. Roosevelt, Perry N. Vekroff, Police Marshall Carter and Deputy Marshall House.

TEXAS CONVENTION JUNE 12.

Much interest has been aroused among exhibitors throughout the South over the general convention of Texas exhibitors, which will be held in Galveston on June 12 and 13. It is hoped and expected that the convention will bring about a further solidification of forces to fight adverse legislation and to co-operate for the general good of all exhibitors.

Representatives of every Texas city organization affiliated with the State body were present at a delegate conference in Dallas. It was decided to retain the present officers until the general convention. This was done upon the invitation of President E. H. Hulsey. Also at the conference was appointed to act as a steering committe Karl Hobletzelle, president of the Interstate Amusement Co.; P. C. Levy, Hippodrome theater, Fort Worth, and W. J. Lytle, of Epstein & Lytle, who operate four houses in San Antonio. Hugh M. Hardie, cashier of the Central State Bank, was continued as treasurer.

The Open Market

L. L. Hiller, of State Rights Firm of Hiller & Wilk, Opines That the Open Market Is the Distributing Method of the Future.

THAT THERE is a significance attaching to the development of the state rights field, over and above the mere financial consideration involved, is the contention of L. L. Hiller, of Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, who are handling some of the largest open market features in this section of the country.

"The state rights picture," says Mr. Hiller, "must stand upon its own feet, so to speak. If it is a good picture, it will be a success; if not, it will fail. This in itself will encourage the production of better pictures.

"The state rights, or open market system, makes for more artistic pictures. They must be pictures with vital themes; they must be pictures that are out of the commonplace.

"What," continued Mr. Hiller, "curtails ability and originality—destroys artistic achievement? Limitation! Standardization! The motion picture industry cannot be regarded in the same light as the automobile industry. Ford, we will say, has made a splendid success by standardizing his produce. But the motion picture business is not purely a manufacturing business; the element of art enters. Destroy the art in pictures and you kill them. That is why standardization—as represented largely by the old line program system—is giving way in a measure to the open market, which operates in two ways: One, the open market picture which is open to every purchaser of territory without considering whether he takes one or more pictures; the other, a variation of the open market arrangement, in that a producing company sells a franchise for all their pictures for a definite territory for a definite period of time.

"I don't pretend to prophesy that the program is doomed—there will be several program companies several years from now. I believe the state rights features will have become so numerous by that time that exhibitors recognizing the opportunity to get better pictures by that method will adopt it largely.

"The program maker, dependent on the five-reeler, exclusively, for the feature, with arbitrary rules regarding time, type and general character of his output, limits his accomplishments. And when you try to limit art you fail. That is why many program pictures are mediocre.

"The public wants a change—it welcomes the picture that is different from the ordinary run, and that is why the open market features are being sought after by exhibitors in greater number daily; that is why eventually they will dominate the field.

"An editorial in a trade paper not long ago mentioned the cost of negatives, maintaining that some state rights buyers paid too much for their picture—that the cost was far less than the sale price. The cost of production does not matter if the picture is 'there.'

"As a case in point, take 'Where Are My Children?'

"It had an unusual theme, and contained a new idea—cost of production did not exceed $15,000.

"What happened? The state rights buyers saw the possibilities of the picture, and about a quarter of a million dollars was the total sum received from state right buyers. And all the buyers of this picture as well as the exhibitors made exceptionally large profits. This is only one of many instances.

"Where does the cost of negative enter into that calculation? A picture is worth what it will bring in dollars and cents at the box office. That's the test. It's a poor rule that does not work both ways. How many productions have been made and sold where the producers did not get back the original investment? Remember that the state right buyer, in picking the successful open market picture, is only buying the very best. He passes up the mediocre picture, so if he wants to buy the cream only he must anticipate paying the price of cream and not the price of skimmed milk.

"This is the old law of supply and demand. Working itself out in motion pictures, unhampered by program restrictions, the demand for quality pictures is greater than the supply.

"With the growth of the open market there will be better pictures; and that is what the exhibitors are asking for now. The program pictures do not supply this demand. Is it not more reasonable to allow the exhibitor to be the judge of the value of a picture for his patrons, to allow him to take the pictures he wants, run them when he wants and for as many days as the picture warrants.

"The biggest directors and producers are getting into the state right field gradually. It is only a question of time. The future of the motion picture business greatly depends on the open market.

"Everyone is beginning to realize the necessity of some sort of settlement of the present chaotic state of the industry. Well, this is the solution for the producer, distributor and exhibitor."

CHARLES BASS PURCHASES THE PHIL. G. LUBER COMPANY.

Announcement was recently made in Chicago of the purchase of the Phil. G. Luber Co., at 109 North Dearborn street, by Charles Bass, formerly vice-president of the David Stern Co. and associated with that concern for the past seven years.

A new company has been organized which will be known as the Bass Camera Co., and it will conduct the business in the future, Mr. Bass acting as president and general manager.

The Phil G. Luber Company was an old established firm of fifteen years' standing, and was known in Chicago as one of the foremost dealers in cameras. Mr. Bass states that the business will be conducted in the future on the same lines as followed by the Luber Company, except that a complete line of moving picture cameras and supplies will be installed, and facilities will be made for the developing and printing of moving picture film.

JAPANESE CUSTOMS PICTURED.

Hits Sherman, Fort Worth, Waco, Palestine, Oklahoma City and Dallas—Renews Old Memories

Sherman, Texas.

FROM Dallas to Sherman, we rocked, rolled, bumped and jolted along over the Texas Traction Company's lines, arriving in Sherman to find a whole flock of operators waiting at the station. I had been anxious to reach this little city, because here I would see the moon, or at least Moon, though it, or he, might not be full. At least he is a bright and shining light; also he is a live wire, and it was with unusual pleasure I grasped the hand of this long distance friend. Sherman certainly has proved itself to be one of the live wires—and high voltage at that. It is a comparatively small city, yet, as the photograph will show you, it did the thing up brown. The local had been preparing for our visit literally for weeks. It had sent out invitations even to towns as far away as Oklahoma, and what is more they had got results because men had journeyed all that long distance to be present, partake in the festivities and hear the lecture. Denison, Bonham, Greenville, McKinney and Whitesboro, Texas, and Hugo and Coalgate, Oklahoma, were represented.

Sherman was the home of one of the old and faithful department correspondents, Blaine Day, now of St. Paul, Minnesota. The Sherman boys asked me, both through the department and by word of mouth, when I finally reached the Northland City to convey to Brother Day their kindest regards.

While in Sherman it was my privilege to visit Brother Moon's home and take lunch with himself, "our" wife and that wonderful kidlet. Some doings, my boy, some doings. In the afternoon we attended a ball game between Oklahoma City and Sherman. Having friends in both places we were careful to root impartially. The lecture was called for 9 o'clock, and I was really astounded at the crowd which gathered in Carpenter's Hall at that hour. I didn't count, you can do that in the photograph, but while you are counting, just remember that Sherman is only a city of, as I remember it, less than twenty thousand. We had motored over to Denison in the afternoon to visit the Denison boys, and try and make certain that they would be present. Sherman was not satisfied with merely inviting them. It proposed to go over and literally yank Denison over by the scruff of its neck, if necessary, and, while some of the Denison men had intended to come, it was discovered that quite a number had not, although the two towns lay only ten miles apart.

While in Denison I met L. M. Ridout, manager of the New Star Theatre, who displayed his 560-seat, up-to-the-minute theatre, with much pride. It is a fine house, all right, and Brother Ridout's pride in it is fully justified. He proposes to increase its seating capacity to 800 by adding a balcony. The floor of the auditorium is smooth concrete, and slopes downward toward the front. A bridge of cement is raised around the orchestra pit and one side of the floor at the front is slightly higher than the other. At the low spot a drain pipe connects with the sewer. Each day a flood of water is turned on at the rear end and the whole floor washed clean. It dries in less than thirty minutes.

The operating room is of good size and is equipped with two new Power's 6-A machines and G. E. rectifier. The room is in charge of L. M. Ridout, Jr., and now I am compelled to severely criticise. Young Ridout was, so far as I know, not present at the lecture. He told me he was "too busy" to come, and I did not see him there. Next day I laid over in Denison for several hours, through failure to connect with a train, and dropped in at the Star for just a few moments at ten minutes to four. When I entered advertising slides were being projected, and almost all the time there was a bad ghost; sometimes so bad I could not read portions of the slide. This interested me sufficiently that, although I was in a hurry, I waited until the picture came on. It had a literally terrific flicker, and during the entire three minutes I watched it there was discoloration of the light at the bottom of the screen. Strikes me, Brother Ridout, that if this is a sample of your work you might better have postponed your urgent business and attended a lecture on projection. Your father has provided you with a good equipment, and you are projecting valuable photoplays in a beautiful theatre, but the result of your efforts as shown on the screen at the time of my brief visit were almost anything else than a credit to you or to your father's theater.

The Sherman gave a banquet after the lecture, and it was one of the most beautiful affairs I have seen up to date, due to the decoration of the tables with blooming potted flowers. Taken all together, the whole thing reflects great credit upon Sherman local and its members.

The operating rooms of Sherman are, for the most part, of goodly size and well ventilated, but in some of them there is too much daylight. At the King, where Brother Moon works, there is a film real chute, the first one I have seen since I left San Francisco three years ago. I also saw twenty worn aperture plates and half a dozen shutter blades on the wall, the latter being blades with which friend Moon had been experimenting. At first I thought the projection machines were Henry Fords. Closer inspection, however, proved them to be Edison Model Bs of an antiquated type—about six or seven years old I should think. Presumably they will wear out some day, and friend manager will invest in a couple of new ones.

C. W. Batsell also manages the Queen, in which there is a really excellent operating room, with a vent pipe about three feet in diameter; also there are two Simplex machines, all of which shows that Batsall knows how to do things right when he wants to. With this little verbal spanking, I would say to the manager of the King: Go thou and sin no more. Adding, however, that any supply house can remedy the little deficiency named in return for a check, every cent of which you will get back in your box office in due course of time, in the form of added revenue brought to the house by the improved results on the screen. In most of the Sherman houses the picture is considerably larger than it ought to be. I would strongly advise that all those pictures be reduced to fourteen feet, and that the black be brought right in to meet the edge of the picture. At the Topic, Le Grand Woods, manager; O. J. Parker, operator, the picture is of correct size, and is set in a black shadow box, but both the shadow box and screen are almost anything else than clean. I took a broom and by its vigorous use succeeded in making a black spot in the gray of the dust on the bottom of the shadow box. I would suggest that Manager Le Grand hang a placard around the janitor's neck reading: "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." The Topic had two 6-A Power's machines which were in apple-pie order. They ran like a sewing machine.

In nearly all Sherman houses the auditorium lighting could be greatly improved by the application of scientific principles thereto. There were a great many island clocks—clocks entirely surrounded by light. Paint those clock faces black, with white hands and white figures, gentlemen, and for the love of the Pink-Toed Prophet, confine the light absolutely to the dial of the clock.

I shall long remember my visit to Sherman. The Sherman men have, by their energetic actions, proved themselves to be near the head of the progressive class. Others have had just as elaborate affairs, or even more elaborate; others have had larger gatherings, but they were larger cities. Taking size into consideration, Sherman is in a class all to itself.

Incidentally, I don't believe some of the dust we raised going to and from Denison has come down yet.

Fort Worth, Texas.

Leaving Sherman I pulled a first class flivver. In order to save time, I took the 9:27 Interurban to Sherman, expecting to connect with the 10:02 M., K. & T. for Fort Worth, with oodles of time to spare. But the interurban failed to interurb promptly, and I got my ticket just in time to witness the passage of the rear sleeper of my train past the gate. Right there I was "stuck" for six mortal hours. I had figured on a day of rest in Fort Worth, and had been looking forward to it with extreme interest, but the day of rest, as usual, exploded with a loud bang.

I had expected to get into Fort Worth at noon and clear up a good part of the accumulated correspondence between noon and midnight, and then I did not propose to get up next day until I got good and darned ready. Instead of that I climbed off the roost at 7 A. M., dictated until noon, went out to Brother Smith's and enjoyed one of those home-cooked meals like mother used to make, went around and viewed some of the theatres, and all I got out of it was a couple of hours' sleep in the evenings.

Projectional affairs in Fort Worth are just about average, as such things go. I did, however, observe ample evidence of the fact that at least some Fort Worth operators need to be severely disciplined by their organization for failure to attend properly to their work. Operating rooms, as usual, contain altogether too much light, though the walls of most of those I visited were black, and that part of it is excellent. Most of the operating rooms I saw are poorly located, and one of them—Phillips' Egypt—is very, very bad indeed, in that it combines a tremendously steep angle with a comparatively short throw. I only examined one optical system, and that only in so far as the arc and condenser are concerned. I found the condition in this instance to be very bad indeed.

The arc was about 3⅞ inches from the condenser and the lamphouse was altogether too close to the machine. I would recommend to the good brothers who are responsible for this condition, which is not only operating to waste a large percentage of their light, but is also giving them a comparatively poorly balanced shutter, and is in all human probability injuring the definition of the picture on the screen, that they apply the chart recently published in this department. Such operating rooms as I saw were not ventilated, in the proper sense of the term. The air was in all cases taken in from the auditorium—the second-hand air the audience had no further use for.

At the Strand theater there were two clocks, both plastered with pink light, one at either top corner of the screen. The picture was of correct size, and had a very narrow black border—better than nothing. The picture light was good and was evenly distributed. The lighting of the balcony was, however, literally atrocious. I called the manager's attention to this condition, and suggested to him a very simple means of remedying it. At the Hippodrome the auditorium lighting was excellent, the only feature subject to criticism being the clock—the inevitable, onmipresent, picture-murdering clock. In this case, however, it was not so bad because it was not very brilliantly illuminated; also it was considerable distance from the screen. The screen sat well back on the stage and was surrounded, top, bottom and sides, with from 12 to 15 feet of black, the stage floor being painted that color. The picture, however, was hazy. Now this might have been to a poor lens, a cheap lens or the film itself, but I think most likely the fault lies in the screen. The picture light was dim, but was well handled.

At 11:30 something like fifty managers, operators and others connected with the industry, gathered in a hall and listened to your humble servant until 2 A. M., after which a lunch was served. I landed on the Fort Worth boys perhaps a little bit stronger than I usually do, because it seemed to me there was need for considerable shaking up in that city.

Of course, if the shoe did not fit there was no need to wear it.

W. S. Tumpaugh, an old department correspondent, wrote asking if I could visit Abilene, Texas, where he is now located. I told him it would be impossible, and suggested Fort Worth and hear me there. On what amounted to practically an invitation from me, he journeyed to that city, a trip of 320 miles, there and back. After his arrival I found he had had a scrap with the Fort Worth local and that body, notwithstanding my personal request that, under the unfortunate circumstances, he be allowed to hear the lecture, refused point blank, and he was excluded. I could cheerfully pass over the lack of courtesy to myself, but feel called upon to comment on the spirit of intolerance shown. I don't care what Tumpaugh may have done, his presence would not harm you and you owed something to the demands of ordinary courtesy. The incident did not reflect any credit on the Fort Worth men. Had I asked Tumpaugh, knowing of the trouble, it would have been very different.

Waco, Texas.

Waco, Texas, is a comparatively small city. I am told that 49,000 people partake of their daily bread within its corporate limits—not counting stray mavericks like myself. Away back months ago, as soon as the Waco operators union learned that I was going to be headed in their direction, they wrote asking me to include Waco in the itinerary, which was, of course, promptly done, and in due time, after journeying southward on the I. & G. N. for miles I disembarked, to find the committee of welcome wig-wagging glad-hand signals from the platform.

Waco has six theatres, one of which, the Queen, was temporarily closed at the time of my visit. The Hippodrome, managed by J. P. Everett, is a large, strictly up-to-date house, belonging to a string of nine theaters owned by a corporation, of which E. H. Hulsey is general manager; also he is principal owner. Jesse Oaks and J. L. McElvea are the operators. Friend Everett impressed me as a wideawake manager, willing to listen to and act upon any suggestions which seemed to have value. The lighting of the auditorium is, as I pointed out, susceptible of considerable improvement, though it is not what you could call at all bad as it is. The operating room is of solid concrete, about 40 feet long by probably 8 feet deep, with a 7-foot ceiling. It has ample ventilation. Projection machinery consists of two Power's machines taking current through a G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier located in one end of the operating room, which is partitioned off for the purpose.

The Crystal theater has about as bad a lighting proposition in the rear half of the auditorium as I have seen anywhere. It is a long, very narrow house, and about midway the operating room drops down out of the ceiling by about four feet. The audience in the back half of the auditorium must, of course, look underneath the operating room at the picture. Now the logical thing to do would be to drape the back side of that operating room with some very, very dark colored cloth, or else paint it as nearly black as is possible without spoiling the looks of the auditorium, and then carefully shading all the light away from it. Instead of that, friend manager has installed a great big, fairly well illuminated clock on the back wall of that operating room, also two unshaded ceiling lights—that is to say, unshaded so far as the operating wall is concerned.

The condition from the projection point of view is simply awful; also it is nonsensical. A little judicious shading of the two ceiling lights would keep the light off the operating room wall, and the painting of the clock and its dial black, with white hands and figures, would remove this source of tremendous annoyance to the eyes of patrons seated in the rear of the auditorium.

The Rev. William Sonneman, manager; George C. Oaks and B. H. Hall, operators, is putting on a good picture. The projection light was well handled. The auditorium lighting is good. The operating room has black walls, and is equipped with Power's projectors. It has good ventilation. Current is taken through a G. E. rectifier, which is inside the operating room—and that is not good. What's the use of painting the walls of the room black if you are going to have a lot of light in it?

At 11:30 P. M. I found the stage of the Hippodrome Theater set for an unusual act, which scene will be seen in the accompanying photograph. To my astonishment, Waco, although a small city, mustered more than fifty persons who remained until 2 A. M. listening interestedly while I preached the gospel of improved projection, after which good things, both solid and liquid, were partaken of until every one was filled to repletion. Waco local covered itself with glory; also it demonstrated the fact that both individually and collectively the organization is a live wire. The writer will have pleasant memories of his visit to this thrilling metropolis of the Lone Star State.

Palestine, Texas.

The little city of Palestine brought home to the writer the fact that he can no longer be classed a spring rooster, because when he came to figure up, and examine the records, he discovered it was twenty-seven years since he shook the red dust of Palestine from his shoes, at which time he had already interviewed Santa Claus twenty-three times. We were met by an old-time friend, B. R. Walker, who was a very respectable black-haired citizen when we said good-bye twenty-seven years ago. The passing years, however, have changed the black to white, and in addition to this the villain has actually become fat. Also awaiting our coming was B. C. Bell, manager Gem Theater, and his son, Frank M. Bell, assistant manager, who also supervises projection at the Gem, though he does no actual operating. Friend Bell, his son and charming wife formed a trio which combines brains, energy and hustle, the net results being shown on the screen of the Gem Theater.

There are three theaters in Palestine, all of them very pretty houses; also, everything considered, screen results in all of them are very good. The Queen, E. L. Turner, manager; O. B. Bridges, operator, is, however, running with only one machine, and that machine is in a little sawed-off "coop" hardly six feet square; also I doubt if it has a six-foot ceiling. It isn't up to me, of course, to tell friend Turner his business, but I would, nevertheless, respectfully suggest that there is an eternal fitness in things, and that running a photoplay the physical value of the films of which is several hundreds of dollars and the cost of production of which may figure in the tens of thousands of dollars under such conditions as that doesn't "fit in right." The result on the screen of the Queen isn't the best in the world. There were discolorations in the light while I was present. I believe the screen result is all the manager has any right to expect with the operator working in a little cramped up cubby-hole. It would be quite within the range of possibilities to enlarge that operating room between the hours of 11 P. M. and 10 A. M., so that the show would not be in the least degree interfered with, and you, Brother Turner, owe it to the photoplays you are handling to do that identical same thing.

Now the Best Theater, Tim O'Connor, manager; J. W. Lindsay and Roy Saxon, operators, has a fair sized operating room, with good ventilation. The ports, however, are a little too narrow, and there is altogether to much light in the room. Friend Linsday impresses one as a man of brains and ability. He is using two Power's 6-A Machines and getting a good screen result. The Gem, B. C. Bell, manager; Frank Bell, assistant manager; E. Britton, operator, is a commodious house, having a balcony devoted to gemmen and ladies of chocolate complexion. Mr. Bell studies the details of his business, and his son, Frank, is a man who closely studies the technical end of projection. Friend Bell, while absent from the city, fell into arrears with his dues and was dropped from the rolls of the union, which now refuses to take him back into membership. I am very sorry that this is the case, because Frank Bell is a man of brains, and that is the kind of men the I. A. or any other organization needs.

The operating room walls of the Gem are black, the room has good ventilation and the ports are of ample size. Britton is pulling 60 A. C. through a Fort Wayne Compensarc, and getting a corking good result on the screen. The picture is equal to many I have seen projected with 40 D. C.; in fact, it is much better than some I have seen. The screen is an old type Mirrorvita; one of the first Friend Genter put out. Nothing has ever been done to it except brush it off, Bell tells me, and although the seams show badly, the surfact is still brilliant. Now for heaven's sake, don't get mad and bite me, Brother Genter.

At 11:30 the managerial and operating force of Palestine gathered in the Gem, plus H. H. Epps, operator, Star Theatre, Minneola, Texas., who had come down for the lecture. They did the best they could, but after all the "crowd" looked like a very small drop of water in a tolerably large puddle when they got seated in the Gem. After the lecture there was a very nice dinner served in one of the restaurants, after which the "essembled multitude" departed homeward, expressing the conviction that it had been an evening well spent.

All next day I wondered around over Palestine like a lost sheep, rattling the skeleton of a dead past, and digging up its individual bones to see what they looked like. Take it from me, gentlemen, that particular occupation isn't the most pleasant one in the world, but there is a fascination which practically compels one to do it just the same.

But I enjoyed my visit with Bent and Mary Walker to the limit. They are of God's noblemen and women—the kind who stick through fair weather and foul, as I have good reason to know through experiences of the past.

Oklahoma City.

Did you ever accept an invitation to a joy ride extended by a chap who owned a flivver and have him show up with a Hudson Super-Six? Well, that's the sort of surprise Oklahoma City sprung on this unsuspecting person. The operators and managers had been at war for almost a year, and I had expected little; also I was fully prepared to accept even less than that under such circumstances. Oklahoma City was, I had been told, quite some considerable place, but the mere assertion lacked something of being proof of the fact.

Judge, then, of my surprise at finding a wideawake looking flock of operators (on strike several months) who might, so far as appearances go, have been almost anything from locomotive engineers to bankers, and to have them conduct me to a right-up-to-the-minute hotel (the hotels for the past thousand miles have varied between punk to punker and punkest) show in a film exchange (Universal) which for size of plant and activities would do credit to New York City, and a city over which I'm raving yet.

L. L. Hensley, manager Universal Exchange, did the honors with his choo-choo cart (some cart, too, by the way) and showed us the city. Oklahoma City looks like a whole sub-treasury full of real money. It's the real, sure enough goods, and then to tote it all off it was demonstrated to me that the managers and operators (Local Union 380), while at war, are, paradoxical as it seems, on very friendly terms, and although Local 380 handled the lecture, the aforesaid managers, or at least some of them, attended. The Strand and Folly theaters are "fair." It is now hoped and believed that the trouble will be settled very soon and the men be back at their nests of duty.

I visited the Strand, Empress and another house, the name of which I have forgotten. There are brilliantly lighted, white-faced clocks near the screen in them all; also there are the utterly useless and highly objectionable side lights in all but the Empress. Aside from the clock, an illuminated jeweler's sign is under it and two bright exit lights are near the screen. The Empress lighting was excellent. The lamps under the balcony were in pyramid-shaped metal receptacles, the lower face of which is covered with light which difuses the rays. Oklahoma City managers have need to improve their auditorium lighting.

The operating rooms were all good, or at least fairly good, with observation ports about 14x24 inches in size, but operating room ventilation was not properly taken care of (ample of its kind, but not the right kind), and there was a flood of light in all the rooms. Equipment in the Empress was high class—two new Baird machines—but the walls of the room are altogether too light. In one house there was a queer combination, viz.: two Power's 6 mechanisms, a Motiograph lamphouse and lamp and one old model Edison lamphouse and lamp. The machine tables were two 2x10-inch planks, supported by the wall at the front end and by an upright plank at the other. Screen results in this house were not very good. How could they be, particularly in view of the further fact that the auditorium lighting is literally atrocious—side lights, brightly lighted clock and exit signs near screen?

At 11:30 P. M. what was, under the circumstances, a large audience, gathered at the Folly, and after this lecture Local Union 380 served "ice water" and a Dutch lunch on the stage. Oklahoma is "dry" and I looked into my glass in astonishment. Oklahoma ice has a most peculiar and really astonishing effect on water. I think Oklahomans are overlooking a bet in not trying to sell that ice by the ton in Kansas. It would go big! North and South Carolina also would buy by the train load.

The Oklahoma men are a credit to the town and to their profession. I sincerely trust the trouble will now soon be settled, and that all will again be peaceful in the City of Bungalows.

Dallas, Texas.

Dallas is one of the wonder cities of the South. Through a desire to accommodate Sherman I changed the itinerary, and in the mix-up Dallas got chopped off with one night. After traveling almost 250 miles, consuming eleven and one-half hours, from Oklahoma City, I arrived at 8:30, to be met by Brothers G. L. Luther, James Crosby and J. E. Webb, who kindly consented to concede one hour for our weary bones to rest, and then proceeded to show us Dallas by the gasoline route and moonlight—with the moonlight absent. It is thirteen years since I last visited Dallas. During that time I found it had outgrown its knee pants and blossomed forth into a Prince Albert suit of checked cloth, the check indicating progressiveness, hustle and up-to-the-minuteness, and the Prince Albert that dignity which ought to be part and parcel of a modern city of umpty-ump thousands. The Dallas of old I could not recognize at all.

There was, of course, no time to inspect theaters. The lecture was to be at the T. M. A. Club rooms, and there we found assembled a really representative gathering of, so they told me, 150 operators, managers, exchange men and musicians; also there were assembled about fifty men and women having no other business than to enjoy the dance floor and liquid hospitality of the club, it being the main assemblage room of the institution. These people cared less than nothing for the lectures, and continued to talk and laugh, so that when we were just well started we were obliged to decline to attempt to continue under such impossible conditions. In fact it was impossible for any but a few to hear what I was saying, and many left in disgust. It was then proposed that we partake of the lunch which was provided, and then adjourn to the Rex theater, which was done, but many had become discouraged (it was then 1:30) and left, so that but a comparative handful of the large meeting remained. It was unfortunate. I regret it, especially in view of the fact seen that a lot of T. M. A. men and their women would be so lacking in ordinary courtesy that they would deliberately break up a large and important meeting by their conduct.

The lighting arrangements of the Rex were not at all suitable to such an affair, and I worked under extreme difficulties, but, nevertheless, the audience sat patiently until 3 A. M. and expressed themselves as being well satisfied.

I wish to apologize to Dallas for the short stop I made. It was not an intentional slight to that beautiful city. It was unfortunate. I regret it, especially in view of he fact that I was unable to visit a single one of her theaters, some of which I am told are beauties, with very fine projection plants. Next morning Brother Luther, although he could not have got to bed much before daylight, was on hand to see us off to Sherman, and expressed his determination to, if possible, journey to Fort Worth, where he could hear the lecture under better conditions. We will see whether he pulls off that particular stunt or not.

While in Dallas I met Hoyt G. Morrow, who is with "Artcraft." Friend Morrow is one of the old time Chicago operators who was shooting pictures at Chicago screens at the same time I was. He held Chicago operators' license No. 56, in the year of 1908, and was afterward salesman for the Standard Film Service while Joe Hopp was its manager. Also another interested one of my audience was Sidney B. Blakely, member of Chicago Local Union No. 110, who is sporting some very classy scenery (some clothes, my boy, some clothes) and occupying something like twenty hours each day bossing the Motiograph game. Brother Blakely wears intermittent sprockets for ear bobs and carries a Motiograph magazine in each hand.

RICHARDSON.

CHANGES AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

A number of changes in directorships and acting have been made at the Universal City studios, with a view to meeting the increasing demands for finished product at the Pacific Coast studios.

The Universal Joker Company has been divided so as to make an additional comedy company. Gale Henry will work under the direction of Allen Curtis, with Jack Dill playing opposite. Her former co-worker, William Franey, remains the featured player of the Joker company, with Milburn Moranti, and Za Su Pitts as the leading woman. Franey will be directed by W. W. Beaudine.

Ruth Stonehouse will be featured in five-reel productions under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet, who has been producing Nestor comedies in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Edith Roberts have been featured. The Nestor comedians will work under the direction of Roy Clements.

Elmer Clinton has assumed the direction of Jack Mulhall and the feature company in which he is starred.

Big Theater for Newark

Frank G. Hall Buys Church Property Upon Which 3,000-Seat House Will Be Built—Construction to Begin Immediately.

NEGOTIATIONS were closed recently by Frank G. Hall for the purchase of the Third Presbyterian Church at Nos. 905, 907, 909 and 911 Broad street, Newark, New Jersey, where he will erect one of the largest theaters devoted to the showing of motion pictures in the world.

Frank G. Hall, of Newark, one of the most prominent men in the theatrical and motion picture business, is president and general manager of the Rialto Theater Realty Company, building the new theater, and is also president and general manager of the Rialto Theater Company, which will operate the big playhouse under his personal supervision.

Mr. Hall, who is at the head of seventeen corporations handling theatrical and motion picture enterprises, among which are the Strand Theater, of Newark, and the Civilization Film Corporation, is recognized as one of the most active figures in the motion picture business. He recently created a sensation in theatrical circles by buying outright the latest Edgar Lewis Feature production, "The Bar Sinister," which, after a trade showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, was hailed by critics and picture experts as one of the season's greatest pictures.

"The Bar Sinister" was filmed from an original story by Anthony P. Kelly, and deals with the race question in a manner so original and sensational that it promises to be one of the most popular offerings of the year.

The announcement that Frank G. Hall had bought the negative outright before his competitors had decided upon the size of their bids was in line with his former activities, and the further announcement of the immediate starting of building operations upon his new theater, following so closely upon the heels of "The Bar Sinister" deal, gives promise of interesting news to follow.

The Rialto, as the new auditorium will be called, is planned upon an laborate scale. With a seating capacity of more than three thousand and a monster stage with numerous large dressing rooms adjoining it, the Rialto will be a fit place for the presentation of the special feature productions for which it is being built. Space for an orchestra of immense proportions promises music of unusual excellence, while lighting and stage effects are being planned which will make possible the presenting of big pictures on a scale never attempted before, including, as it does, the staging of elaborate prologues to the screen dramas, in keeping with the subjects treated and especially written and rehearsed to surround the audience with the atmosphere of the picture before it appears upon the screen.

Associated with Mr. Hall in his latest enterprise are some of the most prominent men of Newark, many of whom are interested in his other ventures, all of which are proving successful. Among Mr. Hall's other activities are the United States Theatres Company, The U. S. Amusement Company and Frank G. Hall Productions, Inc. The last named corporation will handle the presentation of "The Bar Sinister," offices having been arranged for in the Longacre Building, New York.

Work upon the new theatre will begin immediately.

PARALTA PRODUCTION PROGRESSING.

Robert T. Kane, vice president of the Paralta Plays corporation, who has taken up his residence in Los Angeles to supervise the work of the production end of this enterprise, has informed Carl Anderson, president of the corporation, that work is going forward very rapidly on two productions, and that both studios controlled by the company will be in full operation in the course of the next three weeks. Mr. Kane is now surrounded by a large staff of expert talent. The full roster of dramatic and technical directors and cameramen and assistants will be made public early in May.

WILLIAMS CAMERAMAN FOR ARBUCKLE.

Frank Williams, one of the first of the Keystone cameramen, is now with Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle, at the studios of the Comique Film Corporation, 318 East 48th street, making the comedy two-reelers in which the big funmaker will appear on the Paramount program. It was Williams who photographed Charlie Chaplin's earliest pictures. "The Butcher Boy," first of the comedies to be made by Mr. Arbuckle since he formed his own company, is also his work.

Twenty-One Years in the Business

William N. Selig's Remarkable Career Marked by a Grim Struggle in the Early Years—He Has Been Always a Leader.

HOW glibly some people talk today about moving pictures, and refer to them as being in their "infancy," "swaddling clothes," etc.! These people have little knowledge of the practical beginning of things in the industry; either that, or they fail to exercise the mental operation of reflection.

To the old timers in the business—the men who started with little or none of the world's possessions, and with almost a complete lack of everything in the line of equipment that would aid them in their work — the road traveled has been a long, weary, uphill way. These old timers had to make their own tools, and clumsy makeshifts they were at first, many of them. They built their own cameras, their developing apparatus, and nearly everything that was required in the production of a moving picture, and all this required ingenuity and patience of no mean order.

William N. Selig.

William N. Selig, one of these old timers, who passed the twenty-first milestone of his years in the business on April 9 last, can vouch for the truth of the foregoing statements. Some day he expects to have his experiences during that interesting period of 21 years appear in book form, and I hope he will do it, as such a work would be treasured in the scanty library as yet devoted to the moving picture. In the meantime the following condensed sketch of his career in the business may serve to show that success as a moving picture producer from the early days until the present, depends not on hard work alone, but largely on a peculiar natural aptitude and on sound business ability and foresight.

For some time before the old studio and plant and offices were established at 20 Peck Court in 1896, Mr. Selig had been greatly interested in moving pictures. Before that time travelogues, taken on the engine of a moving train, had been used as the closing number of high class vaudeville programs throughout the country, an unusual honor; for, as the writer knows by experience, the last number was always considered in those days the most attractive on the bill, so that it might hold the audience and send them away pleased and with something to talk about.

Always possessed of an inquiring mind, Mr. Selig was seized with a burning desire to know more about the "new wonder" which exercised such magic influence on the great masses of people who sought amusement. As the days passed he became convinced that the moving picture, as it appeared then, was only the harbinger of its future possibilities, and he finally decided to cast his lot with what the future might have in store for it.

He had a natural liking for mechanics, and was handy with tools; and, besides, he had dabbled a little in photography and also in chemistry. These acquirements, crude as they were, greatly assisted him when he established his first plant at 20 Peck Court, a small thoroughfare which ran west to State street from Wabash avenue, and now known as Eighth street. The studio was built on the roof of the two-story building, and its floor dimensions were 20 by 45 feet. The other space in the building was devoted to the printing, developing, drying and other departments, and to an office.

He started wth one man as his entire assisting force. Just who he was, I forget; but the reader may be assured that, like his employer, he had to be a Jack of all trades.

In 1895 Mr. Selig had mastered in a rough way the building of cameras, the work being done at home late into the night. Later, when he went into the business for good, he built has own developing apparatus and other appliances that were necessary. This had to be done by himself or not at all, as he had no means to employ skilled labor. At the start he was so hard pressed for means that he walked to and from Peck Court to his home on the North Side every day, a distance of five miles, to save the carfare for his business.

At first he secured orders for his pictures, and took them during the day. At night the developing and other work was done. These pictures were chiefly of the slapstick comedy type taken out of doors, and not exceeding 50 feet, or thereabouts, in length. Soon he added what we now call industrial pictures to his output.

The first big order of this kind was placed by Armour & Co., of the great Chicago Stockyards. A leading official of the company had previously made a special trip to New York to place the order with moving picture makers there, but he was told that it was impossible to take such pictures without artificial light, and that that was impossible.

On his return to Chicago this official called Mr. Selig to his aid, and the wizard of magic stoutly maintained that the "impossible" could be done. Not having time to fashion special lights for the purpose, Mr. Selig borrowed several stage spotlights from the Richard Mansfield Company, which was then playing at the Grand Opera House. With the aid of these lights 50,000 feet of negative were taken, showing the entire process followed at the Stockyards, from the time the cattle were brought in from the inclosure to the killing room until the meat was sealed in cans. This length was cut down to 12,000 feet, and the Armour Company afterward pronounced them the greatest advertisement they ever had. Mr. Armour long afterwards took pleasure in referring to these films when he had occasion to call up the Selig office.

These pictures were made in April and May, 1901, just 16 years ago, and Mr. Selig claims that he was the first to take moving pictures by artificial light.

Mr. Selig asserts that his "really first" picture was not made until the spring of 1904. That was "Humpty Dumpty," a comedy in 700 feet, which became very popular. "Tracked by Bloodhounds or the Lynching at Cripple Creek" and "The Holdup of the Leadville Stage"—the former made in the Summer and the latter in the Fall of the same year, were his first two Western pictures. Each was 700 feet in length, and caught the popular fancy. "The Serenade" (500 feet) and "The Gay Deceiver" (775 feet), made the same year, were big comedy hits.

The first Selig release of 1,000 feet length was "The Female Highwayman," made in the fall of 1906, and the second was "The Girl from Montana," made in March, 1907. Probably the first 2,000 feet subject made in America was Selig's "Damon and Pythias," released in June 1908, and without any doubt "The Coming of Columbus," made in the fall of 1911 and released in May 1912, was the first three reeler filmed in America, if not in the world. "The Two Orphans" and "Cinderella," each 3,000 feet, followed closely.

Mr. Selig also led in the making of animal pictures, the first of which, "Hunting Big Game in Africa," was made in the Chicago studio, and released in May, 1909. He also won the distinction of originating the moving picture serial, which has been so widely followed since. "The Adventures of Kathlyn," in 27,000 feet and 13 episodes, went round the world. The first episode in three reels was released Dec. 28, 1913.

Wm. N. Selig has never lost an opportunity to carry the moving picture to its limits, as has been shown. His crowning efforts in this respect are to be found in the list of great super-pictures produced by him, beginning with "The Spoilers," and followed in succession by "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Crisis" and "The Garden of Allah." No other producer in America can point to such a roll of honor.

The old Peck Court plant, in which so many grilling battles were fought with adversity, was forsaken in September, 1907, when the new plant on Irving Park Boulevard and Western avenue was completed. An additional studio was added to this structure in the summer of 1909.

The Chicago Selig plant had a world wide reputation, as it was the first great structure of the kind erected in America, and, at the time, was cited everywhere as an illustration of the future stability of the moving picture business. Wm. N. Selig was the first manufacturer in America to show his belief in that stability by a large investment of hard earned money, and his example exercised a beneficial influence on the business generally.

The building of the Edendale plant, in Los Angeles, was started in Feb., 1908, and completed in 1910. Then followed the construction of the Selig Zoo in Los Angeles, which was begun in 1911. This great, picturesque structure, and the inclusive collection of wild animals and birds to be found in it form, perhaps, one of the most expensive hobbies that any man has ever indulged in. It is a hobby, however, that means valuable instruction and a great delight to hundreds of thousands of people throughout the year, besides affording much ejoyment to the founder, who has always been a lover of wild animals and birds.

The Illinois Censorship Bill.

The following letter was received Friday morning, April 27, by Sidney Smith, secretary of the Illinois State League, from W. W. Watts, state secretary:

"The censorship bill was reported out of the committee on April 20, and since has been up for first reading, and was placed on the calendar today (Thursday, April 26) for second reading; but, however, it was not reached.

"I had a talk with Mr. Guy Guernsey this afternoon, and again this evening, and he says that he has enough votes to pass it, and does not care to retard it. I asked him if it would come up to-morrow, and he said it was likely, but could not say for sure, for he did not know if the other bills coming up would delay it, or how long. But if it did come up he said he was going to push it through.

"There is no way for me to tell just when they will reach this bill, for Mr. Guernsey says there is no good reason why he should delay it longer, and as it is on the calendar he is going to push it along as soon as they reach it, and he thinks it will be tomorrow (Friday), but he is not sure."

It seems to me that Illinois exhibitors have not been watching this bill closely enough. Nobody in Chicago knew what was going on, although we have a special committee of the Chicago Local appointed to look after the bill.

It almost seems as if the bill had been permitted to take its own course.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Max Linder, famous photoplay comedian, is seriously ill at Los Angeles, and at the time of writing it looks as if his fourth comedy will be held up away beyond its regular release date. From what I can learn Mr. Linder's illness is an aftermath of the hardship and exposure experienced in the trenches on the French front. The many thousands of his admirers in the United States will heartily wish him a renewal of his good health and hope to see him again on the screen in the near future.

Moving picture programs are offered regularly in the Auditorium, but are only shown in the Oliver when it is not occupied by dramatic road attractions. Mr. Hines informed me that he charges 5 and 10 cents admission at all times, no matter how expensive the program. He reported excellent business.

E. H. Wolfberg, now exploiting "The Crisis" in Pennsylvania and other states, has designed a timely one-sheet poster in red, white and blue. The descriptive lines read as follows: "If you think you can't enlist, see 'The Crisis.' Our fathers faced it squarely!" This makes a strong appeal to patriotism and to a revival of the patriotic spirit so abundantly revealed in "The Crisis." Wm. N. Selig thinks so highly of this poster that he has given it prominent display in his Chicago offices.

It is expected that "The Garden of Allah" will be given its premiere in a Chicago "Loop" theater in the near future. A fine orchestration was recently completed to accompany the presentation. At Leading Picture Theaters

Program for the Week of April 29 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Happiness" at the Rialto.

ENID BENNETT, in "Happiness," was the principal attraction at the Rialto the week of April 29. The story is of a particularly wholesome type, played in humorous vein, with just tears enough in it for proper contrast. Miss Bennett is one of the newest Triangle stars, and her portrayal of the leading role in this picture entirely justifies her stardom. She is seen as a naturally lovable girl whose enormous fortune is a serious handicap in her search for happiness. "His Naughty Thought," a new Keystone Comedy, and interesting views of East Indian palaces and other beauty spots, shown in color, complete the picture program. The Rialto Chorus and E. Balfour furnished the vocal numbers.

"The Girl at Home" at the Strand.

A triple photo-dramatic feature bill was presented at the Strand Theater. Vivian Martin and Jack Pickford were seen in "The Girl at Home," by Beulah Marie Dix from George Middleton's clever story of college life. There is in this picture a powerful lesson for every youth who contemplates leaving his home for boarding school or college—it shows how easy it is for the unwary to fall into temptation. In the supporting cast are Olga Grey, Edythe Chapman, James Neill and Billy Elmer. The third of the series of the O. Henry stories to be seen on the screen is "Past One at Rooney's," the love story of Cork McManus and the girl of the underworld. In the cast are Mildred Manning, Gordon Gray, Frank Norcross, M. Martin, J. Stanley and Wally Clark. Victor Moore appeared on the screen in a new Klever Pictures comedy, entitled "Invited Out." The soloists were Rosa Lind, Tom Colignan and Micha Makoroff.

"Within the Law" at the Broadway.

A screen version of the celebrated melodrama, "Within the Law," produced by the Vitagraph Company, with Harry T. Morey and Alice Joyce at the head of the cast, opened an engagement at the Broadway Theater Sunday, April 29.

Eighty-first Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dorothy Gish, in "Her Official Fathers," and Lillian Byron, in "Skirt Tragedy," were on the program. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Louise Glaum, in "Sweetheart of the Doomed," and a Keystone comedy, "Her Nature Dance," were the picture features.

C. Gardner Sullivan Writes Comedy Success

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN, chief of the Triangle-Ince scenario staff, who wrote "Plain Jane," "The Wolf Woman," "Home," "Hell's Hinges" and other screen successes, has recorded another hit with "Happiness." in which Enid Bennett stars. Like "Plain Jane," it is a story of the college campus, but surpasses that play in the abundance of humor and character development.

C. Gardner Sullivan.

Sullivan is a man of wide newspaper experience, having served on leading dailies throughout the country. He was born in Stillwater, Minn., and was educated at the University of Minnesota. Graduating from that institution in 1907, he became a reporter on the St. Paul Daily News. Subsequently he worked on newspapers in Minneapolis, Duluth, Des Moines, Sioux City, Omaha, Kansas City, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington, New Orleans and New York.

Later he became a free lance photoplay writer, and sold sixty stories to Thomas H. Ince before taking a position on the regular staff. Mr. Sullivan has demonstrated that an author may display individuality of style in screen writings. After seeing "Plain Jane," "Home" and "A Corner in Colleens" the spectator cannot fail to recognize the special Sullivan craftmanship in "Happiness."

SPEDON STARTS TOUR.

Sam Spedon, representative of the Moving Picture World, has started for the convention of Northwestern Exhibitors at Minneapolis, May 1, 2 and 3. Sam, as everybody knows him, has attended about all the conventions and expositions of the past decade, is keen for Minneapolis, where he expects to renew many old acquaintances and hopes to make new ones. He will be located at the West Hotel. On his return trip he will stop at Chicago for a few days to mingle with some of the reel and film fellows of his old stamping ground. His trip may take him into Ohio if his dates can be so arranged.

MR. AND MRS. FISH IN PICTURES.

The New York Zoological Society on Monday, April 30, gave an exhibition in the Aquarium, Battery Park, New York, which aroused much favorable comment by those who attended. The occasion was the annual reception and business meeting of the organization and as the entertainment the officers of the society exhibited the Universal Screen Magazine's motion picture studies of the Aquarium fish. These pictures are the more to be appreciated when it is realized that the Universal Screen Magazine's cameraman, U. K. Whipple, was the first photographer who ever was successful in making such pictures

Pre-View of "Who Knows?"

Isadore Bernstein Gives Advance Exhibition of His First Large Feature Production to Representatives of the Newspapers and Trade Press.

ON WEDNESDAY afternoon, April 18, a special exhibition was given the newspapers of Los Angeles and the representatives of the trade papers of Isadore Bernstein's first production, "Who Knows?" at the company's studios on Boyle and Stevenson avenues. "Who Knows" is an adaptation from the story by the same name which appeared in the All Story Magazine as a serial during the months of June and July, last year, and which later appeared in book form. The story was written by James and Ethel Dorrance and made into a film drama by Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morse, of the scenario staff of the Bernstein studios. The production is in seven reels and was directed by Jack Pratt, well remembered from his work with the Lubin Company and now principal director of the Bernstein Film Productions. The star of the production is Betty Brice, former Lubin star, and the feature player of the Bernstein studios. The leading man is Jay Morley, lately of Universal. Others in the cast are Charles Arling, formerly with Pathe, Keystone and Fox, and two little girls, Dorothy Clarke and Ednamae Wilson.

Betty Brice plays the part of Jerry, the rather wilful and picturesque heroine, in a charming and capable manner. Charles Arling is well cast for the old ranchman and Jay Morley is a good looking, pleasant chap well suited for his part. The frolicking, irrepressible twins are highly amusing. They romp through the picture like two frisky colts. Director Pratt has chosen some wonderful scenery for his locations. The out of door scenes were taken at General Otis' ranch, Milleflores, one of the loveliest spots in southern California. The General was kind enough to loan Mr. Bernstein not only his land, but his picturesque log house, his barns, stock and even a flock of five hundred goats, for the making of the picture. As a result there is a very charming background for many of the scenes of this production. There is also a very elaborate ball room set with at least a couple of hundred people dancing on the floor.

Frank Voss, Comedian, Dead.

Frank Voss, popular L-Ko comedian and known as Fatty Voss to thousands of picture fans, died of heart failure here early Sunday morning, April 22, at the Golden Apartments.

The comedian had suffered only a slight cold, and Saturday expressed himself as fully recovered.

Voss was twenty-eight years of age, and for several years had been engaged in theatrical and motion picture work. He was popular with the picture folk and had a wide acquaintance outside of his profession and was well known to crowds at the baseball games and prize fights. He rarely missed a game or a boxing contest.

He came to Los Angeles two years and a half ago from his native city of Chicago, where his father, Frank Voss, Sr., served as alderman. He was married last December to a Chicago girl. He will be buried in Chicago. Mrs. Voss will leave here Tuesday of this week with the body.

Christie Film Company Makes Statement.

We have received the following communication from the Christie Film Company:

"Through an unfortunate misunderstanding, a report has become current throughout the industry that Albert E. Christie is directing comedies with Billie Rhodes for the Mutual program. This error arose from the fact that a part of the enlarged Christie plant has been leased to the Caulfield Photoplay Company, producing Strand comedies under the direction of Scott Sidney. In justice to his exchangemen, exhibitors and patrons, Mr. Christie and the Christie Film Company would appreciate your informing your readers of this, his emphatic statement that he is now and will in the future give his entire attention to the direction of Christie Comedies, featuring at present Miss Betty Compson and Miss Margaret Gibson and released through the leading independent exchanges."

Activities of the Lasky-Morosco Studios.

At the Lasky studios the foundation is now being laid for a building to house a complete lighting plant, and to generate the electricity used on the lot two big dynamos are installed to be run by a Diesel engine. The Lasky studio uses as much electricity in a day as a small city and the company feels that eventually it will be a great economy to have its own power plant. City service will, however, be maintained, so that in case of a breakdown of the local plant, additional power can be immediately secured.

Director Frank Reicher, having concluded the second production in which Marguerite Illington plays the star and that star having departed for New York City, will take a three weeks' vacation prior to beginning work on his next Lasky production.

Kathlyn Williams and Wallace Reid, with their company, under the direction of William H. Taylor of the Morosco studio, have departed for Fort Bragg, California, to take a number of the lumber camp scenes for a forthcoming production, in which they will be co-starred.

George Beban and his company, under the direction of Donald Crisp, have departed for Bear Valley, there to film the snow scenes in Mr. Beban's next production.

Vivian Martin, Carmen Phillips, Harrison Ford, Henry Barrows and Billy Elmer, under the direction of George Melford, have gone into the vastness of the San Gabriel Canyon to film some scenes for Miss Martin's forthcoming starring vehicle. Miss Martin finished one production at the Morosco studio, under the direction of Robert Thornby one evening late, and the next morning early appeared at the Lasky studio to begin work on her present picture.

Carmel Myers to Support Harold Lockwood.

Carmel Myers, one of Griffith's latest young stars and who appeared in recent Fine Arts productions, has been engaged this week by Fred J. Balshofer to support Harold Lockwood in the film version of "The Haunted Pajamas" at the Metro-Yorke Hollywood studios.

Miss Myers, who is a striking beauty of the brunette type, made her debut into the pictures about six months ago. Her first appearance with the Fine Arts Company was in straight dramatic parts and in comedy drama.

Carmel Myers.

In "The Haunted Pajamas" the young actress will be given a great opportunity for captivating bits of action opposite the popular male star of the Yorke-Metro Film Company.

Harold Lockwood, Producing Director Fred J. Balshofer and several members of the Yorke-Metro company sailed Saturday of this week for San Francisco, where they will be engaged for a few days in making exterior scenes. It is the plan of Mr. Balshofer to take pictures on the steamer, which will carry the players to the Bay City, and also in and around San Francisco, particularly at Golden Gate Park and in the suburban districts near San Mateo on the peninsula.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

An exact replica of Nome's principal—and only—street is being built this week at Inceville, for use in the next Ince-Triangle production in which Dorothy Dalton will be starred. George H. Percival, a former dance-hall proprietor of Nome during the gold-rush days of 1898-1899, and who is familiar with every aspect of this town in its halcyon days, has been specially engaged to build this street. He is duplicating every building and tent, and detail is receiving such close attention under his direction that names, advertisements, etc., which appeared on the original buildings, are being faithfully reproduced. Director Charles Miller and his company, which numbers close to three hundred people, including "extras," is filming all scenes for this spectacular production at Inceville. Kenneth Harlan, recently from the Fine Arts-Triangle ranks, is playing the leading male role opposite Miss Dalton, and the exceptional supporting cast includes Melbourne MacDowell, Carl Ullman, Walter Perry, Aaron Edwards, Milton Ross and Margaret Thompson.

William S. Hart and his company of forty players have returned from the big woods near Santa Cruz, California, having completed the filming of the exterior scenes for his first production under his new contract with Thomas H. Ince. This story, by J. G. Hawks, is laid in the big woods country, and will present Hart in an entirely new characterization. Sylvia Bremer is playing the leading role opposite this star, with Alma Reubens in an equally strong portrayal. Others in the cast are Will H. Bray, Mildred Harris, Cleo Morrow and Elvira Weil.

Director Lynn F. Reynolds and his company of Universal players, including Myrtle Gonzales, George Hernandez and Jean Hersholt, are at Santa Cruz Island, off the coast of Santa Barbara, where a number of scenes are being filmed for a feature production, "Back to the Primitive." Upon the return of the company from Santa Cruz Island it will go to Palm Canyon for additional scenes.

Ida May Park, who is directing Bluebird features, has established what is declared to be a new record for a woman director for a day's work. Miss Park took one hundred people into the factory district of Los Angeles this week to make mob scenes, and while there enlisted the services of several hundred spectators. She secured thirty-five scenes in the course of a few hours. These scenes were made for her current picture, "The Fires of Rebellion," which is being made in five reels.

This is Miss Park's second Bluebird feature at Universal City, the previous one being "The Flashlight Girl," many of the scenes of which were made in the snow-clad mountains near San Bernardino, California.

Director Paul Powell and Bessie Love, with a company of twenty players, are filming scenes, this week, in Marysville, in the northern part of California. Miss Love's supporting cast includes Jack Richardson, who will appear in the leading male role, and Josephine Headley. This is the first play in which Miss Love appears under the Ince-Triangle banner.

After superintending the cutting of his latest feature, "Caleb Conover," Director Colin Campbell expresses the intention of deserting the Selig studios for one whole week, and hieing himself to some secluded spot in the mountains where the fishing is good. Mr. Campbell considers his latest effort one of his very finest, and the story, cast, sets and details are exceptionally good. George Fawcett is featured in the role of "Caleb Conover," and the supporting cast includes Fritzi Brunette and Tom Santschi.

With the completion of the photoplay on which he is now working at the William Fox studio William Farnum will leave sunny California and resume his studio work in the East. Frank Lloyd, his director, and the staff of assistants and cameramen with him will accompany the star on his trip, and will have charge of the subjects he makes in the Fox studios in New Jersey.

Mr. Farnum has done two weeks on the filming of his latest production. Within four weeks the picture should be completed, placing the star's departure from Los Angeles around the middle of May. The present film will be cut and edited in New York, while work is going on toward the beginning of a new feature.

While he dislikes leaving the sunshine of California, Bill Farnum will be happy to get back to his home in Sag Harbor. He left it in December, 1915, and has not been back since.

For sentimental reasons, if for no other, Bill's return to the East will be a severe blow to his fellow-players in Hollywood. He headed the first group of Fox adventurers who set sail for California, and he, with his company, produced the first Fox picture in the West. The good work which he turned out induced William Fox to send other companies to the Coast, and to recruit others from Los Angeles studios. The right of seniority which Bill Farnum has always claimed will now pass to R. A. Walsh, who brought the second Fox company to Los Angeles.

While on the Coast William Farnum's productions have been "Fighting Blood," "A Man of Sorrow," "Battle of Hearts," "The Man from Bitter Roots," "The End of the Trail," "Fires of Conscience," "The Price of Silence," "A Tale of Two Cities," "American Methods" and the present picture, the title of which is not as yet announced.

At the Rolin studios this week they are filming a "back to the primitive" comedy, under the able direction of Hal Roach. The cast includes Harold Lloyd, the primitive "Lonesome Luke," Babe Daniels, Nina Speight and Harry Todd. Charming little Nina Speight is the bad bold vampire and does a vampire dance on the cliffs to lure Lonesome Luke from his solitary cave.

Nina Speight.

Miss Speight is one of the latest additions to the Rolin players, and came to this country from Australia only a few months ago. She has been connected with picture companies in Australia and has had experience in vaudeville and light opera. But it is an artist's model that Miss Speight is best known on the Australian continent. Her piquant little face has graced the covers of most of the popular magazines and she has posed for a number of prominent artists.

At the American studios William Russell has begun work on a feature written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude. Kathleen Kirkham, well remembered from "The Eyes of the World," and lately with Balboa, has been engaged to play a refined heavy type in this picture. Francelia Billington plays opposite Mr. Russell, under Ted Sloman's direction.

Irene M. Frieder, president, and Omer F. Doud, general manager of the Frieder Film Corporation of Chicago, are in the city visiting the California studios of the company at Lankersheim, to confer with Directoress-General Lule Warrington regarding children's photoplays soon to be released by the Frieder corporation. A new child's picture, starring little Mary Louise Cooper, is well under way, and other stories suitable for children are being prepared for the screen by Mrs. Warrenton.

Douglas Fairbanks is preparing to start immediate production here on his second Artcraft picture, "A Regular Guy," under the direction of John Emerson. A supporting cast is being selected, which, with Eileen Percy of "Cocoanut Grove" and "Century Girl" fame, will play prominent parts in the production.

Mr. Fairbanks this week received a telegram from S. L. Rothapfel, in which the manager of the New York Rialto theater says: "After a review of 'In Again, Out Again,' the initial Fairbanks-Artcraft release, I want to go on record as saying it is the best yet, and hope to break all records during its run at my playhouse."

W. H. Clune, the Los Angeles exhibitor, is preparing an elaborate billboard and newspaper campaign, to be used in conjunction with "In Again, Out Again," for its Los Angeles premier at Clune's Broadway theater.

Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and eighteen members of the Signal Company left this week for San Francisco, where they are to make a number of exterior scenes in the production of the tenth episode of "The Railroad Raiders." A number of scenes for this episode have already been staged at the local studio and in addition to the scenes to be made in San Francisco a number will also be taken on board the train.

In addition to the regular cast a corps of technical men, stage carpenters and so forth will make the trip with the company that any necessary sets may be constructed during their stay in the north. The episode will be released under the installment title, "A Watery Grave."

Under the direction of Orrin Denny, the laboratory expert of the Signal studios, a complete laboratory is being installed in one end of the company's recently purchased Pullman car. The equipment will be compact, but complete in every detail, from a large tank of running water to a printing machine and drums for drying and polishing the finished positive. A collapsible screen is also being built to fit into one end of the car for the projection of the picture for cutting purposes.

This equipment is being installed to facilitate the taking of pictures which may necessitate the making of extended stays away from the studio.

Studio Flashes.

We were the witnesses the other day, while out in O. L. Sellers' office at Universal City, of an incident which to us was very interesting, as it showed the appreciation in which Mr. Sellers is held by those under him on the lot. A large box of cigarettes was brought in for Mr. Sellers. He opened it and inclosed was a card bearing the words, "It is a real pleasure to work for a square guy," signed Leo Pearson.

We had the pleasure of a very interesting chat with H. O. Davis the other day, in which Mr. Davis expressed the opinion that the war instead of hurting the industry would prove a decided benefit. It is a fact that we have yet to meet a big man of the business who did not hold the same views as does Mr. Davis.

The same day we had lunch at the Universal Cafeteria with William Worthington, his star, Franklyn Farnum, and Alice Lake, who has just joined the big "U" company, coming from Keystone. Through Mr. Worthington's courtesy we spent a very interesting hour watching Franklyn Farnum in a hilarious comedy scene, which will be a feature of his forthcoming production, "The Clean-Up."

Rosita Marstini was the heroine of a spy suspect case this week, all on account of two advertisements she placed in the local papers for a lost pet fox, answering to the name of William, and a coin purse also lost. In some manner a cub reporter conceived the idea that the advertisements were code signals, but his patriotic ardor was allayed by Miss Marstini in person.

At the Christie lot this week they are shooting a one-reel comedy temporarily entitled "Working His Way." An elaborate cafe set has been built and a lively cabaret entertainment is a feature of the picture. Betty Compson, Neal Burns and Eddie Barry are included in the cast. The story was written by Frank Finnegan.

Max Linder, the famous Essanay comedian, is seriously ill and his doctors entertain considerable doubts whether he will be able to appear in pictures for some time to come. He has been confined to his rooms at the Beverly Hills Hotel for the last week and production on his current feature has been temporarily suspended. His illness, we are informed, is largely due to wounds he received while in the trenches in France.

Myrtle Gonzalez

THE ASSOCIATION of Myrtle Gonzalez, as leading lady of Lynn F. Reynold's company, in Bluebirds, has been particularly happy—Miss Gonzales has helped in popularizing Bluebirds and Bluebirds have given Miss Gonzalez the opportunities to make her way to great popularity with devotees of the screen throughout the country.

Myrtle Gonzalez.

Lynn F. Reynolds, it will be recalled, has stuck consistently to one distinctive style of pictures—"nature studies," the Bluebird publicity department likes to call them; for the scenes in the Reynolds film stories are almost exclusively taken out of doors. When there is an interior show, it proves only an incentive to hurry away into the open for more vistas of natural beauties.

Miss Gonzalez is one of Mr. Reynold's natural beauties, and she has been leading woman in every Bluebird he has produced. Starting July 31, 1916, the Reynolds-Gonzalez combination came among Bluebirds in "The Secret of the Swamp." Since then "The Girl of Lost Lake," "The End of the Rainbow," "God's Crucible" and "Mutiny" have been presented by this company in the Bluebird series.

Future announcements include "Southern Justice," set for May 28; "The Code of the Klondyke," to be shown during July, and "Back to the Primitive," a production Mr. Reynolds is now employed in producing on Santa Cruz Island, where most of the scenes will be taken. In the several productions Miss Gonzalez has led she has consistently gained in public favor by her artistic work.

BETTER FILMS COMMITTEE SEES CONQUEST PICTURES.

The larger assembly room at the Russell Sage Foundation Building, 130 East 22d street, was crowded last Tuesday evening, when a demonstration exhibition of a partial Forum Films program of Edison Conquest Pictures was given under the auspices of the National Committee for Better Films, of which Mrs. Howard S. Gans is chairman.

"Kidnapped." "Chris and His Wonderful Lamp" and "A Vanishing Race" were shown. The films were enthusiastically received, and at the conclusion of the screening a vote of thanks was tendered the producers.

Why do they flash some subtitles on and off so suddenly that all a guy gets to read is something like this: "Reginald DuBuque leaves the——" Then you guess the rest.

On the other hand why do they dish this out occasionally: Subtitle, "Mary Smith, sister of Tom North's cousin, owner of the International Spaghetti and Macaroni Milling Company of America, meets the second Lord Freeze, son of the first Lord Freeze, at a dinner given in honor of Miss Prudence Ware at the Ware house in upper Fifth avenue, where they plight their troth." If you can digest that before they show the picture you are hitting on six cylinders.

Film Export Notes

BY F. G. ORTEGA.

WITH the exception of Santiago de Cuba, where the public had to see the same films over and over again during three or four weeks, owing to lack of train service with Havana, the moving picture business throughout the Island of Cuba was not affected by the recent revolutionary fiasco.

Cuba has an enormous per capita wealth and is today one of the richest countries in the world. No nation has benefitted so much from the war. The 270 or 300 moving picture houses are always well attended, and it should be remembered that rental and admission prices in Cuba are higher than in most Latin-American countries. It would take the keenest intellect to find out the reason why American manufacturers are not represented in this market, located only ninety miles away from the Florida coast. We give the import duty on film in Cuba: Four dollars per kilo with 30 per cent. overcharge and 20 per cent. allowance; that is, $4.16 per kilo net. Duty is assessed on the net weight. Imports are made regularly by mail.

The Italian producers are losing ground steadily in Spanish and Portuguese speaking markets and it would not be amiss to point out here one of the causes that have led to this result. As soon as Italy entered the war the manufacturers assumed that for the world at large there was no theme of greater interest that the recovery of the "Provincias Irredentas," and that nothing could be quite as appealing on the screen as Red Cross nurses and Bersagliery officers. All impartial observers with an international knowledge of the business knew that such policy was bound to end in disaster, but our Italian friends could think of nothing else but their own war, just starting, and would not even study the effect produced by the same cause in other countries that had already been fighting for a year.

It behooves American manufacturers to ponder over this subject and profit by its lesson. The introduction of American pictures in the Latin countries of Europe and America was not only due to merit and domestic scarcity; it was also due, and to a very large extent, to the absence of "war atmosphere" from our productions.

Moreover, all neutrals today are walking on pins and will not tolerate on the screen, for fear of possible complications, anything of a partisan trend. This has been amply demonstrated with "Civilization," which the authorities have barred in some neutral countries.

War-like films will not be appreciated abroad; they may pass in this country during the next three or four months. But as soon as the United States enters the fight in earnest the public—soldiers and civilians alike—will go to the theater to forget for a few moments the horrors of the conflict and not to be reminded of them.

The "Sociedad General Cinematográfica," with offices in New York in charge of Le Roy Garfinckle, has begun to release Famous Players, Lasky, Pallas and Morosco subjects. The company is handling these pictures in Argentine and Uruguay on an exclusive contract, which was closed in New York two months ago by Julián Ajuria, the general manager of the firm. The above brands were practically unknown in Argentine and our correspondent claims that their success was instantaneous. The "Sociedad General," one of the most powerful independent exchanges in the world, shows a tendency to break away from the Italian producers and devote its main effort to American-made pictures. The company is also handling Triangle and Vitagraph subjects.

Picture Conditions in Chile Good

Photoplay Entertainments Predominate in Valparaiso—Our Productions Shown in All Cities.

IN a recent issue of "Commerce Reports," Consul General L. J. Kenna, who is located in Valparaiso, Chile, writes that in that city there are nine theaters with a total seating capacity, according to the latest municipal regulations, for 8,076 persons. Not all these houses are given up exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures, but pictures are shown in all of them in the proportion of about 70 per cent for this form of entertainment to 30 per cent for dramatic performances. The average admission fee when pictures are being presented is about $1 United States currency for the boxes, 20 cents for pit seats, 10 cents for amphitheater, and 5 cents for the gallery.

Valparaiso is not a center of distribution for films, but one of the minor cities to which films are dispatched. Importers have agents here who distribute them to the theaters. Rental prices vary with the length and class of the films, and are governed partly by the arrangement as to first, second, or third run.

Practically every important manufacturer has had some products shown in Chile, but there are no local contracts for the handling of particular lines. No recommendations have been made as to improvements in American films for this market.

The most popular class of plays is that presenting the social drama. In this class the Italian and French products are probably more popular than the American, because the Chilean audience, being more directly of Latin descent, is more closely related to and in sympathy with the temperamental type of acting shown by the Italian and French artists. Comedies rank next in importance.

Little official attempt has been made to censor motion-picture films, but during the past year or so the local newspapers have carried on a campaign in favor of the establishment of that type of supervision.

A report on this industry in Santiago, Chile, has been prepared by R. De F. Boomer, in charge of the office of American commercial attache, and is here presented:

The total seating capacity of Santiago's thirty-two moving pictures theaters is about 18,000, and the average attendance per night does not exceed 10,000. Perhaps eight of these theaters might be termed first class. The customary prices are from twenty-two to forty-four cents, United States currency. The second class of motion-picture houses is found in the outlying district of the city, and although the same films are shown as in the better theaters the prices of admission is smaller. Cheaper places are never attended by the better class of people. Even though one is located only a short distance away they will travel half an hour on the street car and pay twice as much to see a film as it would cost nearer home rather than attend a lower-class house.

Another radical difference between motion-picture theaters here and in the United States is that presentations in Chile are not on the continuous basis. Some houses give matinees at 6 in the afternoon, and the evening performance starts some time after 9 o'clock. Sunday matinees are given starting at 3.30. The 6 o'clock performance is always popular. This arrangement which limits the exhibition of films to two or three times a day extends their life considerable. It takes six months for a film to make the rounds of all the theaters of Chile, and after that period it is in a comparatively sound condition, which can not be said of those used for six months in Argentina, where continuous performances are customary.

While imported films are by no means limited to those of the United States, products from that country preponderate both in number and quality. Films are purchased outright. As one or two of the agencies here also provide pictures for Peru and Bolivia, where it has a monopoly, it is more advantageous to purchase than to rent them.

Products of Italy and France also are imported, and the Allied Governments provide official films of war scenes which are shown from time to time. The French Government does the same thing. Occasionally a portion of the receipts is destined for the Red Cross, but the pictures are usually provided free.

The Spanish used in the pictures sometimes is criticized. This may be grammatically correct, but not colloquially so. Each country of South America has its own idioms. Titters from the audiences are very frequent when the Spanish is odd. If a film is sold to a Chilean agency it might be well to have a Chilean, if possible, revise the reading matter.

A preference is shown for the shipment of films by mail, because the delay in removing them from the customhouse is cut down as much as two or three weeks. Most of them are now arriving by freight. No criticism of packing is offered.

Consul Thomas W. Voetter, stationed at Antofagasta, writes that the Antofagasta consular district, which comprises the Provinces of Tacna, Tarapaca and Antofagasta, has about twelve motion picture theaters. The larger establishments have seating capacities of 500 to 1,000 each. Their supplies are obtained from two exchanges, both with head offices at Valparaiso and branches on this coast.

The performances in Antofagasta district are given nightly, with matinees on Sundays and holidays. They last about two and a half hours. They include a long six-part or seven-part film, a shorter one in lighter vein, and at the end a comic film. All types are seen, but dramatic pictures are the most popular. All makes of films are used. The demand for American pictures seems to be good, and most of the theaters exhibit them.

Italian films are proving attractive. Pictures now on the market are 60 per cent. Italian. Before the war French films predominated with about 50 per cent. of the trade. The American films most widely used here are comics.

Admission fees vary from 8 cents to $1.15, according to the class of the theater and the location of the seat. Admission prices are often raised when important pictures are shown. The prices for the matinees on Sundays and holidays are reduced about one-half. The average rental price for a performance of two and a half hours is $12 United States currency.

Films should be packed in tin boxes. Explanatory texts should be in Spanish. The posters of films to be exhibited in Antofagasta are extremely important as a means of insuring the success of the picture play. As a general rule, a good film depends for a large part of its popularity upon skillful advertising. Besides handbills distributed at each performance, giving the features of the program for the following day, similar announcements are made in the amusement columns of the daily newspapers, and large posters are used on the billboards. Certain of the moving picture theaters also employ portable billboard carts, which are drawn through the city.

JEROME WILSON A UNIVERSAL PUBLICITOR.

Jerome Wilson, scenario writer, marine engineer, newspaperman and press agent, has joined the publicity forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Wilson is assistant to Edward B. Mullen, who was recently appointed Universal's publicity director. Mr. Wilson's latest picture is "Sweetheart of the Doomed," which was produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

"Artistic Temperament" Barred

Len McChesney, Manager of Edison Studio, Says It Is the Bunk and Gives It the Gate.

THE so-called "artistic temperament," which has made theatrical managers tear their hair and grit their teeth since the days of Willie Shakespeare, has received some severe jolts since the inception of the motion pictures, but none more severe, perhaps, than the one it has struck at the studios of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. The manager of these studios, L. W. McChesney, recently issued a memorandum for circulation among the employees of the studios in which some highly caustic comments on the "artistic temperament" in general are supplemented by the announcement that any decided manifestations of it will be considered a sufficient excuse for the request of resignations in the future. When asked to explain the stand he has taken on the subject Mr. McChesney stated that he has become utterly tired of the nonsense that is supposed to be exercised on the grounds that it arises from the "artistic temperament," and that in the future it will not be tolerated.

"The time has come for theatrical and studio managers to refuse to recognize the foolish whims and fancies of writers and players," he said. "While I am not one of those people who believe that a scenario writer or an actor can work with the same precision that a bookkeeper can, I do believe that there is a lot of bunk connected with temperament. As I stated in the memorandum you refer to, temperament is usually due to an exaggerated ego. Scenario writers, actors and directors who are making the struggle that usually is necessary to achieve any success in these fields seldom exhibit any signs of this so-called temperament. It is not until they get a little prominence or a little success that they feel that they are qualified to twirl the world around to suit themselves, regardless of anybody else. This attitude is responsible for much trouble in motion picture studios, but it no longer is going to be considered any problem here, because the person who exhibits it is going to be summarily discharged.

"I have had occasion to come in contact with all types of writers, players and directors, and I do not see that it is at all necessary for producing companies to cater to those of the temperamental, trouble-making type. The best writers, the best players and the best directors with whom I am acquainted all are fine, unassuming men and women. Since this is the case, and I am not compelled to be bothered with people who consider themselves as being so constituted that they are somewhat apart and above the ordinary run of mortals, I am going to pick for our general staff the real human beings, with whom it is a pleasure to work and be associated. Temperament, which is largely bluff, anyway, would not survive long if every company would take this attitude."

The memorandum issued by Mr. McChesney is as follows:

"I have decided to make a radical change in the attitude I have toward players, writers and directors of the so-called 'temperamental' type; in the future, instead of acceeding to their whims and fancies, I will consider any manifestation of 'temperament' as an adequate reason for requesting the resignation of the one exhibiting it.

"We are not conducting a sanitarium for neurotics, and I do not intend to continue to be a nurse for anybody who is suffering from any of the various forms of neurasthenia. We want healthy stories and productions and we cannot look to people who mentally are unhealthy for any valuable assistance in securing them.

"We are going to have a staff of clear sighted, clean minded and unaffected workers, and those who have the delusions and halucinations that are characteristic of the 'artistic temperament' no longer can expect to remain with this company or establish any connection with it. If you insist on being 'temperamental,' go into vaudeville, where everybody can have a chance to laugh at you.

"This memorandum is not aimed at any particular person or persons. I am taking the stand outlined herein for the purpose of securing better discipline and of increasing the general efficiency of the studios."

"New Legs for Soldiers" (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE MAKING of artificial limbs has since the outbreak of the present war become an important industry, and one which can be followed by maimed soldiers as seen in "Reel Life No. 51." First we see logs of wood cut in certain lengths being unloaded at the factory, after which we are privileged to watch one of the laborers cutting the outer part off the log by hand preparatory to placing it in the machine, in which it is shaped after the pattern of a plaster cast. The feet, knees and shins are shaped on lathes; and in order that the limbs may contain no unnecessary weight they are hollowed out by a boring machine. Finally they are put through a three weeks' drying process before the individual parts are fastened together with the springs and other accessories. We note also some of the employees of the factory who have been obliged to make use of wooden limbs walking about with apparently as much ease as others with their limbs whole.

"A Modern Cake Bakery" (Universal).

A fully detailed illustration of how work is carried on in a modern cake bakery will be found in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 18. Here we learn that in this particular plant twenty tons of cake are produced daily under the supervision of inspectors from the New York Board of Health. The flour store-room contains at one time 6,000 sacks of flour, which can be moved about on sanitary platforms. A conveyor carries the flour to the mixing room. Each day 5,000 pounds of frozen egg yolk are thawed out for baking purposes, which is thoroughly inspected before being used. The mixing department, where each machine is carefully covered over to keep out the dust, is interesting; and also the transferring of the dough to the weighing machine. In preparing the pans for the cake no grease is used. The dough is weighed as each pan is filled, after which it is conveyed to the sanitary rotary ovens five stories above. The icing of the cake with pastry bags, the cutting of the cake to standard size, and the final decorating and packing are interesting sights.

"Making Iron Pipe" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life No. 51" the manufacture of iron pipe is clearly illustrated, commencing with the carrying of the ore into sand molds in the making of pig iron. These blocks of iron are then refined in furnaces and iron oxide dropped in the molten metal combines with the impurities, forming slag. After the metal has been reheated and remolded into long strips the pipes gradually take form and are finally galvanized and given the necessary finishing touches.

"Transplanting the Peasant Arts of Europe" (Paramount-Bray).

Lace making, one of the finer handicrafts, an art at which the peasant women of Europe have for generations been especially adept, has since the advent of the present war found its way to America. So says the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 65, in which we are introduced to an aged Belgian woman who has taken up her abode on the outskirts of New York City. This woman is shown plying her craft, working on a design generations old, from which she made lace for a gown worn by the Queen of Belgium. On this piece of Flemish lace she manipulates with deft rapidity 150 separate bobins, each threaded with the finest of threads.

"Preparing the School-Boy Athletes" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting and well-illustrated subject found in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 65 shows the training being given the bodies of youthful Americans during their school-days. We see the boys taking a 100-foot climb to the gymnasium, after which they indulge in various exercises to develop all muscles of the body. This includes indoor baseball and a cross country run.

"Moscow, Russia" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 25" will be found attractive views of Moscow, the Holy City of the Russians. Here we are shown the Kremlin behind whose walls are the once royal palaces of Russia, of which individual views are given. We also see the Church of St. Basil, the Church of Our Saviour and other edifices which present interesting types of architecture. The street and market scenes are unusually interesting, showing the selling of bread, fish and other articles of food, as well as articles of apparel, such as boots, out in the open.

"Sarajevo, Bosnia" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Scenes in and about Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia, are shown in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 25." These pictures were photographed before the war and show a mixed population, which at that time numbered 40,000, composed of Serbo-Croatians, Jews, Turks, Gypsies and other nationalities. Interesting sights are the Goats' Bridge, the Turkish cemetery, a Jewish Temple, the courtyard of the City Hall, the bazaar, and the various industries plied by the people according to primitive methods.

"Salzburg, Austria" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 24" we find that the town of Salzburg nestles among the hills of Western Austria, and that the River Salsbach separates the old from the new portion of the town. Here it was that Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, the composer, was born. Interesting sights are the Table and Seats Fountain, Hellbrunn Castle, with its electric theater; the cemetery of St. Peter, with its ancient vaults dating back to the fourth century; the Monchsburg hill and other scenes in and about the town.

"Copenhagen" (Mutual-Gaumont).

"Mutual Tours Around the World No. 24" contains interesting views of Copenhagen, capital of Denmark. We are shown in this film the streets, the parks, the waterfront, and the markets of Copenhagen, also buildings of architectural and historical importance. Among these will be found the Thorwaldsen Museum, containing the work of the great sculptor of this name; the St. Nicholas Church, the Royal Palace, the Royal Theater and the four uniform palaces about Amalienburg place.

"Along the Apache Trail" (Pathe-Combitone).

In the seventh number of the Combitone picture we cross Arizona via the Apache Trail. We start from Yuma, Arizona, along the National Highway, passing the ruins of the Tonto Cliff Dwellings, and the Painted Cliffs Canyon. The Indian reservation of the Yuma Indians is interesting, and also plant life on the plains of Arizona. Hell's Hip Pocket, and the Roosevelt Lake and Dam are also glimpsed in the picture, which is an unusually interesting release.

"Brest, France" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 25" will be found some interesting views of the fortified seaport town of Brest, France. In its harbor we are told 500 battleships can ride at anchor. One of the principal thoroughfares of Brest ends in a swing bridge. The foot bridge near the same point is quite as interesting. Views of an old castle, which formerly was the residence of the dukes of Brittany, are also shown, as well as a number of other attractive sights.

"Russian Caucasia" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 24" will be found a number of scenes of special interest in Russian Caucasia. One of the attractive sights shows us Mount Elbruz, which is 18,526 feet high. Here we learn is the source of the river Laba, which flows into the Black Sea. Intimate views of the natives at work at various industries are also shown, including the carding, spinning and weaving of wool, and the harvesting of grain by the old-fashioned sickle method.

"Silver Linings" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

This picture shares a 950-foot film with another subject entitled "Birds of the Air," and is unusually interesting and beautiful. It is explained in subtitle how the different kinds of clouds had been classified by Luke Howard into 28 varieties, after which we are shown the most delightful pictures of clouds varying from those which appear just before sunrise to the clouds that play around the mountain tops at the approach of a storm. Closeup views of these latter are unusually attractive. The picture closes with a beautiful sunset scene, photographed with the camera set close to gushing waterfall.

"Birds of the Air" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

An intimate study of some of the common birds of North America appears on the same reel with "Silver Linings," a cloud study. In this picture we are made intimate with the swallow, with attention drawn to his sharp claws which enable him to cling to a wall or any perpendicular object, and his aeroplane wings, which make it possible for him to fly for miles with the greatest ease. The wren, the fly catcher, the nightingale and a number of other birds come in for a share of attention.

"Monkey Capers" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

One of the funniest and most grotesque of animal pictures is that entitled "Monkey Capers." It belongs to the Ditmars series and introduces first the Celebes black ape, whose pantomine of course we do not pretend to thoroughly understand;we fancy, however, that he is begging for something good to eat when he first appears before the camera. He is given a banana which he munches hungrily looking his thanks even though he is not able to speak it. A loaf of bread also forms an important part of his repast. With the entrance on the scene of the long-armed baboon of West Africa the comedy increases. We see the two monkeys introduced and are intensely amused at the animosity which the baboon displays toward the ape. Finally some food is placed between them on the shelf, which the baboon immediately proceeds to appropriate to his own uses, while the ape sits by in sullen inactivity. A mirror placed in front of them reflecting their own two faces with which, of course, they are unfamiliar, causes them to snuggle up to one another for protection and affords some comical scenes. The monkey's chief characteristic of flea hunting, as displayed in the picture, is one of the funniest things in it, for even the keeper receives attention. A lady's muff is also attended to; while a scarf belonging to a caller is put through a most humiliating examination. This film study of a pair of monkeys will surely extract roars of laughter from any audience.

Forum Films Exhibited

Demonstration Exhibition of Photoplays Produced in Connection with Better Film Movement Given at Russell Sage Foundation Building.

IT WAS under the auspices of the National Committee for Better Films that a demonstration of the "Conquest Pictures," which are being released weekly in lock-reel programs by the Forum Films, Incorporated, was held at the Russell Sage Foundation Building, 130 East 22d street, New York City, on the evening of Tuesday, April 17. To this demonstration were invited a number of people who are interested in social welfare, many of whom attended and expressed themselves well pleased with the class of films shown, and also with the artistry displayed in their production. A remark passed by Mrs. J. J. Locher, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the District of Columbia, was as follows: "The 'Conquest Pictures' are admirable in every way, and are what our organization and others like it have been working for for the past two years." We have no doubt that this sentiment was shared in by the majority of those who attended the demonstration.

The pictures exhibited were not intended to represent a regulation program, but to demonstrate the class of photoplay of which the Forum program is made up. For instance, two of the pictures shown were feature productions of four and five reels each, and each belonging to a separate program. These pictures were: "Kidnapped," which is a splendid adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's story, and "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp," an adaptation of the story by Albert Stearns. The educational offering was entitled "The Vanishing Race," a 500-foot scenic made on the reservation of the Blackfoot Indians.

The meeting was opened by Edward B. Barrows, secretary of the National Committee for Better Films, followed by Cranston Brenton, who defined the Better Film Movement as an undertaking to encourage the production of more pleasing and more artistic pictures which shall not violate the fundamental truths of life. Mr. Brenton in his address discriminated clearly between the screening of things which, although they may represent facts, are entirely out of conformity with the fundamental truths and underlying principles of life, and facts that are harmonious with these fundamental principles.

Following the demonstration of films a short discussion tcok place, the dominant note of which was: "How can parents know of this movement and of where the better class program is available?"

Salisbury-Beach Pictures

Scenes in a Tropical Jungle Introduce Various Insects and Animals—The Balata Tree from which Rubber Is Extracted Also Interests.

THE SALISBURY-BEACH pictures photographed in the tropics seems to be gaining in interest as the series progresses. The seventh installment shows us specimens of the Balata tree from the sap of which rubber is made. This tree, which grows to a gigantic size, dies soon after the sap has been extracted. Scenes in the village of Nombre de Duis, where Christopher Columbus is first supposed to have set foot on the American continent, present primitive types and thatched-roof cottages. The revelations of insect life in a tropical jungle are remarkable in photography as well as in subject matter. Busy scenes in which red and white ants hold sway, including closeup views of their homes, are interesting. Some excellent views of the ant eater, which gathers a delicious feast of ants as he glides his tongue along the tree branches, is also shown. Other tropical animals appearing in this installment are the spotted rabbit, the peccary or musk dog, and the crocodile.

FOX STRENGTHENS SCENARIO STAFF.

Sidney Reynolds, director of the William Fox scenario department, announces the addition of two more well-known writers to his staff, making it the strongest ever gathered together by any motion picture organization. They are George Scarborough, the dramatist, and Larry Evans, short story writer. Last week the addition of George Bronson Howard was announced. These men are now preparing material for new Fox productions.

George Scarborough has written several stage successes. His best known are "The Lure," "Fate Decides," "The Heart of Wetona" and "Oklahoma." Perhaps the best known of Larry Evans' stories are "Cassidy" and "Conahan," both of which appeared serially in magazines.

Others who will supply Mr. Fox with scenarios are Randolph Lewis, well known in literary circles; F. McGrew Willis, Ben Cohn, Adrian Johnson and Mary Murillo. Mr. Willis, Mr. Johnson and Miss Murillo already have many Fox successes to their credit.

17 Madison Ave., New York City

Among the Picture Theaters

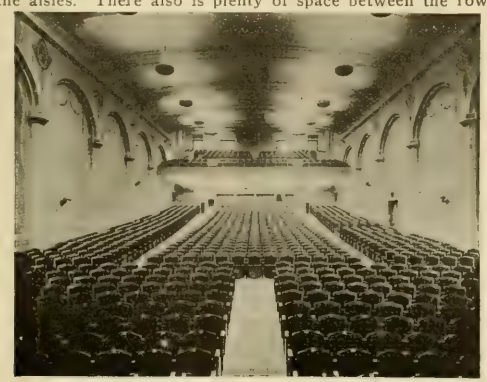
Crescent Theater, Ithaca, N. Y.

One of the Prettiest Moving Picture Houses in Central New York Caters to College Patrons.

ITHACA, N. Y., is the city of Cornell University and the new theater of the Crescent Theater Company. The theater was opened in early winter of last year, was built and decorated to be inviting to, and is being run to please, a clientele of the highest grade. It is at 217 Aurora street in the city near Lake Cayuga. The same company also owns the Star theater in Ithaca, and the officers are Fred B. Howe, president and general manager; F. W. Grant, vice-president; John B. Howe, secretary and treasurer, and Charles B. Hammer, business manager.

Crescent Theater, Ithaca, N. Y.

The Crescent is as pretty and comfortable a theater as can be found in this part of the state. The interior is finished in old rose and gray. The seats are deep and roomy and tilted slightly backward, which seemed to meet the approval of every one. A noticeable feature is the width of the aisles. There also is plenty of space between the rows of seats, so that no one is cramped for "leg room." The Crescent has a seating capacity of 1,315.



Interior of Crescent Theater, Ithaca, N. Y.

One of the cuts illustrating this article shows a good view of the front with its marquise and the electric sign. It is plain that it is a spacious, well proportioned building. We especially call attention to the adequate exit alley. The other cut shows the interior looking from the screen back to the windows over the entrance. The walls show decorations of classic simplicity and with indirect lighting sending a diffused glow from the high ceiling.

The system of indirect lighting also has been commented upon in favorable terms. And many of the theater's patrons have been heard to remark on the number of exits available in case of fire. The seats are arranged in three sections with broad aisles. There also is a very comfortable gallery.

The orchestra is no small part of the program. It is headed by Harry P. Sutton, musical director. The big organ is a marked feature in the music.

The decorating work of the theater was done by August Brand & Co., of Chicago, a well known firm which has decorated a number of big theaters in central New York. Gibb & Waltz designed the building and then Pulford & Dempsey Construction Company, of Elmira, built the structure. The lighting is the work of the Davis-Brown Electric Company. The heating and ventilating is by the Forest City Plumbing Company. The system of ventilation is one of the many creditable details. Prices of admission are 10 cents for matinees and 10 and 15 cents for evening shows.

Auslet-Woodward Theater Corporation Expands

An Enterprising Concern Operating Chain of Photoplay Houses in Mississippi.

ALTHOUGH only about four months have elapsed since its formation, the Auslet-Woodward Theater Corporation, with main offices at Booneville, Miss., has shown remarkable growth, and splendidly reflects the energy and business acumen of its officers, Jack Auslet, president and general manager, and G. C. Woodward, secretary and treasurer.

This circuit, operating in the state of Mississippi, already comprises the following photoplay theaters: The Princess at Booneville, the Strand at Laurel, the New Lyric at Louisville, The Alamo at Houston and the Hipp at Philadelphia, and will be increased by the addition of other houses in the surrounding territory.

Much of the success of this corporation is due to the application of thoroughly modern and up-to-date ideas in motion picture theater management. Weekly programs are used in all of the houses, being selected from the service of the Paramount, Triangle, Mutual, Fox, World and other companies, also including offerings of the state right companies.

In addition to the use of an unusually large amount of "paper," a mailing list including all of the owners of automobiles within a radius of twenty miles of the various houses has proved to be a great stimulus in increasing the patronage.

CARR & SCHAD OPEN ANOTHER THEATER.

The number of up-to-date motion picture houses owned and operated by Carr & Schad in Shamokin and Reading, Pa., was recently increased by one when on April 16 the Colonial in Reading was dedicated. The new house is situated at Penn and Seventh streets, and is a monument to the brains and energy of the owners. It is probably the best in the Carr & Schad circuit, and it cost more than $250,000 to erect. Accommodations for seating 2,000 people comfortably have been provided for, and the colonial style of architecture pervades the entire structure. In addition to the orchestra of fifteen pieces the musical accompaniment is augmented by a $25,000 Kimball pipe organ. The policy of the Colonial calls for the exhibition of the best pictures on the market.

Andrews Theater, New Bethlehem, Pa.

A Photoplay House That Compares Favorably With Houses in Big Cities.

IN the Andrews theater, which was opened on December 21, 1916, New Bethlehem, Pa., has a substantial motion picture house. In respect of appointments, decorations and precautions against fire it compares equally well with the bigger houses in the big cities. It is under the management of B. A. Hoffman, a progressive and experienced man, who sees that the pictures comprising the programs of the Andrews are of such moral character that they would not be out of place in a church benefit entertainment. The result of this wise policy is a steady clientele of satisfied patrons. Prices of admission are 5 and 10 cents.

Andrews Theater New Bethlehem, Pa.

The building is 50 feet wide by 100 feet long, and the auditorium has 467 mahogany chairs upholstered in leather. The seats are arranged in three sections with two wide aisles. The walls are done in Tiffany blend with marble trim and wainscoting. Three pairs of mahogany doors, fitted with beveled plate glass, lead into the auditorium. The floor of the lobby is of tile, and the ticket booth, which is wainscoted in marble, has an ornamental wood top, finished in verdigris. The structure is one story in height, built of gray brick, and has a concrete foundation. All aisles are covered with rubber runners.

Illuminating the auditorium are six large and attractive electric fixtures suspended from the ceiling with heavy brass chains. The lighting throughout the auditorium, as well as in the lobby and elsewhere in the house, is of the indirect type. Divided into three sections is the operating room, and it is constructed of asbestos boards and iron. One division is used for projection, another as a rewinding room, and the third contains the Martin rotary converter. Two Power's 6B motor driven machines are used, and the projection is most commendable. Each of the sections of the operating room has ample space in which to work.

Roseland Theater, New Glasgow, N. S.

New $80,000 Photoplay House Embodies Many Ideas of Interest to Maritime Exhibitors.

AN inspection of N. W. Mason's new Roseland theater at New Glasgow, N. S., erected at a cost of $80,000, and opened for the first time on January 15, reveals many new ideas in motion picture theater construction that will be of interest to maritime exhibitors. In addition to Mr. Mason, the owners of the house are H. B. McCullough, A. F. McCullough and Dr. Keay. J. D. Grant, mayor of New Glasgow, was the architect.

The Roseland gets its name from the decorative scheme of roses carried out in every part of the building. The spacious lobby is finished in highly polished Douglas fir, and has a New Jersey tile floor. The walls are paneled alternately with three-sheet poster stands and oil paintings. All floors are five inches thick and of slow-burning construction. There is not a post in the entire building. The balcony is supported by two web girders, weighing three and five tons respectively. In the lobby is a small overhanging balcony, where the theater orchestra of five pieces gives brief concerts before the first show. Orchestra boxes are replaced by playing fountains, illuminated with red and green lights, tapering toward the ceiling. The lighting system, controlled from the box office, is beautiful and effective. Individual lights in the orchestra are encased in square art glass shades. With the exception of the stage lights the switches are operated from the box office, enabling the management, should necessity require, to reduce the house staff, in addition to the orchestra, to a ticket seller, doorman, and operator. The seating capacity is between 1,000 and 1,100.

Stage equipment is of excellent quality. A solid white plaster projection screen of three inches thickness is built into the wall at the rear of the stage, giving a throw of 85 feet from the concrete operating room at the rear of the balcony. The booth has a direct current with a 15 horse power motor driven generator set, supplied by the Canadian General Electric Company, two Power's 6B motor driven machines and a spotlight. E. M. McRae is the chief operator, A. N. Walls, chairman of the Nova Scotia Board of Censorship was among the officials present at the opening.

Norman Theater, Louisville, Ky.

Attractive Photoplay House in Residential Section Catering Especially to Women and Children.

THE accompanying photograph shows the attractive facade of the Norman theater in Louisville, Ky., owned and operated by the Norman Amusement Company, of which J. M. Wentzell is president and general manager and Chester C. Wentzell treasurer. The open spaces surrounding the house materially reduce the fire hazard, as well as serving to enhance its architectural attractiveness.

Two Power's machines are used for projection, and a Fairbanks Morse lighting outfit has been recently installed. A type Y 15-horsepower crude oil engine, together with a dynamo, are used for the machines, as well as all interior lighting, the three large arc lights and numerous small incandescents used on the front of the house. The management reports that their lighting bills have been materially reduced since the installation of this system.

General Manager Wentzell is strongly in favor of pictures which, while teaching a moral lesson, are produced in such a manner as not to offend the most discriminating patron of his house, and is against the class of pictures which have a tendency to go beyond recognized moral limits.

Music is furnished by an orchestra of four pieces and a team vaudeville act is used in connection with motion pictures. Regular releases and features obtained from Fox, Greater Vitagraph, Triangle, Pathe, Universal, World, Mutual and General Film companies are used. Nothing is left undone to make this theater thoroughly attractive and safe in every way for women and children.

PLAQUEMINE, LA., TO HAVE NEW THEATER.

Plans have been drawn and contracts awarded for the erection of a theater in Plaquemine, La., with a seating capacity of 1,100, to be used for the presentation of motion pictures, as well as the spoken drama. There will be 500 seats in the orchestra, 350 seats in the first balcony and 250 in the second balcony. The stage will measure 55 feet from wall to wall, depth 35 feet, height to gridiron 40 feet, proscenium 32 feet wide by 30 feet high.

The theater will be leased to Lionel Delacroix for a long term, and will cater not only to the inhabitants of Plaquemine, but also to the towns of Port Allen, Anchorage, Brusly, Addis, Morley, Grosse Tete, Bayou Golua and White Castle, all of which are located on good gravel roads within a radius of twenty miles.

THE EMPIRE TO OPEN JUNE 1.

The Empire Theater Company, Montgomery, Ala., of which H. C. Farley is manager, is erecting on Montgomery street, between Lee and Moulton streets, a photoplay theater to be known as the Empire. This house, costing in the neighborhood of $50,000 and having a seating capacity of 900, all on one floor, will be opened on June 1.

American Theater, Winnemucca, Nev.

Although This Place Has a Population of Only 2,500 It Boasts of Picture House Worth $25,000.

WINNEMUCCA, Nev., has a population of only 2,500, but it can boast of a moving picture theater that called for a total investment of $25,000 to erect. It is known as the American theater and is owned by H. C. Oastler and C. W. Muller. The accompanying illustration shows the reader what the theater looks like, and, although we have received no photographs of the interior, we have not the least doubt that it has just as clean cut an appearance as the exterior.

Reinforced concrete has been used throughout in the construction of the American. The parquet floor has a seating capacity of 350, while the balcony accommodates 150. The building has a frontage of 32 feet and a depth of 125 feet. In regard to ventilation the management in planning the theater had a system installed which changes the air every six minutes, and the audience leaves the place without that drowsy feeling which usually overcomes one when inhaling impure air. Patrons are just as refreshed after a show as they were when they entered the American—and even more so, because the entertainment is always good and clean.

There is a throw of 105 feet to the screen. In the operating room can be found two Power's 6B machines, a Westinghouse motor generator set, a spotlight and other up-to-date equipment. There are not many towns in this country the size of Winnemucca that can talk about having a picture house as beautiful and up to date as the American.

New Theater at Endicott, N. Y.

Will Open in the Early Summer—Will Be One of the Prettiest House in Upper New York.

THE contract for the erection of the Lyric theatre in Endicott, N. Y., has recently been let. The house, which will be ready for occupancy in the early summer, will be of modern construction and will have none but the very best and latest equipment. The building will be 55 by 100 feet and will consist of a stage, auditorium, mezzanine and balcony. The seating capacity will be almost eight hundred. The view of spectators will be uninterrupted, as there will be no posts or other obstructions. All floors will be of concrete and the chairs will be furnished by the American Seating Company, of Chicago. The mezzanine floor will contain the manager's business office, the women's and men's retiring rooms, and a check room.

Although the building will be made fireproof throughout, special precautions are being made for the safety of the patrons. In the balcony, in addition to the two usual sets of side stairs and landings, another set of stairs will be provided in the rear of the seats and in the center of the house. On the main floor there will be five exits.

The heating and ventilating will be of the most improved hot-air system, allowing for a constant change of air. A motor-driven multivane fan will be used. Provisions are also being made for the installation of a large new pipe organ later on.

The owners of the building, known as the Endicott Theater Company, are Fred A. Dittrich, Endicott, N. Y.; Robert L. Reaves, Kew Gardens, Long Island, N. Y., and Benj. H. Dittrich, recent lessee and manager of the Lyric Theater, Honesdale, Penn. The last named will be given the exclusive management of the enterprise.

Liberty Theater, Butte, Mont.

Has the Distinction of Being One of the Best Equipped Smaller Houses in the State.

ONE of the newest theaters in Butte, Mont., devoted to motion pictures is the Liberty theater located in the Mantle Block on West Broadway and operated by the Liberty Amusement Company, of which M. A. Berger is manager.

The house seats 3,450 and is one of the prettiest and best equipped of the smaller theaters in Montana. The architecture is of the Spanish-Colonial type, the facade of the theater being of glazed terra cotta trimmed with Tuxekan marble. The interior is tastefully decorated, and the entire arrangement is such as to afford not only pleasure to the eye, but the utmost of comfort to the patrons.

A four-piece orchestra, consisting of a baby grand piano, violin, 'cello and clarinet, furnishes the music. The best grade of motion pictures is shown, prices charged being 10 and 15 cents for evenings and 5 and 10 cents for afternoons.

CIPRIANI BROS. REMODEL COLONIAL.

A. and O. Cipriani, proprietors of the Colonial theater, Twenty-fifth and Warwick avenues, Newport News, Va., recently remodeled their house. The alterations cost in the neighborhood of $11,000, and the theater now accommodates both white and colored people. Motion pictures and vaudeville make up the bill; the picture part is changed daily, while the vaudeville is changed once a week. Three shows are given daily. The size of the screen is 12 by 16 feet and the throw is 75 feet. There are 500 seats in the Colonial, and an orchestra of five pieces furnishes the musical accompaniment. Ten cents is the admission price.

The theater is situated at the corner of two of the most important streets in the city, and draws its patronage from a wide area. The front of the Colonial is very pretty in design and worked into the decorative scheme are numerous electric lights which afford brilliant illumination. In the lobby there are statues holding artistic electric lights which not only add to the appearance of the place, but increase considerably the lighting effects. The Colonial is under the management of James Tierno.

ELITE THEATER, JACKSON, TENN., REMODELED.

After a residence of six years in Los Angeles, Cal., Capt. W. D. Ament has returned to Jackson, Tenn., and has again resumed charge of the Elite theater here, which after being closed for two weeks was reopened on April 19 under his management. A balcony has been added, dressing rooms built under the stage, and many other features introduced which afford comfort and pleasure to the patrons and players, as, in addition to the best grade of motion pictures, vaudeville also constitutes a part of the program.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Helping the Others.

FREQUENTLY in sending in material for this department exhibitors write in a tone suggestive of the fear that their interest will be misunderstood and that others will suppose them to be actuated by selfish motives in submitting their work. This is an excess of sensitiveness. That man is not normal who does not take an honest pride in his work and who does not appreciate the approval of others, but this is not egotism, and it is a mistake to look at the situation in that light. Take Ralph Ruffner, for example. He knows his work is good, better than the average, and it does not hurt his feelings in the least to be told so, in print or by letter. But it is not merely a desire for approval that causes him to pay postage on his examples. Long ago he received all the praise he could want, and he does not come in for more. He has the advertising intelligence to know that his work is good and he is generous enough to pass the help along to others. He knows that he himself has benefited from the examples given in this department, and he knows that his examples will help others. There is no room for the comparison of the work of the best advertisers today with that of these and other men when this department was started, more than five years ago, and we are glad to know that this department has been responsible in no small degree for this improvement, not because of what we have written as because of the practical help given exhibitors through these pages, not alone in ideas but in methods and concrete examples of setting. We mention Ralph Ruffner because he has been unusually well represented in this department and because we have to jack him up about every so often when he falls asleep and forgets to send in stuff. We have to write him an insulting letter about every six weeks on the subject of laziness to keep him in action, and he is in one of his deep sleeps right now. He is not looking for press work and press work would do him no particular good, but he has the enthusiasm of a real workman for his work and he likes to pass his hints along. Don't stay out just because you are afraid of being called a press agent. You can be called lots worse names than that. If you have a good idea, shoot it in for the benefit of the craft.

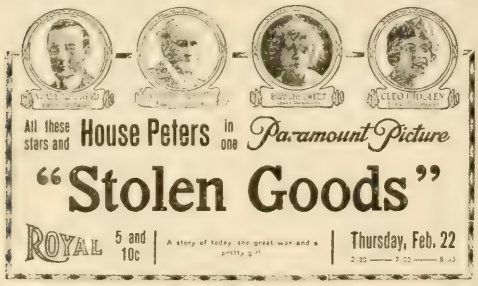
Mr. Jefferson's Advertising.

Geoffrey Jefferson, of the Royal, Calumet, Mich., sends in a big batch of newspaper work with the reminder that once we said his advertising lacked punch. He wants to know if it has improved. He has, in spots, but there are some other spots. For one thing, we notice a tendency to work the Bleich personal recommendation. Every few days he comes out with a "Don't miss this. Jefferson." That is not Mr. Bleich's way. When he signs "Bleich it is to something with a sting to it. Mr. Jefferson has the idea without the punch. Take this, for instance:

> Here's a picture the critics speak very highly of—it's what we believe is a fine picture. Don't miss it. Jefferson.

There is no pull to this. People may know that Mr. Jefferson means what he says and trust to his statements, but here the best he can say is that the critics speak well of it. Here a quotation from the critic would be better than his own recommendation. He does this in one instance, but only in one. He should keep that "Jefferson" for the big punches. He says, "Don't miss this," so often that it would seem that people might get tired of the urging and ignore it.

Here is a three-column, four-inch advertisement. Just where House Peters gets off on this deal is problematical. From the advertisement



All these stars and House Peters in one Paramount Picture
"Stolen Goods"
ROYAL 5 and 10c
A story of today, the great war and a pretty girl
Thursday, Feb. 22

the stranger could not tell whether Mr. Peters is the big star or the also ran. The sole description comes at the bottom and reads "A story of today, the great war and a pretty girl." That doesn't sound interesting. There is nothing in that to make the reader feel that he simply had to go and see that attraction. Film followers will appreciate the all-star cast, but it means nothing to a person who is not more than nine-tenths ready to go anyway. There must have been something in the film better worth talking about. Since there were but four cuts for five stars, it would have been better to have dropped the cuts and to have used type for an eighteen or twenty-four point "Five Big Stars" with the names of the five players running below, then the title in a three or four line letter and some twelve point argument that would pull even the indifferent in. Or the names of the five stars would have been set to the left of the advertisement in the same type as used for House Peters and with an "and" in between each pair of names then an "All in ———" leading over to the text to the right with some reason as to why it was a five-star play. The punch lies in the idea conveyed in an advertisement and not in its typographical beauty. Good typesetting helps, but only the idea will pull.

Here is another example, better, but still not good. It is the top part of three nines. Now the pull does not lie in the fact that Jesse L. Lasky presents the ever fresh and pleasing Blanche Sweet in "The Storm." That is the fact, but the punch lies in the story itself. Take that cut of Miss Sweet in the center, at the top. Run as big a pair of fists as the office owns one on either side of her, the index fingers pointing at her. Below run a line, 'This girl slipped once. Has she the right to be happy?" Get that across the three columns, in two lines if necessary. Now they will read down the advertisement to find out the rest, which might be run in the Brisbane editorial style with a lot of caps and bold face, leading down to star and title. That would have a punch. As it is then you have to be interested in Miss Sweet to read down. The question as to her right to happiness will attract the man who does not even know who Miss Sweet is.

An advertisement for "Under Cover" tells the stars and adds that the play made a hit on Broadway—as, of course, all plays do in advertisements. Then he adds that it is "exceptional" and "unusual," but he uses these terms so often that they mean little or nothing. There is nothing about the play itself other than comment upon its Broadway success and the public long since learned that there is nothing more unsafe as a gauge than a Broadway run. There must have been some sort of press work around the theater to tell more of the production, and lines could have been lifted to make up an advertisement with punch. The layout is good, but the text is poor because it does not enthuse. The trouble with most of these advertisements is that too much dependence is placed upon the stars and the title, whether the title is known or not. The announcements are perfunctory. John Jones in "This or That" and nothing that tells what the play is.

In the copy for 'The Eternal City," for example, but passing mention is made of the fact that some of the scenes were made in the gardens of the Vatican, though this fact would draw the Catholic population. There is little effort made to pick up and play up the talking points.

In the same way an advertisement for "Ashes and Embers" starts off

> Pauline Frederick
> Is One of the Foremost Stars of the Stage and Screen
> Now Appearing in > Paramount Pictures.

Then comes a few lines of eight point and "The name of this Paramount picture is ———" and the title follows. Here the dual role suggests a catchline or a line can be picked up from the contrasting nature of the parts played, for example:

She Stole for Her Sister whom she loved in spite of the fact that she was a butterfly who was happy when

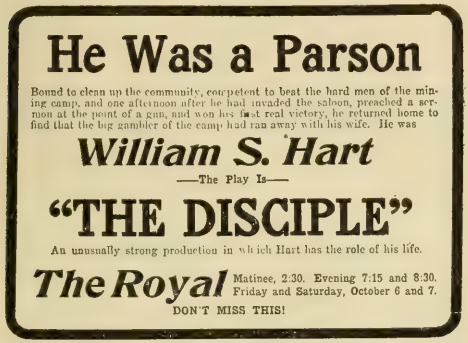
SHE MARRIED A MILLIONAIRE,

Though, as events proved, the poor sister made a far better choice.

Something like that would attract attention and permit the reader to be led down to the fact that it was "Ashes of Embers."

Another advertisement for "The Eternal City," three fcurs, gives star and title and merely "The drama that created more discussion than any other play of the past half century. Here's one you cannot afford to miss, Jefferson." The drama is not the most discussed play of the past fifty years, and merely saying so will not help. Something should have been said to tell why it was a great play.

And yet Mr. Jefferson now and then comes up to the mark with something that sticks. Look at this for Bill Hart. The top line gets



He Was a Parson
Bound to clean up the community, competent to beat the hard men of the mining camp, and one afternoon after he had invaded the saloon, preached a sermon at the point of a gun, and won his first real victory, he returned home to find that the big gambler of the camp had run away with his wife. He was

DON'T MISS THIS!

attention, even though the reader may not know of Hart. If he does, then it gets still more attention. This advertisement really tells something. It makes one want to see the play and get all of the incidents.

And all of this applies to much of the stuff that comes to our desk. We are making Mr. Jefferson the goat because he does not ask for criticism and then grows peeved when he gets it. No advertisement is a good advertisement unless it interests the man who does not care for pictures. He is the person you need to reach. The fans will come anyhow. Get the man who just happens to glance at the advertising.

That Mr. Jefferson knows a good thing is shown by the fact that he has a monogram patterned after that used by the Stillman theater. It works well in the display, but he needs to back it up with talk about the films—punchy talk, and punch is merely a synonym for interest.

Good to Copy.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, N. Y., has something new once more. Instead of the time table, the title of each feature is followed by the times of showing. The titles are in 24 point and the time in an eight, thus:

Sessue Hayakawa
in Each to His Kind
Screened at 7 and 9:30

Edna Mayo
in
The Chaperone
Screened at 8:30

The one reel comedies are not timed, but are left to play with. This is a better idea than the time table at the bottom, and "screened" is a better word than "shown."

Pittsburgh Kids.

Rowland and Clark, instead of giving kid matinees at their Pittsburgh houses, add a special feature for the kiddies to the regular bill at the Liberty. A recent dual program was The Prince and the Pauper and Idle Wives. Probably it would have helped to have served ice cream and pickles as refreshments. Idle Wives is no running mate for the Mark Twain story. Each has its place, but not on the same bill.

Campaign Books.

Two campaign books come in from Tarleton Winchester, of the Pathe Exchange, and they are good examples of what should be. One is for the five reel feature "Mayblossom" and the other for the serial "The Double Cross." Both are books 8 by 11 inches, done on white paper in black ink with a tint page cover. This carries an ornamental design, but all the rest is strictly for use and not for display. It is not gotten out to sell film to the Exhibitor. That is attended to through other mediums. This is prepared to help the Exhibitor sell film to his patrons, and that is what a campaign book should be. The book is wire stitched at the top and the pages are perforated just below the binding so that any page may be removed without disturbing the rest.

Both books follow the same general line. It leads off with a page of general directions, follows with sample cuts and then come suggestions for advertisements, ready set. These are not made up with a mass of fancy type faces no average printer carries, but are all done with material any office can duplicate or at least approximate from its case. This is a point where many books fall down. They give beautiful advertisement, but they are not practical save in the larger offices. The press work for "Mayblossom" is all imitation typewriter, numbered in the order in which they should be released. In the sample page reproduced it will be noted that number one is at the bottom of the page instead of at the top, that it may be torn off first. This holds good throughout the book. For the serial, to save space, the matter for press copy is set in Roman eight point that is legible and better copy than most that comes in. No printer will kick at a good eight point, especially if it is leaded.

But this is merely the mechanical aspect of the press matter. The point of greater interest is that the stuff is the same sort of stuff that a trained house agent would write. It is not prepared to the greater glory of Pathe at the expense of the Exhibitor and his business. It is written for the benefit of the Exhibitor in the way the Exhibitor would write it himself if he happened to be a trained man. It is press stuff and not junk.

You should get one of these campaign books for each Pathe feature when you book the film. The exchange has a copy for you and it will pay you to insist upon getting it for it is the sort of stuff calculated to make business. It is all prepared on the general proposition that if you make business on one Pathe you will book more and the more money they help you to make the more eager you will be to get more and the more constant will be your patronage. These Pathe books are in the form all campaign books should be—the only form permitting the material to be used as needed without copying and without disarranging the rest of the material.

Did Not Scare Them.

We asked the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., to let us know how that advertisement for a live mouse affected the feminine attendance, and C. D. Buss writes that it had no effect at all. He says:

> I wanted a mouse for a little novelty stunt I wanted to place in the lobby of the theater and afterward photgraph it for Moving Pictures. No one brought us a mouse to this date and we have none around the theater and at home I have been unable to catch any; it may be that we have none. But I suppose some day one will visit us and then——. The ad had no effect on our feminine attendance, which was a surprise to me. In fact I heard of very few comments. Evidently I tried to stir up something dead.

Possibly the advertisement in the program was what spoiled the stunt. Now suppose that the local paper carries an advertisement for a live mouse to be delivered at a certain address. The editor sends a reporter to see who wants a live mouse. It is Mr. Buss's home address, and the matter is so reported in a half column story in the paper. Perhaps there would be something doing then, and the mouse would be well advertised before his debut in the lobby. It may not be too late yet to work the scheme. If desired, the street number of the theater may be used.

Helps the Printer.

Lately we asked if any exhibitors took their copies of this department to the printer for his study. The first reply came from W. A. Bach, of the Publicity Department of the Canada Universal Film Co. Mr. Bach writes:

> In the last issue of the Motion Picture World I noted the attached paragraph and thought it would be interesting for you to know that we have for sometime now been passing over the advertising section of the World to our printers, so that they may gain ideas therefrom, not only for our own work but that of the exhibitors whose business they handle and I know that they have found your department very, very valuable in getting out moving picture advertising material.

The Canadian is the across the border branch of the Universal and it is gratifying to know that this live wire bunch have been using the scheme, for they have built their own little house organ from a cheap four pager into a real magazine. Take the pages over to the printer,

In his trade publications he gets all sorts of examples and specimens, but this department gives him examples from the best advertisers of film and amusement advertising is seldom covered in the printer's trade papers, save in a most general way. Let him see how film advertising is set and handled and he'll give you a better job if he is any sort of a printer.

Green and Good.

Irvin A. Erdman, of the Princess, Douglas, Wyoming, got out a throwaway in green on white paper for St. Patrick's Day, as did many others. But his text read:

St. Patrick
Drove the Snakes out of Ireland
Charlie Chaplin
Drove the gloom out of the Movies.

It is just a little touch, but it brought a smile that started the reader down the sheet with a feeling that there must be something funny about the show. Remember the stunt for March will come again next year.

Neatly Done.

F. H. Warnicker, of the Regent, Montreal, sends in a souvenir program gotten out for their first anniversary. It is in singularly good taste. The stock is gray, printed in black, with a touch of orange red, not much more than the border, but just enough to give color. The front merely carries the house name and the announcement of the anniversary and the date. Page two offers the program and on page three is an appreciation. There is nothing on the fourth page. It is all sober and dignified, cordial and yet dignified. It is tasteful in the extreme, both as to text and preparation. An anniversary should, above all other events, be marked by a spirit of dignity and appreciation and Mr. Warnicker has sounded precisely the right note.

From Mr. Bleich.

"Snow White" seems to have been blowing things up all along the line from the 65,000 audience in Kansas City down to the small towns. Mr. Bleich recently played it at the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., and he

In order not to be "rough" on the little folks, I am making the admission price to them for the afternoon shows on both MONDAY and TUESDAY 5c

I want every child in Owensboro to see this beautiful picture. There may be many who cannot afford a nickel and the Mother the 15c. Come right along in such event and enjoy "Snow White" as my guest. used the free admission idea as part of his campaign. Something new was an offer to reserve seats in blocks of five or more at the matinees, assuring parents seats without delay. We'll be willing to bet that 'Snow White" has cleaned up more real cash for exhibitors than any sex play put on the screen, and it leaves good business instead of wrecked houses behind. Mr. Bleich seems to have done his share.

Correct.

Here is something for other press agents to read. The Standard Film Corporation, Kansas City, sends out a plain sheet of white paper with a narrow red border. It was typewritten on some duplicating apparatus of the multigraph type. It starts off:

ART DRAMA BULLETIN.

This is not an attractive letter. Experience has taught us that the exhibitor whose minutes count for money would prefer to receive a plain sheet of paper like this containing a simple statement of facts than a melody of fancy phrases and confusion of truths. So we send you this ordinary sheet of paper covered with plain facts.

That is precisely what so many press agents do not realize. They get out all sorts of stuff except readable stuff. We just dropped into the basket a sheet the size of a one sheet, printed on both sides and in two colors. It would have taken two men to handle it while reading and it would have taken an hour to read. The Standard gives plain facts in ten point typewriting, and you can hold it in one hand and read it with one eye if you want to and when you are done you know all they have to tell you about Art Drama pictures. It cost pennies where the other job cost dollars and it will bring a hundred times the results, because it is handy and plain. We think most exhibitors prefer brevity and clarity to three color printing and blanket sheets. How about it?

More Than That.

Rollie R. Painter describes himself as the operator at the Jenkins theater, Jenkins, Ky., but he is more than an operator. He is an advertising man with ideas, and they are scarcer than operators. He has taken over the "Murder" bill recently shown here, touching it up a bit, and as payment sends in one of his own. If you don't get that small type in the cut it reads "Hello, Billy, are you going to see that great World Film Sunday, featuring Reine Davies, the great Movie Star?"

Another good piece of matter, though more expensive, is a menu card for "Marriage a la Carte," which gives the suggestion for the menu, though this is table d'hote and not the a la carte bill. It is too long to give here, but it is gotten up in menu form and gives the various courses such as Peaches en Cream, a la Young Kimball Clara. A good text for something to hand out reads:

Coroner's Cocktail.

Mix three chorus girls with as many men and soak well in champagne until midnight; squeeze into an auto, add a dash of joy, a drunken chauffeur, shake well and serve at 90 miles an hour.

Mr. Painter is a new chum to the department, but we hope that he keeps on coming in. We think he must be something of a printer, too, for he never got a country job office to turn out his classy letterheads and envelopes.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. uestions should be stated clearly and should be typewrittne or written with pen and ink. A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Mystery for Serials.

SPEAKING of the meager success of a current serial, one of the most adroit producers of the part-story exposed the entire mechanism of the serial when he remarked that it lacked a mystery. No serial, he pointed out, has ever succeeded without a mystery to hold it together. The common suspense is not sufficient to hold interest through two or twenty or more parts. It is not possible to hold interest in the outcome for that length of time through the ordinary devices. There must be a mystery unless the serial is episodic and there is a new mystery and consequently a new factor of suspense in each part. Several writers of late have commented upon the fact that there is a masked character in so many plays; a masked mystery standing as the concrete form of the suspense. Look over the list of serials that have made money and you will find in each either the actual mask or its equivalent. It is a general rule of writing that a story may continue to interest only so long as the suspense is permitted to grow. It is not sufficient to maintain suspense. It must constantly increase. To pyramid the suspense through fifteen parts would result in a situation so big that it would take a thousand feet of leader, more or less, to get the explanations over at the end. For this reason some concrete, visible figure of mystery is introduced, whose business it is to replace the accruing suspense and to take upon his or her shoulders the burden of carrying the interest from part to part, as the story unfolds. Make a note of this for reference, and if you have a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay" paste this clipping in, for we believe that this is the first time this matter has been exploited.

Say Please.

Make your business communications courteous. We got a letter the other day that began: "By what right does the Junkum Film Company keep a script of mine seven months? By what right do they refuse to answer my letters?" If the letters to the Junkum company were no more tactful, we do not wonder that the script was not returned. As a matter of fact the Junkum is not a producing but a releasing organization, and the correspondent had no business sending his script there in the first place. Somehow, boob authors get wild ideas about their rights. Bless their pinheaded intelligences, they have no rights. Suppose that we put this transaction in a different light. There is a man by the name of Smith who lives in our block. Word gets around that he wants to buy a bushel of potatoes. Jones, a farmer, hears of this and dumps a load of potatoes on Smith's doorstep with word to the effect that Smith can either buy them or send them back. Under the law Jones would have absolutely no claim against Smith if Smith got angry and kicked the potatoes into the gutter. How much less claim would Jones have if he put the potatoes on our steps instead of Smith's. We never even said we wanted potatoes and Jones has no business cluttering up our front steps. For "potatoes" read "scripts" and the situation should not be very materially changed. Now if Jones came around and started to curse because we did not hire a man to watch his potatoes we would call a policeman. But the author thinks he can damn the Junkum company for not returning his script, when he has not the slightest claim save that of courtesy and forfeits this when he is not himself courteous. Say "please" and "thanks." It costs nothing and helps a lot.

Changing the Theme.

Minor variations will not make a story more available. If you see a story in which an old will is hidden in a clock, it will not be a sufficient variation to have the will hidden in a book or an arm chair. You must get a strong variant in order to get a new plot. This is the simplest form of example, but in the same way you cannot change the minor points in any of the better known plots and have something new. There must be a complete change; one sufficiently well marked to assure the editor that the story will look entirely unlike the basic theme. This is an error that too many authors make. If there are new factors in the story they argue that it must be a new story. This is not the case. Many stories are sent out merely because the author has seen a way to modify his foundation plot, and he does not realize that his story lacks newness in idea. You see old ideas worked over on the screen, but it is studio work and not paid-for material. Always remember that.

Beauty Spots.

Edward Akester writes he thinks he will have trouble getting rid of a story in which the heroine has smallpox, and becomes pockmarked. We don't think so. We know darned well he will. It's a sheer waste of time to ask a leading woman to look ugly. She simply won't, and the modern play is nothing without closeups, and a pockmarked closeup would be far from a pretty thing. Stories such as this should be done into fiction form. They simply will not sell for visual presentation. Stars want to look pretty all the time, because their beauty is often their chief asset, and to spoil their looks will often have an effect reaching far beyond the current picture. This holds almost as good in the case of men stars, for only character actors delight in make-up parts.

Tabloid.

One author writes that he has reduced the chapters of "Technique of the Photoplay" to a set of rules, which he keeps on his desk for ready reference. Another has a loose leaf book into which he enters all the material he finds especially helpful, and this he reads over now and then as a brain freshener. For the latter a loose leaf book should be used with pages of a size to go into the typewriter carriage. There should be an indent of at least ten spaces to the right to provide a margin should the book be permanently bound later on. There are many forms of tabloid notes to be used, all of which materially aid the student.

Mark Off Fine Arts.

Mark Fine Arts off your list of studio addresses. The work of that studio has been taken over by Ince and will be handled from Culver City, which does not mean that you stand any better chance of selling scripts to the Ince companies than you did before.

Good if True.

At this writing there has been no formal announcement, but it is rumored in Los Angeles that Triangle is going to go in for one and two reel dramas, with which to vary the feature program. If they are, it is good news, for all that is needed is some really good ones and twos in sufficient numbers to make a reliable program, and the mixed bill, on which the success of photoplay was founded, will return. And ones and twos mean a better market for the free lance, so root for ones and twos.

Writing for Helen.

Phil Lang, in writing concerning a story rejected as not suited for the Helen series, writes an author as to the company's wants. Much might be applied to other companies making a special line of pictures. The correspondent wrote that he sent in a story to Kalem "because it was a railroad plot." That was all it was, and Mr. Lang wrote:

> The ordinary railroad story does not appeal to us. Each plot must be based upon a daring exploit of the girl telegrapher, and as we have made a couple of hundred of these already there is litle we have not used. We do not expect the outside writer to keep in mind all of these plots, but he should at least be certain that the stunt which forms the basis of the plot is sufficiently thrilling to be out of the ordinary. We have no use for plots without this punch. We do not write a railroad play and then put in a stunt, but rather we find a stunt and that suggests its own plot. We want the plot with the stunt when we buy from the outside, but we are primarily buying stunt ideas. And you must remember that Helen has jumped from bridges to moving trains so often that this is no longer regarded as a stunt, but rather as regular business. This also holds true of the jump to a train to do some eleventh-hour switching. We have gone far beyond the stage where either of these frayed-out thrills will be accepted as the reason for a story. It must be something new and daring—something that only Helen is apt to undertake.

In the same way, it is to be noted that other companies with special production kinks do not want any story along the general lines of their productions, but only real novelties.

Reasons.

Next to wanting checks, the best reason for not writing scripts is because you want to write a story for your film hero or heroine. Just because you are infatuated with an actor is no reason why you should become an author, yet this serves as the inspiration in an incredible number of instances. Don't do it.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Knocks at the Door.

E. F. Roberts, San Angelo, Texas, says:

As I have been a reader of the Moving Picture World and the Handbook and have been absorbing the good things contained in them for lo these many years, I feel it is my turn to knock at your door and present a few offerings. I am working for the Lyric theater of this city. We run a feature every day, and the films reach us in very good condition with the exception of a few mis-frames which I find, for the most part, to be in the dissolving scenes. I find it very easy to patch dissolving scenes in frame by folding the dissolving end back until you reach the full size picture, whereupon by placing the dividing lines together, holding same firmly with one hand, and trace to the end of the dissolving film you can cut it off acording to the dividing lines of the other film. You will not have to fold back more than six feet at the most.

And now here is another idea. Some time back I ran a feature which had about 100 feet of the sprocket holes enlarged so that I could not keep my lower loop. Now don't you dare say that the idler was not set right, or the sprockets were worn, because this was on a new machine. (I won't say that, Brother Roberts, but how about the take-up tension? Was it too tight? He! He! He! Got you there, Old Top, didn't I? Ed.) The first and last time this occurred I did not want to cut all of this out, so I took the name plate off, so I could make my lower loop about four feet long, and by the time the damaged film had gotten through I would have the right size loop. However you cannot do this on every machine. I am running a Power's Six A.

And now (whisper) turn to page 273 of the new Handbook, and you will see there is a mix-up in letters. For instance: You have A where B should be.

Yes, Friend Roberts, that seems to be right, though I had not noticed it before. Fortunately, however, it is not anything very serious. How it happened the good Lord only knows—and he won't tell.

As to the cutting of the film, the sketch makes it very plain as to what Brother Roberts means. I haven't a piece of dissolving film here, but presume what he has reference to is that the dense part all develops out black so that you cannot see the dividing line. The suggestion is therefore of value. The loop stunt, however, I cannot quite agree with. If the damaged part will go through the top sprocket and the intermittent sprocket, then by golly it ought to go through the lower sprocket, and what is more it will go through if the idler is set right, if the sprocket is in line with the aperture and the tension take-up properly adjusted.

I am very glad to hear from you, my brother. I don't know just where San Angelo is, but hope I shall have the pleasure of forming your personal acquaintance when I visit Texas in my trip. I shall stop in many Texas cities.

Martin Heaves a Bomb.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., proceeds to disturb the calm, peace and repose of the screen situation once more. I am publishing Bro. Martin's letter because I think these matters ought, in justice to the moving picture industry, to be thoroughly and completely discussed. I cannot agree with friend Martin if he means to say that all metallic surface screens are inefficient in the way he sets forth, because not all metallic surface screens set up direct reflection in any degree, but must, nevertheless, say that in my opinion what Martin says does apply to some screens—screens for instance which have too smooth a surface. I have to confess I am somewhat puzzled in this matter, because, whereas the atmospheric screen presents a quite smooth surface, it unquestionably does give good results without any apparent direct reflection. The screen question is, as Brother Rembusch has said, a big proposition. Friend Martin holds forth as follows:

My Dear Richardson:

That screen discussion in issue of March 3 last is certainly interesting; also it is important. I have full respect for the knowledge and experience of the screen manufacturers mentioned in that article, but am going to give my own views, even though I be regarded as a busher; also to further outline the policy of my own optical and mechanical investigations.

I have always agreed almost identically with your own ideas on screens as set forth in the handbook and the department, but in which I will add the following: The most efficient (mark the italics) screen surface is one which reflects the light by an action which is wholly diffuse, or as near so as it can practically be made, in other words a perfectly white plaster surface. It is only when the reflection from the screen is made perfectly diffuse that it is possible for the eye of the spectator to become accurately focused at the actual screen surface, where the picture really is, and thus produce perfect optical conditions for the eye of the spectator.

But if the screen surface is made semi-diffuse, or semi-reflecting, which terms are intended to mean a condition which will give both diffuse and regular reflection, then the eye of the spectator is of necessity forced to attempt to focus both at the actual screen surface, where the diffuse reflection has its origin, and at points nearer or beyond the screen, where the regular reflection tends to lead it. But the human eye cannot focus at more than one point without causing eye strain, hence the evil, or real inefficiency of a screen surface which produces regular reflection in any degree. I do not believe there is a screen made, having metal or any other shiny substance as part of its surface composition, which does not produce a certain amount of regular reflection. They are called more efficient because they produce a brighter illumination with a given amperage; but the brighter illumination is not true picture light at all. It is merely glare produced by regular reflection from the metallic surface of the screen, and, not having its focal origin at the screen surface, it cannot transmit any real picture impression to the eye of the spectator; also it causes eye strain for reasons already noted.

I do not hesitate to say that the idea of producing the greatest screen illumination with the least amperage is a wholly false conception of both the terms efficiency and economy, as applied to screen construction. In my opinion a screen surface is efficient when it meets primarily the optical requirements of the eye of the spectator, both in regard to eliminating eye strain and the elimination of extraneous light which does not emanate from the picture at all, and thus diminishes its artistic and realistic value. Such an efficient screen surface can be had only by securing a total diffusion of light from its surface to the eye of the spectator, which means a pure white surface with no shine. The surface can be either fine or coarse matter, to meet the light distribution requirements of different houses, but there should be NO SHINE.

But, it may be objected, with the present optical system it would be impossible to secure enough light to make a sufficiently bright picture on such a non-reflecting screen surface under most conditions found in practice, and this is true at the present time. But if the fruits of a year or so of past effort to perfect the optical system are allowed to mature, there is every reason to hope that the optical system can and will be made twice as efficient as we now find it, and this increased illumination should all be utilized on a non-reflective screen before the idea of economizing in current is considered.

If it is true that the screen is the "heart of the theater," that heart is more closely connected with and dependent upon the optical comfort of the spectators and the artistic and realistic appearance of the picture than it is with any idea of efficiency of economy which aims to give merely the greatest amount of light with the least possible current.

Honestly Brother Martin, I feel sorry for you. It is said a woman consists principally of "a rag and a bone and a hank of hair." Well, there won't be even that much left of you when the screen men get through bombarding you with 16-inch language guns. If you need burial, call on Uncle Dudley and I will see that you are properly laid away—no flowers. I am interested to know what our friends the screen manufacturers will have to say in this matter. Martin's definition of efficiency rings true.

How Much It Cost.

I wonder if the average theater manager ever got out his stub of lead pencil, a sheet of brown paper and put his intellect on to the job of figuring out how much it would cost to keep his projecting machine in absolutely perfect mechanical repair.

Don't you think, Mr. Theater Manager, that you could keep both your projecting machines in perfect mechanical condition for $70.00 a year? Well, $70.00 a year is 19 1/6c per day. Remembering you are running films through your machines which contains the art of the best artists the world has ever known, in productions which cost as high as $100,000.00 and that reels of film are worth $125.00 each, and that anything less than perfect mechanical condition in your machine will injure all this as well as the result upon your screen, do you really think you can afford to have a machine that is anything less than in perfect condition, when the insignificent sum of $1.40 per week will keep both machines in perfect condition? You are paying anywhere from $50 to $150 per week, or perhaps even more than that, for film service. Don't you really, away down in the bottom of your soul, see that it would be a good business proposition to spend as small a sum as $1.40 per week in keeping your machinery in perfect mechanical condition, to the end that the film service which you are paying so much for may be put on the screen in the best possible way, to say nothing of doing justice to the art of the artist, the work of the producers and to your audience?

Think it over, Mr. Manager. It is something you can well afford to pay attention to. It is a point well worth your most earnest consideration, and for your own good and the moving picture industry, I would sincerely recommend that you expend several atoms of gray matter in its careful consideration.

A Careful Man.

In New Orleans, I was handed a wall placard by Brother Glucksman, reading: "Best Known Safety Device Is The Careful Man." There was never a sentence which contained a greater truth than this. No matter how excellent may be the projecting apparatus, or how thoroughly it may be equipped with automatic or other kinds of safety devices; no matter how careful its port shutters may be suspended by means of well placed film fuse links, or how thoroughly fire proof the operating room may be, the fact still remains that the very best safety device in the entire equipment is "A Careful Man" in charge.

Outside of fires which occur by reason of defects in film, which the operator did not have opportunity to eliminate, nine fires out of every ten are due, in one way or another, to pure, unadulterated carelessness on the part of the operator, and the careful operator, provided he be not compelled to leave his machine in order to thread, trim carbons, or rewind, will never have a severe fire, even though there be film defect, because, being right there on the job he will instantly put the fire out by a sharp blowing of the breath at the aperture In his four years of operating the writer has burnt more than one hole in a film, but that was all it amounted to, because, taken in time it is an extremely simple matter to blow out a blaze at the aperture, though if it once gets beyond the aperture it is quite another matter.

The careless man has no business in an operating room. He is dangerous both to the property intrusted to his care, and to the audience. The careful man is, as the placard says, the best safety device known to science.

Mercury Arc Rectifier in Operating Room.

All over the Southeast, including Arkansas, I find a surprising number of Mercury Arc Rectifiers located in the operating rooms, and that, too, without any protection at all against the ghostly green light from the tube flooding the operating room. This is worse than bad. In the first place, it is much better to have the rectifier located outside of operating room, because of the fact that in many instances, due to a loose core laminations, or improperly clamped laminations, or the current not being of the cycle for which the rectifier is built, the rectifier gives off considerable noise, and noise in an operating room is objectionable, particularly where the iron or asbestos type of room is used, because with such rooms all noises are sent directly out into the auditorium. Moreover, the experienced operator judges of the performance of his projector very largely by sense of sound, and the less noise in the operating room the more quickly he will notice anything unusual in the operation of the machine. But, in any event if the rectifier is to be located inside the operating room, it is imperative that it be enclosed in a ventilated closet, which will confine its light and prevent it from lighting the operating room proper, because if the operating room is flooded with light it is utterly impossible for the operator to see the faint shadows on his screen, or judge of the sharpness of the focus of his picture.

Clever Stunt.

At the Crystal theater, Little Rock, Ark., Henry N. Burke, chief operator, has inclosed the light ray by means of a metal cone suspended as shown in the accompanying photograph. You will note that the entire light ray is inclosed, there not even being a colored glass in the side of the shield. Brother Burke said, "I don't want any glass, because, with the spot entirely hidden, one learns to handle the light by observing effects on the screen." And in this he is thoroughly and completely correct. The cone is a clever and effective arrangement in that it is lifted off instantly, when desired, and may be laid aside out of the way.

A Joke.

The Editor has, during the first 5,000 miles of the present trip, had occasion to talk with a great many perfectly respectable young ladies, the conversation being one-sided and lasting from one-half to two or three hours. He insists on faithful transcript of aforesaid conversation being kept, the same being the matter that goes into the Department, and description of his trip, published in another part of the paper. In other words, he refers to the hotel stenographer, and, gentlemen, if you see in what form the words I feed into the hopper some times come out at the other end of the mill, you would raise your hands to heaven, yank the beard of the prophet, and call down the curse of Allah on the tribe sur-named Hotel Stenographers. For example: To the present one (am adding this long-hand) I dictated "The operating room is flooded with ghostly green light from the tube," meaning the rectifier tube. It came out: "The operating room is flooded with ghastly green light from the tomb." Ugh! Honestly, would you laugh or swear? Above you will find this sentence, "Yank the beard of the prophet." The dear soul made it, "Yank the beard of the profit." If I, myself, had a beard at starting, I would have pulled it all out by the roots long since.

Three-Wire System.

Arthur J. Payette, Mittineague, Mass., writes as follows:

I am a regular reader of your Department, and in the latest edition of your Handbook, which I consider as being a very valuable adjunct to my work. The system for waxing first-run film works very fine, and I think that piece of information from the book is worth a great deal more than the $4.00 I paid for it.

I have a question which I had put up to me, but could not find the correct answer in the book, it is: With Three-Wire System and an arc lamp both sides, one pulling 60 amps. and the other 70—that being all the current consuming apparatus on the whole system—suppose the neutral fuse blew out. Would there be any effect? Would lights go out?

No, the lights would not go out. Yes, there should be an effect, and the effect would be to force the arc lamp pulling 60 amps. to work at a higher amperage and at the same time it would still designate the amperage of the other lamp. With arc lamps this would do no particular damage, but, if incandescent, there would be a different story to tell, because the lamps on the 60-amp. side would be compelled to work above the candle power and that would very quickly shorten their life and burn out immediately.

Chicago's Trouble.

M. B. Watson, Bartlesville, Oklahoma, comes in with the following:

In answer to your request for comments on Chicago's trouble, page 1916, March 24th issue, would say, he describes the trouble I have had, identically, except I use a Wagner Converter, Line 110 V. Single Phase. D. C. Line 55 V. 50 A.

As I understand it, the Martin is a Poly Phase machine, therefore he is no doubt using 220 volts, or maybe a little in excess.

As to the longitudinal cracks in the carbon, you say you don't think this phase of the matter amounts to anything, one way or the other. But it does, according to my observations, it is the cracks that affects the amperage, instead of amperage raising or lowering of its own accord. The light is effected to a very great extent on the screen and there seems to be nothing one can do but to wait till it gets good and ready to come back as it should, the conditions are just as Chicago describes them. Surely a ¾-inch carbon could not be overloaded on 60 amps. I also had the trouble of the arc leaving the center of the lower carbon. I could do nothing with it, either, but wait for it to right itself. As to the cracks raising the amperage, the only reason I can give for it is, the arc has a greater surface to work upon there by increasing the load and decreasing the energy at the crater resulting in very poor illumination of the screen.

After cleaning and tightening all connections the trouble still existed. My remedy was as follows:

For the upper I use a ⅝ Spanish Carbon, the name of which I do not know, not being a Spaniard, I can't read what it says, but here it is: COMPANIA FABRIL DE CARBONE'S ELECTRIOS-MARCIA SIRITS. They are a fine grain carbon and those religion-losing cracks are missing, too, and I have yet to find one without a core, something I can't say for some of the American-made carbons. And for the negative I use the Speer Holdark Carbon, which does just as the name says, viz.: hold the arc in its proper place. And now I am getting as good results as possible under my present conditions. I intend to have the pleasure of meeting you in Muskogee, Okla., April 6, if it is possible for me to get away. I hope Chicago will profit by what I have said, as I know it is what Sherman said war was to have the arc to act that way.

With regard to Watson's contention that longitudinal cracks in the carbon raise and lower the amperage, why I can't see that, even with a telescope. I would like to have the opinion of operators and carbon manufacturers on this point. I cannot see where longitudinal cracks would appreciably effect carbon resistance. Of course, if it were cracks running around the carbon circumferentially that would instantly increase the resistance, because it would operate a decrease of the cross section of the carbon at that point. No, most decidedly, a ¾-inch carbon would not be over-loaded at sixty amperes, and if I intimated it would, or might be, that was my error, and I doff my hat, make by bow and pull my forelock and most humbly beg pardon.

As to the Spanish carbon, why, I just simply don't know anything about it. In fact, I never heard of the animal. If it is a good carbon, why does it not stand forth and be heard. I wonder what Brother Watson means by "Religion-losing cracks?" Is it possible he uses that horrid thing known as profanity, and thereby endangers the peace, quiet and dignity of the Bartlesville, Oklahoma, community? If so, shame upon him. When these cracks trouble Brother Watson, you should merely say, Oh! fudge, or Gosh-dang-it. That's the way I do (may the Creator forgive the liberty I am taking with the truth).

As to the Holdark carbon, it is a very excellent piece of goods, and much superior to the Cored carbon for negative. By the time this is printed I shall know whether I am to see you in Oklahoma or not (I hope I will) because I am dictating this in Ft. Smith, Arkansas, and tomorrow, the good Lord and the Midland Valley Railroad being willing, I will be in Muskogee.

Noisy Arc.

Bedford, Pa., says:

I am located in a small town, and am operating two Power's Six projectors. Our current supply is A.C., but it seems that my arcs make more noise than other A.C arcs do. I have the third edition of the Handbook and have tried the set you recommend, but find the jack-knife set gives a whiter light, though it causes more noise. At present I am using a new Hallberg compensarc, with cored carbons above and below. Am a reader of the department, and find a large amount of practical information contained therein. I trust you will give this question due consideration.

Yes, Bedford, I certainly will. As I have repeatedly said, the small town man has not the avenues for information open to him which are enjoyed by his city brother, who can confer with many other operators and swap experiences.

You say the jack-knife set gives you a whiter screen than the straight set. Yes, that is probably true. You will find that, on page 298 of the third edition of the Handbook, beginning with the tenth line from the bottom of the second paragraph, I say: "by using the straight up and down lamp set, or the jack-knife set, one is enabled to get a considerable higher candle power through the lens for a given amperage. That is a conceded fact, but the fly in that particular box of ointment is that a steady light absolutely cannot be maintained with these sets, or in other words, the curtain illumination cannot be held at uniform brilliancy." If you are able to use the jack-knife set and maintain a steady, even, uniform illumination, you certainly are a stem-winding wonder, and the only operator I know of who can do it. The regular D.C. set will not give you so white a screen, but, properly handled, it will give you a good illumination, which will be uniform, even and steady all, and not some of the time.

And now as to the noise: You say you are using a new Hallberg "compensarc", with cored carbons above and below. Presumably you mean a Hallberg economizer, or, in other words, low voltage transformer. If this is true (and the noise at the arc apparently proves it to be true) are you certain all the noise is coming from the arc? If your operating room has an iron clad floor, or iron clad walls, then the economizer must not be set within less than 18 inches or two feet of the iron. If it is there is likely to be vibration set up in the iron of the floor or wall, and this vibration will produce a lot of noise, which might sound as though it comes from the arc itself. You say the noise is greater with the jack-nife set than with the D. C. set. This is due to the vibration set up in the carbons themselves, which is apt to be greater when the jack-knife set is used. That is about all I can tell you on that particular subject. My advice to you is to stick to the D. C. set, as per Figure 126, page 300 of the third edition of the Handbook. I shall be glad to help you at any time by answering any legitimate questions which you may see fit to propound.

A Splendid Operating Room.

Responding to an invitation from Manager A. L. Shakman, of the 81st Street theater, Broadway and 81st street, I, in company with my daughter, Nellie, and Brother Will C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, visited the theater recently, intent upon enjoying the show, and examining into the chronometer balance and cylinder escapement of Brother Lobel's projection.

And let me say right now there was nothing to criticise—absolutely nothing at all, so far as the projection was concerned. The 81st Street theater is a really beautiful house, seating, at a guess, close to 2,000 people. Manager Shakman is a real manager, as evidenced by the excellence of the show, the perfection in the projection, and the excellence of the operating room appointments. And right here is where I want to pay a deserved compliment.

The operating room was the neatest, cleanest, most orderly operating room I have ever inspected. There were strips of carpet on the floor; the walls up about seven feet high were painted black; the tools were all laid out in order on a table covered with spotlessly clean white oilcloth, and what is more, Brother Smith tells me they were not laid out for my benefit, but are always found in that condition. The machines, two Power's Six Bs, were clean as new pins. In one corner stood a transverter, which to all human appearance had just been taken out of a bandbox. The ventilation of the room was excellent. The end of the vent pipe, in which there was an electric fan, was covered with a sheet metal cone, the lower end of which could be opened or closed at the will of the operator. From the top of each lamp ran a pipe connecting directly into this cone, so that no carbon gas escaped into the operating room. It was an ideal condition. Both machines were equipped with arc controllers, and, taken by and large, it was, as I before said, absolutely the finest thing I have seen yet. The only criticism is that the room might have been a little larger, and certainly could have been far better located, but that was not the fault of either Manager Shakman or Brother Lobel.

Oh, yes, by the way, in addition to the transverter were two rheostats, located on shelves up near the ceiling, so that should the transverter fail, Lobel can instantly throw over onto the city current and continue the show.

The program was made up of feature films, a comedy, a scenic picture, a topical, and some high class vaudeville—big time stuff.

My compliments to Manager Shakman and Brother Lobel. Some show—some theater, and some operating room.

Encouraging.

We are just in receipt of information that Local Union No. 293, New Orleans, La., has signed up the operators in all Mr. Boeheringer's houses, as well as Mr. Fabacher's theaters and the theaters owned by Al Shear, manager of the Consolidated Film Exchange.

This is decidedly encouraging. And now I want to point out to New Orleans' operators, and particularly to the members of 293, that it is up to them to demonstrate to the New Orleans' managers that their action in the unionizing of their theaters has been a move in the right direction. Local Union No. 293, in common with all other unions, should absolutely insist on its members "delivering the goods." Anything less than that brings discredit, not only on individual members, but upon the organization he is a member of and which he, so far as the theater manager be concerned, represents. I assume, of course, that Messrs. Boehringer, Fabacher and Shear supply equipment, current, etc., to enable the men to do creditable work.

No Effect at All.

Fred M. Blumer, Schenectady, N. Y., says:

What would be the effect on light delivered at the screen by using picture glass in projection ports?

Presuming that you mean photographic plates washed off and kept perfectly clean, that being optically perfect glass, there would be no effect whatever, except a very slight loss—a loss due to reflection, which would be practically negligible.

The Akeley Camera (Continued).

The arrangement of the panoram and tilting device makes it possible for the operator to swing the camera to any desired position in an instant. Such extremes as pointing the camera directly upward or directly downward are accomplished in this way. Photographing an aeroplane in its complete course or following a bird in flight, is quite as easy as operating the camera in the normal way. The advantage of the second position makes it easy to photograph any object lying flat, such as titles, operations in surgery or microscopical subjects.

The camera opened is divided in two parts, the left side containing the magazines, and the right side the operating mechanism. The course of the film is from the inside magazine over a hard rubber guide at the top of the camera, thence forward over the sprocket, through the gate, and back under the sprocket, over a guide roller, under another rubber guide and into the outside magazine.

The cylindical shape of the camera permits all of the driving mechanism to operate from the axis of the cylinder. The camera in operation is thus similar to a gyroscope set in gimbrels and the gyroscopic effect thus obtained adds materially to the steadiness of the apparatus.

Attachments for studio effects are being made in unit parts designed particularly with reference to easy manipulation by the camera operator, so that only such parts as are required for any special line of work need be purchased. In other words, the news operator can have a machine to fit his needs without any extra encumbrances, while the studio man can have any sort of exterior diaphragm dissolve or trick attachment or the education operator can be supplied with microscopic equipment, each be supplied with only such extra devices as his peculiar needs demand.

The shutter is of a new and entirely distinct type, instead of the former flat circular shutter; this one is cylindrical in shape and will give the greatest possible shutter efficiency. It revolves directly in front of the aperture plate.

The Tripod.—The Akeley tripod is as radically different as the camera. Made of strips of wood only one-half inch by one and one-quarter inches, it looks at first almost fragile, but when the folding truss construction is explained the scientific reasons for its combined rigidity and lightness are made clear.

The slender legs are firmly trussed in a rigid bow by a cross member, which serves the double function of brace and lock. A slight sharp upward pull on the brace folds it back on two elbow joints, allowing the tension to relax, which bows the legs and at the same time releasing the lock which holds the sliding sections from slipping. With this brace released the legs may be slid out to the desired length like a musician operates a slide trombone, a quick pressure snaps the brace into position again and the entire operation of changing the height of the tripod may be done in about the same number of seconds that it takes to read this paragraph.

In conclusion, we may sum up the most important advantages, as follows:

1. The camera is ready for instant operation.
2. It has no loose parts, nothing can be left behind, even the crank is permanently attached.
3. It is possible to photograph everything in sight.
4. The operator can see the picture on the film as it is being photographed.
5. Control of the focusing and diaphragm are from the back and can be operated while the photographer is cranking.
6. The camera can be used without the tripod equally as well as with one, the panoram and tilt being a part of the camera itself, so that a rock or stump or any solid object may serve instead of the tripod legs.
7. Ground glass for focusing may be thrown into position without opening the camera.
8. The movement of the panoram and tilt are steady, the movement cannot be started or stopped abruptly, except when the gears are out of mesh, as the balance wheel governor system prevents any unsteady or jerky motion and permits only a steady, even turn
9. Panoraming or tilting in any direction is possible, or both panoraming and tilting may be done at once, something which is not possible with any other tripod head.
10. The panoram and tilt are controlled by the movement of the hand, the thumb and forefinger being inserted into two leather loops on the camera, a slight pressure swings the camera to point in any direction, no cranks being used.
11. Owing to the folding truss arrangement of the tripod, it is possible to extend the legs and fasten them with one movement. The tripod can be set up in five seconds' time.

Illustrations showing the camera and the radical changes in Mr. Akeley's design were published in our last issue.

Answers to Correspondents.

N. J. S. asks:

> I am writing you for your opinion on the chances a beginner would have to start in the work by taking news, educational, historical and such subjects. Would such pictures pay well enough for one with little or no experience to make good after paying for the necessary outfit? Would you be willing to recommend a good machine that would be within the price of the returns?

The question you ask in regard to a beginner being able to make negative film which would sell to the picture companies is a hard one. If you possess natural ability in that line it might be possible for you to make short subjects such as appear in Paramount Pictographs, Pathe News Film or Universal Film Magazine, and sell them for from 50 cents to $1 a foot. If you think you have this ability the only way for you to find out is to try. Unless you are certain that you can turn out stuff equal to the best you see on the screen you had better not risk the investment, unless you can well afford the purchase of an outfit.

Write to the various firms who advertise cameras in the columns of this paper and from their catalogues select the machine best suited for the kind of work you expect to do.

Printing for Stained Negatives.

Many studios keep a library of negatives for use in flashing unusual scenes in story pictures such as floods, fires, collisions, wrecks, mobs, explosions, battleship maneuvers, etc.

It often happens that such negatives become discolored and turn brown or sepia in patches where the hypo has not been thoroughly eliminated.

Negatives discolored in this way will not make prints that are fit to be shown unless they receive some special treatment.

A simple way to restore their usefulness is to fix again in fresh hypo, wash thoroughly and then sepia tone in the bleach and sulphide baths. Treated in this way the negative assumes a uniform brown tone and requires a much stronger printing light than before, but is quite capable of yielding a good print with increased contrast. If the contrast of the sepiaed negative is too great it may be printed on negative stock and a dupe negative made of any desired degree of softness.

Another dodge for printing from brown stained negatives is to print them upon panchromatic stock with a dark yellow or brown glass between the aperture and the light.

Panchromatic stock is sensitive to red light and must be used and developed in darkness or by a faint green safe light.

British Journal Almanac.

Our British cousins have surmounted innumerable difficulties which have been the lot of those doing business in both the photographic and publishing fields. In spite of present conditions the British Journal Almanac for 1917 is offered to the American photographic public at the usual rate of 50 cents and $1, in paper and cloth covers, respectively. The 1917 volume contains 780 pages of informative text and advertising. Despite the reduction in size, the volume is well worth the price, the principal reduction having been made in the advertising pages by limiting each advertiser to sixteen pages. The edition has been reduced to 20,000 copies, so that those who make a practice of securing the Almanac will advisedly place their order at an early date. George Murphy, Inc., 57 East Ninth street, New York City, are the American sales agents.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

THE design of this department is to diffuse among musicians and exhibitors correct information on all important subjects pertaining to music for the film, to improve the quality of playing and to raise the standard of music in motion picture theaters.

Any question concerning music; suitable instrumentation; questions relating to the organ and mechanical players; in fact, any queries, criticisms or suggestions dealing with the musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered through this department.

Herbert Spencer on Music.

Herbert Spencer, one of England's greatest men and one of the greatest philosophers the world has known, wrote much about music and wrote intelligently about it as well. This is what he has to say to those who take no interest in music. It is to be found in "The Study of Sociology," Chapter VI:

"You have, perhaps, in the course of your life, had some musical culture; and can recall the stages through which you have passed. In the early days a symphony was a mystery; and you were somewhat puzzled to find others applauding it. An unfolding of musical faculty that went on slowly through the succeeding years brought some appreciation; and now these complex musical combinations which once gave you little or no pleasure give you more pleasure than any others. Remembering all this, you suspect your indifference to certain still more involved musical combinations may arise from incapacity in you and not from faults in them. See, on the other hand, what happens when one who has undergone no such series of changes—say, an old naval officer, whose life at sea kept him out of the way of concerts and operas. You bear him occasionally confess, or rather boast, how much he enjoys bagpipes. While the last cadence of a sonata which a young lady has just played are still in your ears he goes up to her and asks whether she can play 'Polly, Put the Kettle On,' or 'Johnny Comes Marching Home,' and then, when concerts are talked about at the table, he seizes the occasion for expressing his dislike of classical music, and scarcely conceals his contempt for those who go to hear it. On contemplating his mental state, you see that along with the absence of the ability to grasp complex musical combinations, there goes no consciousness of the absence—that there is no suspicion that such complex combinations exist, and that other persons have faculties for appreciating them."

In "Facts and Comments," Herbert Spencer's last work, published less than two years before his death, are to be found many references to music. There are forty short essays in the book, and the names of five of them are: "The Corruption of Music," "The Origin of Music," "Developed Music," "Meyerbeer," "Some Musical Heresies."

The essay called "The Purpose of Art" has more to do with music than with any other art. In that essay he says:

"Musical critics often give applause to compositions as being scientific—as being meritorious not in respect to the emotions they arouse but as appealing to the cultured intelligence of the musician. I hold these to be perverted beliefs having their roots in the prevailing enormous error respecting the constitution of mind. * * * When we come to the alleged higher meaning of music—to that instruction which a composer is assumed to utter and the listener to comprehend—we have yet a further interference with the true end."

In "The Corruption of Music" we find:

"Three-fourths of musical audiences at the present day appreciate but little the musical ideas and feelings of the composer, or the effective rendering of them; but the extraordinary feat of vocalization, or a display of marvelous gymnastics on the violin, bring a round of applause. * * * In this way performers, desiring less to render faithfully the meanings of the composers than to exhibit their powers of execution, vitiate the music and the tastes of their hearers. * * * The mischief originates in the performer's preoccupation with self, for this largely excludes occupation with the composer's thought. The dominant feeling is not love of the music rendered, but the desire for applause which brilliant rendering will bring. Nor is this all. There is a more widely diffused and less obtrusive mischief. A dominant trait of musical execution is rapidity. A saltarello or a tarantelle is easy enough, provided it be played slowly. The skill is shown in playing it with great speed; and teachers incite their pupils to achieve this great speed. The result is gradually to raise the standard of time, and the conception of what is the appropriate time is everywhere being changed in the direction of acceleration. This affects not pieces of display only but pieces of genuine music."

From "Some Musical Heresies":

"Among future changes some old forms of orchestral music may possibly lose their pre-eminence. It is said that the symphony was originally a suite de pieces—the pieces being dance music. Hence, considered as a work of art, the symphony has no natural coherence. Further, it seems that since in the choice of pieces to form the suite, the aim must have been variety, the successive pieces were selected not for their kinship, but for their absence of kinship. Of course, a like remark applies to the sonata, in which, also, the absence of kinship is conspicuous; instance in Beethoven's op. 26, in which the funeral march stands in such strong contrast alike with the scherzo which precedes it, and with the allegro, which succeeds it. * * * True artistic changes should be such as minister to natural changes of feeling, either emotional or sensational, such as might naturally arise from changes of mood. Arbitrary ones, however skillfully managed, negative that manifest coherence which a work of art should have."

The Study of Composition.

Musical composition is the art of building musical phrases—portions of melody—into periods of greater extent than is natural. The laws governing the structure of a symmetrical melody, or tune, are so simple that they may be acquired almost intuitively; but to construct music of greater scope than this requires conscious labor and considerable technical knowledge.

Composition is as much a constructive art as joinery or architecture and must therefore be practiced consciously until long use of experience enables us to exercise our painfully acquired powers subconsciously. Yet nearly every one begins with the vague idea that he has only to turn his eyes up to heaven, like a prophet in a picture to be delivered of a musical work complete in all its parts. I would advise a perusal, of Edgar Allan Poe's fine essay on "The Philosophy of Composition," as the most effectual antidote to this pernicious delusion. It is only possible to dispense with the searchlight of ratiocination, and it is very doubtful whether the expert gains anything by so doing. But it is in the nature of the person of feeling to want to do everything by unbridled impulse, as it is in the nature of the intellectual person to love, to fill up a form. The real artist—a combination of two—reasons out his work first; then, having fashioned it in the rough, he rewrites and rewrites until the bare bones are quite hidden. I am aware that in order that the musician, in order to understand composition, must first be taught to recognize time and irregular patterns of notes in time which we call rhythm; secondly to appreciate the relative pitch of notes (not necessarily the absolute pitch); thirdly to analyze combined sounds; fourthly to retain the memory of music just heard while listening to fresh sounds and anticipating coming ones. That such powers are possible to the ordinary ear without special gifts I affirm most emphatically, and can produce ample evidence of the fact.—Frederick Corder.

Better Results in Piano Playing.

A beautiful sonorous tone is not acquired without difficulty. Persons generally say, "On the piano the sound is already made." This is absolutely wrong. Every virtuoso has a tone quality peculiar to himself. In addition to the study which he has made of tone, of his intelligence, of his artistic temperament we must take into consideration the conformation of the hand, its fleshy or bony character, its lightness or heaviness. The tone is not ready-made; it depends upon the instrument, and the artist's qualities, both natural and acquired.

Suppleness, independence, elasticity of the hand and of the wrist contribute powerfully to vary the sonorousness, the quality of tone. We do not strike the key, we attack it very close, sink down upon it, press with force and energy in forte; in piano it is as if we knead the keys with a boneless hand and velvet fingers.

History of Music.

In his great book, "Educational Problems," G. Stanley Hall says, of musical education with regard to the history of music:

"All should center about actual music, and the standard productions of great masters should be incessantly repeated and the story of their lives known. Such illustrations are now practical in these days of mechanical players.

"This historic course should not only be broad and thorough, but the point of departure for every other department.

"Growth responds to growth and genius provokes response and appeals profoundly to the faculties of youth, for progress is inspiration to the young.

"Every great composer of the past should have his week or month of daily work, and every great era its full term of exclusive study. Everything should be practical, with a rich historic perspective."

Mr. Theodore Bendix on Ragtime.

Theodore Bendix for thirty years has been a New York musician. Mr. Bendix has a number of string quartets in the theaters. He is a lover of the best and points out a significant thing. "We give a varied program always, but the applause is always for the good things. There is seldom any applause for cheap music. If we play something from the operas, the applause is certain."

Mr. Bendix thinks this is a sign of the times and that it will only be a matter of a short time when ragtime will no longer have the hold it now has.

FAZENDA, Louise. Born in Lafayette, Ind. Her father was French and her mother Holland Dutch. Is five feet one and one-half inches tall and weighs 135 pounds. Olive complexion, very light brown hair and hazel eyes. Leaving school, Miss Fazenda played a few months with a stock company, but she decided that pictures offered a greater scope and made her screen debut in 1913 in a one-reel Universal comedy. She played some dramatic roles with Universal, and played them well, but they can find a hundred to play drama to one good comedienne, and her comedy skill kept her busy with farce and knockabout. Of course it was only a question of time when the Keystone would want her, and she was one of the first Keystone players to become popular by name, and certainly the first woman so distinguished. She likes outdoor sports, which she shares with her genuine malamute dog from Alaska. Also fond of antiques.

MYERS, Harry C. Born in New Haven, Conn. American-English parentage. Is six feet tall and weighs 200 pounds. Brown hair and gray eyes. Mr. Myers made his stage debut in 1900 and for ten years played stock and road engagements. In 1910 he was concluding a stock engagement in Philadelphia with the summer starting. With several others he took a position with the Lubin company, playing leads, and soon was an established favorite. He remained with Lubin several years, eventually becoming a director, and left that company to go to the Universal as director and leading man. A year or so ago he went to the Vim, playing in feature comedies, and is now appearing in two-reel comedies on the Pathe program. He has played every line of parts from an Indian in a breech clout to society parts. Some notable plays have been The Drug Terror, The Prodigal Son, The Hard Road, Baby, and Will a Woman Tell?

OSBORNE, Helen Marie (Baby Marie Osborne). Born in Denver, Colorado, in 1912. Her parents are American. She is three feet six inches tall and weighs 45 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and blue eyes. When she was only three years old she achieved stellar honors, making her debut as the star of Little Mary Sunshine. Other leading parts have been in Twin Kiddies, Told at Twilight, Shadows and Sunshine and Joy and the Dragon. She is under contract to Pathe, appearing in the Lasalida brand. She is not only the youngest leading woman in the world, but she is a profitable star as well, for she is tremendously popular. She is not merely a cleverly trained child, but a real actress and she has an assured stage presence that older players might envy, the real charm of her work being her sincerity and lack of consciousness. Dolls, puppies and kittens are her favorite toys.

GILFETHER, Daniel. Born in Boston, Mass. Irish parentage. Is six feet one inch tall and weighs 212 pounds. Fair complexion, gray hair and blue eyes. Mr. Gilfether made his stage debut in 1876 and for forty years he played with the leading actors of the day. He has worked under the management of Augustus Pitou and William A. Brady, was with Robert B. Mantell and played in the American tours of Tomasso Salvini. He did not turn his attention to the screen until 1913, when he made his debut with the Majestic company in His First Love. He has also played with Famous Players, but for some time past has been one of the valued members of the Balboa company. He played the leading character parts in the Who Pays series, The Red Circle, In the Grip of Evil and Who Knows, was seen in the Mary Sunshine series, Old Fashioned Dad, The Wild Cat and Zollenstein. Likes reading and swimming.

KIRKHAM, Kathleen. Born in Menominee, Mich. English-German descent. Is five feet eight inches tall and weighs 150 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and gray-blue eyes. Miss Kirkham has had considerable experience in stock work and has also played in the support of Dustin Farnum in The Squaw Man and The Virginian. She is at present with Balboa, but has played with Morosco, Clune, Pollard, Fine Arts and Universal. Her debut was made in a Reliance (Fine Arts) release, Strathmore, in March, 1914, and she specializes in emotional and heavy leads. Notable parts have been played in The Eyes of the World, The House of Lies, The Devil's Assistant and Strathmore. She played Vivian in the latter, Marion in The House of Lies and Marion in The Devil's Assistant. She is fond of sketching, driving and skating.

OVEY, George. Born in Kansas City, Mo. English parentage. Is five feet, three and one-half inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion. Dark brown hair and eyes. Mr. Ovey came to pictures after about fifteen years on the dramatic stage, mostly in stock and musical comedy. He has appeared in "A Knight for a Day," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "The Time, the Place and the Girl," and in other of the lighter attractions. In April, 1915, he made his debut in the Horsley studio in Count Padinski, and he has kept right along for the past two years playing Jerry in all the Cub comedies, and two years of Jerry has brought him to a position high in the favor of the audiences. It is not easy to play a single character for two years and keep offering new work, but he has held to his record nicely. He is an all round athlete, partly on account of his previous stage work and partly because he likes it.

Rialto Celebrates First Anniversary

Managing Director Rothapfel Provides a Remarkable Entertainment in Honor of Event.

THE Rialto Theater, at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, celebrated the first anniversary of its opening by showing a remarkable program in the week beginning Sunday, April 22. Manager S. L. Rothapfel dedicated the performance to Felix E. Kahn and the directors of the theater, "who have made this first anniversary possible," he said in his program. A résumé of the nine numbers on the bill will be of interest to the exhibitors of the country.

The overture "America, Our Cry," was composed especially for the occasion by Hugo Riesenfeld, conductor of the Rialto Orchestra. For its execution there were required the large Rialto Orchestra, the Rialto Grand Opera Quartet, the Rialto Male Quartet, a chorus of twelve added voices and three trumpeters. All the resources of the house in the way of light effects were thrown into the interpretation. These, in conjunction with the effect of the new Urban scenic setting, resulted in a number that thrilled as well as entertained—one to be remembered.

"Glacier National Park and American Indian Types" constituted the scenic. The Rialto Male Quartet sang two numbers. The Rialto Animated Magazine contained the cream of the Mutual, Universal and Hearst-Pathe weeklies. The Grand Opera Quartet sang the quartet from "Rigoletto." Then there was the last installment of the Salisbury expedition with Rex Beach. Danseuses from the Helen Moller School presented Grieg's pantomime, "To Spring." And then came Douglas Fairbanks' "In Again, Out Again." Dr. A. G. Robyn concluded the show with an organ solo.

The theater has been crowded all the week. House records have been broken down the line. Manager Rothapfel has received many messages of congratulation on his year and on his anniversary performance. Not the least hearty of these were from his associates in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, all of whom made it a point to attend the Rialto during the week.

The Rialto issued a sixteen-page souvenir program in honor of the completion of one year. In it are six full page photographs, including pictures of the orchestra and screen, the foyer, the mezzanine, the uniformed staff, the dome and the musicians. There are photographs of Mr. Rothapfel and Conductor Riesenfeld and eight members of the staff. The text is divided between "Forward," "The Theater Itself," "The Managing Director," "The Musicial Director," "The Music," "The Pictures" and "The Illuminating System." Also there are lists of artists who have appeared at the house and of overtures which have been played by the orchestra.

Mayfair Film Corporation Formed

M. A. Schlesinger is President—Will Star Peggy Hyland With Brabin as Director.

IN the certain belief that there is a demand for film productions of a distinctive type; for pictures, which from a standpoint of beauty and artistry are designed to appeal to all classes, the Mayflower Film corporation enters the field of independent manufacture. Determined to spare no expense in the attainment of its object to produce pictures of a superior type, the company announces with gratification the acquisition of Miss Peggy Hyland.

Miss Hyland will be presented in roles especially suited to her wonderful beauty and charming personality, which attributes have endeared her to both young and old.

Miss Hyland's first vehicle for the Mayfair company will be specially selected to fit her personality and no possible effort will be spared to make the production stand out as the most notable contribution Miss Hyland has yet made to the screen. Charles J. Brabin, who has directed Miss Hyland in her most recent production, "The Sixteenth Wife," which will have its premiere showing at the Rialto Theater in New York, will be associated with Miss Hyland as her director.

The Mayfair Film corporation was organized by M. A. Schlesinger, its president, who for years has had vast motion picture and theatrical interests in both England and South Africa. In America, Mr. Schlesinger has been responsible for the engagement of the staffs employed in the production of films in South Africa. He has also been the largest purchaser of American-made films for South Africa, which product he introduced into and now controls in that country.

Temporarily the offices of the Mayfair Film corporation will be located at 10 Wall Street, New York. The company will shortly locate in the Times Square district.

Warren Oland Engaged by Astra

Versatile Dramatic Player and Leading Character in "Patria" Signs with Gasnier's Company.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT that Warner Oland, who played the role of Baron Huroki in the International serial "Patria," has been engaged by Astra, has aroused considerable interest, for in "Patria" he has completely won the public by his really remarkable acting.

Mr. Oland comes of Viking and Russian stock. He was born in Sweden, and after attending elementary and high schools there, came to the United States and finished his education in Boston schools and at Williams College, where later, in 1908, 1909, and 1910 he occupied the chair of drama.

Warner Oland.

His first dramatic appearance was in "The Christian," by Hall Caine. His important theatrical engagements were with Viola Allen in "The Eternal City," "Twelfth Night" and "Winter's Tale"; with Sothern and Marlowe in Shakespearian repertoire, and with Alla Nazimova in "The Master Builder" and "A Doll's House." He supported Helen Ware in "The Price" and for two years was featured in Robert Hilliard's "A Fool There Was." He also played John Mason's part in "The Yellow Ticket," and his interpretation of Leroque in "Madam X" created a sensation. In pictures, Mr. Oland supported Theda Bara in "Destruction," and "Sin," and he was the heavy in "The Fool's Revenge" and appeared with John Mason and Clara Whipple in "The Reaper." In "Patria" his impersonation of the Baron earned for him the highest praise of the critics, the public and the acting fraternity.

Troubles of a Film Distributor

World Man Spends an Hour in the Office of the Universal Exchange, New York City Branch, and Listens.

By Hanford C. Judson.

THE manager of a film exchange needs decision and good judgment, for his path is not all roses. The writer might have guessed that the manager's job was no snap; but as he sat near the desk of Mr. Rubinstein of the Twenty-third street exchange of the Universal Manufacturing Company, the morning's batch of cases and problems turned out to be astonishing.

Condition in which Films Were Received at the Exchange.

To begin with, a case of five reels containing all that was left of a print, "The Gates of Doom," was brought in. The accompanying illustration shows the writer taking a look at the relic. Mr. Rubinstein remarked, "Look, they haven't even sent back the paper bands." The case looked like a nest of rubbish; but we found the bands when we took out the reels. They had been put in the case first. What remained of the five reels was put in on top, and last of all the rubbish, parts of the film, three inches, five inches, or three feet long, tossed in on top of all.

"Where did that case come from?" I asked. "That has just come in from the Paradise theater, 472 Ralph avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., was the answer. The house is owned by H. Goettinger. I asked the name of the operator, but it wasn't known. I wanted to know why the film was returned in so outrageous a condition and was told that it might have been any one of several reasons. The operator might have disliked some recent picture furnished by the exchange; he might have been in a hurry to get away and took his impatience out on the picture. A good guesser can get a number of reasons, but none of them will condone the sending of film back in such a manner. If it had been merely the first time the thing had happened, it might have been passed as a regrettable accident. But I was told that other films had come back from that same theater in almost as bad a condition even weeks ago when Mr. Barbash was the manager. Letters about it have not been of any avail. "How much has this case cost you?" I asked. Mr. Rubinstein replied that he didn't yet know the condition of the film, but that at a minimum it would cost $7.50. This is not the only theater that misuses film.

There have been complaints on this same score from many points across the country. It is happening too often. It is dead waste and is unnecessary. Probably no one can make an estimate of the yearly damage to the trade which means to manufacturer, exhibitor and patron. As an added handicap: The exhibitor who expected to run "The Gates of Doom" in his show tonight and has advertised it, has lost his advertisement and may displease his patrons. The exchange has no print of it for him now.

All this goes to prove that there are two sides to the complaint often received from exhibitors and noticed by F. H. Richardson in the Projection Department, that exchanges fail at times to examine film sent out. A poor and careless operator may do a lot of damage to a film and the same man is often just the one who will be slack in returning the show to the distributing office, leaving it till so late it can not be examined and sent out for use the same day. The exchange may be careless at times; but the operator who is tearing film without need and the exhibitor who won't take the necessary care to get the show to the exchange in time hasn't much right to kick. Mr. Richardson is coming in contact with one part of the difficulty; here is a glimpse of the same problem from the same other side.

There was plenty of talk about delayed film over at the Universal branch this morning, April 25. The best example was pointed out in a courteously written letter from Exhibitor Wm. Brown, of the Royal theater in Elizabeth, N. J., who complained of delay caused by his messenger having to wait for the shows he had booked and closed with a request to Mr. Rubinstein to book shows to him that could be counted on to get back to the exchange the night before, so he could be sure to get them in the morning.

Sixteen shows came back late this morning. Some of these prints will have to lie idle till tomorrow. Half-past nine in the morning is not unreasonably early for the return of film. One man was complaining bitterly because he had to wait for his show. The manager asked him when he had brought his reels in today. He replied that he had come in at half-past ten. "That's too late, you'll get your show for to-day at half-past twelve." "That is too late for my show," said the exhibitor. "But why didn't you bring the last show back in time for us to examine the reels?" said the exchange man. The exhibitor had no answer and doubtless felt abused. He seemed not to consider that others had been as badly inconvenienced. So it goes on day by day. Useless waste. It's a comment on the intelligence of some in the business.

The U. S. Junior Naval Reserve, with national headquarters at 231 West 58th Street, New York, has inaugurated a moving picture campaign throughout the country to stimulate interest in naval training and to establish local posts where boys may be prepared before being mobilized at Camp Dewey, near New London, and Camp John Paul Jones, at Corpus Christi, Texas, and three other camps to be established during the summer. The Junior Naval Reserve furnishes to motion picture exhibitors free of charge single reels each week on subjects exploiting the necessities of an active naval reserve. These reels are absolutely new and are of a thrilling nature on militarism and preparedness and the work of the Junior Reserve.

The organization also furnishes the exhibitor unlimited publicity service in his local papers. The exhibitor donates the proceeds of one performance a week toward establishing a local post of the Junior Reserve in his town. The money is deposited in a local bank until sufficient funds have accumulated to organize a local training camp, and every cent of the money received from these performances is spent in the home town of the exhibitor giving the benefit performance. The Junior Naval Reserve is financed by some of the foremost men of the country. It has a membership of over 50,000 boys now, and, at the rate the lads are enlisting, there will be 100,000 cadets by next January. S. P. Blackman, well known in the moving picture industry of Los Angeles, is the chairman of the Motion Picture Committee, and exhibitors are rapidly subscribing for the service of the patriotic reels of the Junior Naval Reserve. These patriotic reels will be released on June 15.

GERALDINE FARRAR RETURNS TO SCREEN.

With the closing of New York's opera season, Geraldine Farrar returns to motion pictures and will again appear before the camera under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, who staged her current cinema triumph, "Joan the Woman." Miss Farrar, at the conclusion of her season's engagement at the Metropolitan, left New York for California, where she will immediately commence work on a new De Mille creation at the Lasky studios. Miss Farrar has as companions on the trip her mother and father.

As outlined in the recent announcement signed by Adolph Zukor, Walter E. Greene and Hiram Abrams effecting the new Famous Players-Lasky, Artcraft and Paramount combination, Miss Farrar's future productions will be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. In accordance with this affiliation Jesse L. Lasky, who is at present on the West Coast, is conferring with Director De Mille on the new Farrar subject, further information about which will be given out in the near future.

This will be the third summer in California in behalf of the screen for the noted star of the opera and screen. All last summer Miss Farrar was occupied with the "Joan" production and the previous year she appeared in "Carmen," "Maria Rosa" and "Temptation." The Farrar-De Mille subjects will be staged at the Lasky Hollywood studios, where Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are at present appearing before the camera in forthcoming Artcraft releases.

New General Film Sales Manager

Sidney R. Kent, with Long and Successful Merchandise Career Behind Him, Is Appointed to Important Place.

OF IMPORTANCE in the recent policy of the General Film Company in putting new blood into the organization is the announcement by Harold Bolster of the appointment of Sidney R. Kent as general sales manager. This appointment takes effect at once and signalizes the beginning of an intensive campaign to modernize the sales end of this film distributing company.

Mr. Kent comes to General Film from the Vitagraph Company of America, with which he had been connected for a considerable period in special construction work. Mr. Kent went to Vitagraph with an established prestige from the Amercain Druggists Syndicate, Long Island City, where he was assistant to the president, and where he had wide executive powers. His success with the A. D. S. was conspicuous, he having joined it only two years before as assistant sales manager. Before that he was for seven years connected with the sales department of one of the largest coal companies of the country. His whole career has been devoted to scientific merchandising.

The sales policy of General Film, as reflected in the appointment of Mr. Kent, is to apply to its extensive organization the up-to-date and effective methods carried out in the greatest American business organizations of today. Mr. Kent says that he has no revolutionary ideas to introduce to the film business, but that he expects to mold the sales and distribution of General Film's commodity into the same and reliable methods that prevail in successful establishments of the same magnitude in other industries.

"I expect to begin an educational work that will include everyone in my jurisdiction from office boy up," says Mr. Kent. "It will be with the end in view that the exhibitor receives the treatment that is his right, and the treatment that the client already receives in every other line of business. In many an extended personal canvass of the exhibitors I found room for much improvement in the contract of the motion picture business with its customers. This much for the business in general. Particular attention to the exhibitor is the outstanding motive in my plan. Therefore the giving of individual service, the insuring of loyalty to clients and the adoption of common sense sales principles that are good elsewhere, if they are a novelty, should prove particularly welcome in the film trade.

"I think our platform will prove to be 100 per cent. service to the smallest client as well as the largest, and personal encouragement to all."

Postoffice Accelerates Film Deliveries

Complaints Receive Prompt Attention and Service is Speeded Up.

THE Post Office Department at Washington is apparently doing everything in its power to hurry the movement of motion picture films. Complaints have been received at the department, according to a notice sent out to all officials of the Postal Service by J. C. Koons, first assistant postmaster general, indicating that packages containing motion picture films are not being delivered as promptly as possible at all offices. "The use of the postal service for the transmission of motion picture films depends largely upon the confidence on the part of the shipper that the parcels will be handled expeditiously," this notice reads. "This is essential to the efficient exchange of films.

"To the end that prompt delivery of this kind of mail shall be effected, postmasters at city delivery offices will please give special attention to the receipt, dispatch and delivery of motion picture films. Whenever it is impracticable to effect delivery by letter carrier, the addressee should be notified of the fact that a parcel containing motion picture films has arrived at the postoffice and will be delivered upon call.

"At non-city delivery postoffices special attention will likewise be given to the receipt, dispatch and delivery of this kind of mail, and postmasters will please transmit to addressees by such means as may be available, without exense to the department, prompt notification of the arrival of parcels containing films."

APFEL AND BRUNTON IN NEW YORK.

Oscar Apfel, the well-known director, and Robert Brunton, who has been technical and art director at the Ince studios in Hollywood for the past two years, are in New York and will remain for about ten days. It is said that the purpose of the visit of both these gentlemen to New York is in connection with the Paralta Plays corporation, recently formed to produce feature photoplays on an elaborate scale.

Vitagraph Scores Point Against Ford

Defendant's Demurrer Dismissed—Justice Mayer Says Ford Lacks Prophetic Vision.

THE Vitagraph Company of America last week won an initial skirmish in its legal fight against Henry Ford, millionaire automobile manufacturer, to recover $1,000,000 damages for alleged libel in an action pending in the United States District Court, New York, when a demurrer interposed by the defendant was dismissed.

In dismissing the demurrer Judge Mayer declared that "it may be well that the article (referring to Ford's attack on the film entitled, "The Battle Cry of Peace" under the caption "Humanity and Sanity") had no effect on those who were in earnest for national preparedness."

Judge Mayer pointed out that Mr. Ford was "lacking in prophetic vision" when he wrote in his article that "for months the people of the United States have had fear pounded into their brains by magazines, newspapers and motion pictures. No enemy has been pointed out."

The defendant was allowed twenty days in which to file his answer to the suit and will have an opportunity then to assert and establish his charge that "The Battle Cry of Peace" was produced in the interests of munition manufacturers and not with patriotic motives of aiding the cause of national preparedness. The Vitagraph company has announced that the title of "The Battle Cry of Peace" has been changed to "The Battle Cry of War."

C. L. Worthington Dead

Fox District Manager for Several Years Succumbs to Apoplexy.

CHARLES L. WORTHINGTON, district manager for Fox Film Corporation, and known personally to thousands of motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States, died suddenly last week of apoplexy.

Mr. Worthington had been with William Fox since the organization of the Box Office Attraction Company, which developed later into the Fox Film Corporation. Soon after the latter's inception he was made district manager for the Middle West. Then he was transferred to the Eastern and Southern territory in a similar capacity, with headquarters in Philadelphia and New Orleans. This position he held up to the time of his death.

At one time Mr. Worthington was a professional baseball player. Before joining the General Film Company, his first alliance in photoplays, he toured the country with several noted airmen, and was in charge of their exhibitions. He was a brother-in-law of Lincoln Beachey, the aviator, and was his manager for many months.

In the passing of Mr. Worthington the film industry is poorer for the loss of one of its keenest minds and cheeriest and most genial figures. It was his unfailing good humor as well as his constant fairness that made every exhibitor with whom he came in contact a warm friend.

Mr. Worthington was forty-three years old and lived in New York City.

UNIVERSAL CLUB HOLDS FIRST DINNER.

For the promotion of greater intimacy and a more thorough working acquaintanceship of the members of the various departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Club was inaugurated with a get-together dinner at Krug & Zinn's restaurant, New York, Saturday night, April 21.

Heads of the organization and those of each and every department, with the major portions of their staffs, were there. About one hundred covers were laid. The dinner was the first of a series of varied monthly entertainments, which will include clam bakes, boat rides, dances, etc., through which a greater social and business acquaintanceship of the Universal forces will be effected.

A permanent organization was effected, with officers as follows: Carl Laemmle, president; R. H. Cochrane, vice president; P. A. Powers, treasurer. A board of governors of seventeen men, with Jack Cohn as chairman, was elected as follows: Jack Cohn, Morris Pivar, Julius Lewis, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Hal Hodes, Joe Brandt, Manny Goldstein, Hy Gainsborg, Sam Zierler, Mike Stolzer, Tom O'Neill, P. D. Cochrane, John Ward, George Kann, C. MacGowan and Kurt Linn. Morris Pivar was designated as recording and financial secretary and Claude MacGowan as treasurer of the board of governors.

A committee on by-laws and initiation was appointed, and its report will be made to the board of governors as soon as possible, in order that the governors may designate the kind of entertainment for the next monthly meeting.

"The Danger Trail"

James Oliver Curwood's Thrilling Story of the Frozen North Realistically Filmed by Selig—A Great Cast, Headed by H. B. Warner, Miss Violet Heming and W. Lawson Butt.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

EVERY foot of the five thousand in "The Danger Trail" spells action, and so condensed is the story as told in the films one must be careful to keep one's eyes glued to the screen, as the slightest little gap may find the spectator groping for the thread. When it is borne in mind that thirteen thousand feet of negative have been condensed into five, the reason is obvious.

I have never before viewed a filmed story of the far North which had settings so realistic as "The Danger Trail."

Scene from "The Danger Trail" (Selig).

Snow, snow, snow everywhere. It is omnipresent in the vast stretches of forest and hill ranges, and at times it fills the air with whirling flakes that riot downward. The rigors of the climate are accentuated by the heavy garb of the people in the story and by the sleds drawn by long lines of huskies, and also by the rude log cabins along the trails which afford the only shelter.

The Curwood story is based on the mistaken identity of John Howland, an American civil engineer, with another John Howland—son of a man of that name who had committed a great crime in the home of a Hudson Bay factor, years before the enterprise of building a railroad through the northern wilderness to Hudson Bay had been thought of. The wrong John Howland (H. B. Warner), sent from New York to build this railroad, is marked for death by the three sons of the Hudson Bay factor, and his life is saved repeatedly by their sister Meleese (Miss Violet Heming), through the loyal support of a halfbreed, Jean Croisset (W. Lawson Butt).

H. B. Warner as the innocent John Howland naturally dominates the story. He never fails to meet fully every demand of this impressive and self-reliant character. Physically, Mr. Warner is a fine figure and his athletic prowess stands him in good stead. In the supreme test between Howland and Jean Croisset, Mr. Warner's science, skill, agility and strength are shown in admirable fashion. And Mr. Butt has no apology to offer for his impersonation of Jean Croisset in the fierce mix-up.

It is a fight to a finish between the two men, Howland being a skilled boxer and wrestler, while Croisset depends solely on his wrestling tactics, whether foul or fair. The repeated upper cuts, both right and left, landed by Howland on the jaws of the giant Croisset, apparently jar him from head to heel. But when the towering halfbreed threatens to break Howland's neck in the next rough and tumble clinch, the wily engineer never permits the clinch. With all the weight of his body behind the punch, Howland lets go a left thunderbolt that causes the mighty legs of the big halfbreed to sag, and he sinks slowly to the floor, vainly trying to prevent it by leaning against a wall of the cabin in which the fight takes place.

Not since the great fight in "The Spoilers" have I seen a mill that was so exciting and so like the real thing.

Miss Violet Heming's Meleese Thoreau is a bewitchingly beautiful and resourceful young woman. The awakening of her love for John Howland and the almost despairing energy with which she fights for his life, while he thinks she is an enemy, are full of appeal to the spectator.

Other worthy impersonations are the Pierre and Max Thoreau of Arthur Donaldson and Richard Thornton, and the Jackpine of William Cooper.

The release will be made through K. E. S. E., Inc., April 30.

"Treason"

Allen Holubar Featured in and Director of Five-Reel Bluebird War Picture—Released May 14.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

NOT only because of its timeliness as a war subject, but its merits as a picture as well, "Treason," a five-reel Bluebird to be uncaged on May 14, should get over successfully. In the film has been visualized a story with enough spectacular action, enough plot action., enough heart interest and enough suspense to make it a thoroughly acceptable offering. There has been considerable footage devoted to battle scenes, which, while obviously "movie" warfare, have been quite well staged by Allen Holubar, who directed the picture and who is featured. The manner of cutting and assembling the war stuff has resulted in an almost bewildering succession—a "flash, flash" succession—of more or less thrilling and spectacular scenes.

Interwoven and dovetailing with the war motif is a story of love and intrigue. The story was written and scenarioized by Robert Lee Weigert. The leading character is a young telegrapher who distinguishes himself at the front. Through the duplicity of a jealous co-worker, he is made to believe that the Government has forgotten his services after he has been wounded. Piqued, he steals a secret code from the house of the secret service chief—the father of his fiancee—and gives it over to the enemy. He immediately repents, and, after a hard and exciting chase in an auto, recovers the code. He also gets the girl and an army commission.

While laid in the mythical principality of Statiria and a neighboring nation, the opposing forces in "Treason," judging by their uniforms, represent French and German forces.

Scene from "Treason" (Bluebird).

Allen Holubar, in the featured role, is called on for some strenuous work, which he does as well as he directs. In the uniformly good supporting cast are Lois Wilson, Dorothy Davenport, Joseph Girard, George Pearce, Edward Hearn, Leo Pierson, Burton Law and L. M. Wells.

Photography, which is excellent, was done by Roy H Klaffki.

"American Methods"

Five-Reel Fox Screen Version of Ohnet's Drama, "The Ironmaster," Starring William Farnum, Is a Much Altered but Always Interesting Play.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT IS doubtful if George Ohnet, the author of "The Ironmaster," would recognize "American Methods," the five-reel photoplay made by the Fox Film Corporation, as having been inspired by his famous work. Having decided to alter the leading male character to an American of French descent who inherits extensive ironworks in the land of his forefathers, the author of the scenario has made many other alterations in keeping with the new title. As it now stands, the story does not rank as high artistically but gains in breezy humor and its fitness for popular consumption by the U. S. brand of screen fans.

The dramatic value of the Ohnet plot is beyond dispute. The clash of character, constructive skill, and general excellence of the entire work have made the story of the man of the people who marries the young woman of noble birth but does not win her love until time shows her his true worth one of the most successful plays in any language. The widest departure from the original plot is at the finish of the screen version. In place of fighting the duel with the Duc De Bligny, the American hero uses his fists when he finds the nobleman forcing his unwelcome caresses upon his wife, and half kills him. The ending is abrupt but the way William Farnum does the fight makes it seem the natural one. Aside from a few incidents where the coarseness of Moulinet is carried farther than is necessary, the production is marked by good taste and a clear understanding of the correct local color. Frank Lloyd was the director.

The cast is exceptionally able. William Farnum has the physique, force of character and likable qualities demanded by the American William Armstrong, and Jewel Carmen is suited in every way to the part of Claire. In looks, bearing and womanly charm she is the young aristocrat who becomes a loving, faithful wife, once her heart is won. Florence Vidor is a capital representative of Armstrong's sister, and Bertram Grassby, Willard Louis, Lillian West, Genevieve Blinn, Alan Forrest, Marc Robbins, Josef Swickard and Mortimer Jaffe are also in line for words of commendation.

"Her Secret"

Perry N. Vekroff Writes and Produces Strong Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Rbbon Feature—Alice Joyce and Harry Morey Featured.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

RICH in dramatic strength and a fine example of continuity of thought and development is "Her Secret," a five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released April 30. Perry N. Vekroff, the author and producer of the piece, has given us a plot in which the suspense-tension is wound tight at the opening scene and is not let down one degree until the final fade-out. The picture is excellent entertainment, but is not one that will be either readily understood or appreciated by other than mature minds. The entire plot revolves around an incident in which a girl is robbed of her honor by a drunken civil engineer, who mistakes her for the queen of a Western dance hall. Mr. Vekroff, however, has handled this situation with such a finesse and with such directorial skill that it cannot offend even the super-sensitive, and so strong and so interesting is the story growing out of the incident that one soon forgets and forgives its manner of beginning.

In the screening of his story Mr. Vekroff has been distinctly aided by the capable work of Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, two natural players, who are supported by a cast that includes Robert Kelley, Mary Maurice, George Cooper, Patsy DeForrest and Kittens Reichert.

The story is out of the usual run. It tells of a girl who, leaving a Western town for a secretarial position in the East, stops at a rough hotel. It is here that the civil engineer mistakes her room for that of the dancer. Arrived in the East, the girl is taken in hand by a friendly doctor. A child is born and the girl later secures a position as secretary to a prominent business man. They fall in love and marry. She does not tell him "her secret." It comes about that her child is brought into the home. The husband discovers the fact that his wife is the child's mother, and accuses the doctor. The doctor tells him the wife's story, and it develops that the man is the civil engineer of the Western hotel incident.

Production details throughout are in harmony with the grade of entertainment.

An old milkman is accused of the murder of a hermit. He seeks shelter with the Kings. They believe in his innocence and, with modern detective methods, show that the hermit was killed by a left-handed man. They proceed to find the man. They discover him, but he endeavors to escape. An exciting chase and running fight take place, but in the end the murderer is captured.

With Miss Sais in the cast are Frank Jonasson, Edward Hearn, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee, Hart Hoxie and Mrs. Saunders. Directed by James W. Horne.

"A Menagerie Mixup."

This one-reel Ham and Bud comedy is about up to standard. Bud gets a job as an escaped bear, and Ham, who is dressed in a bearskin costume, on his way to a party, is mistaken for the escaped bear. Things begin to happen then, and they keep happening until the end. The two "bears" meet each other in a cave. There are a sufficient number of laughs in the reel.

"In Again Out Again"

Douglas Fairbanks, in Artcraft Debut, Gives a Top-Notch Funmaker for All but the Pacifists.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE'S a fly in the ointment in "In Again, Out Again," the subject in which Douglas Fairbanks makes his Artcraft debut. "Doug's" popularity is going to be punctured —the pacifists are not going to love him any more. But perhaps after all these "pussyfooting persons" never did love him. Conceivably the congenitally dynamic will have slight natural attraction for the temperamentally anemic. It's a safe bet, though, that in the balancing of the popularity books the Fairbanks assets will be found larger by reason of "In Again, Out Again." The picture has timeliness. It hits hard a factor in American politics of the hour, it makes keen use of the greatest political weapon—ridicle.

The picture bears evidence of a new-fangled triangle, of a trinity of brain and brawn and skill. There are Anita Loos, the author, John Emerson, director, and Fairbanks. Miss Loos has a masculine touch that is refreshing. She has a faculty of hitting the bullseye that is denied to most men. She has terseness, vividness, virility. Her titles hit with sledgehammer force. Then there is John Emerson, who has the gift of perception, the ability to grasp what is worth while. Fairbanks, too, is as agile as ever, unusually so in fact. There is one striking instance of his speed when, on the roof of a building over which he is being chased, he seizes a rope, throws it as a lariat a distance of thirty feet to a pole, tightens it with a yank and swings to the ground. The single stunt is worth all the hours he has spent in rope rehearsal.

Frank Lalor is the druggist who contributes mightily to the fun. The scenes in the store as its proprietor and Teddy accumulate an italic jag and simultaneously a rage against womankind are funny enough in themselves to put the show over. They're surely top-notch as laugh-makers. Arline Pretty is Janie, the daughter of the warden. Bull Montana lends atmosphere to the burglar scenes. The pacifists are well taken care of—and there are Amos Jennings Ford, Pacifico, his daughter, and Henry Pinchit—by Arnold Lucy, Helen Green and Homer Hunt.

If you hear a suggestion that "In Again, Out Again" is not good stuff scratch the reviler and you will find a pacifist. To the great majority of Americans not enrolled in this exclusive band the picture undoubtedly will be classed with D. F.'s best—and that is saying a lot.

Jackie Saunders Again a Hoyden.

Jackie Saunders plays another hoydenish role in "The Wildcat," her second production for Mutual, released April 23. The story might be classified as an up-to-date "Taming of the Shrew." It reveals the clash of two strong wills.

Jackie Saunders as Bethesda Carewe, the spoiled daughter of wealthy parents, declares that she will not marry anyone, especially Mortimer Hunt, played by Arthur Shirley, who has been picked out by her parents.

"The Recoil," Five-Reel Photoplay by Anthony T. Kelly, Featuring William Courtenay and Lillian Greuze, and Numbers Three and Four of "Official War Pictures, Inc."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A MEMBER of the United States Secret Service is the hero of "The Recoil," a five-reel Astra photoplay by Anthony T. Kelly, featuring William Courtenay and Lillian Greuze. The story is melodramtic and moves along at a lively rate, although it is by no means a specimen of the author's best work. Much of the material is familiar, the race to the Governor to save an innocent man from being electrocuted being used at the finish. A hasty secret marriage, the husband's hurried departure on a Government mission, the report of his death, the heroine's second marriage to save her family from poverty, the return of husband number one, the meeting of the two husbands, the struggle between them (during which the wife strikes and kills husband number two in order to save the life of the man she loves), the arrest and conviction of her brother for murder, and a happy ending at the Governor's mansion, constitute a string of exciting episodes that are put together with a fair degree of skill.

The Astra company has given "The Recoil" an adequate production, and George Fitzmaurice has directed it with good judgment. As the hero, William Courtenay fills every demand. The part offers no difficulties to an actor of his calibre, and he never slights his work. A newcomer in screen acting is Lillian Greuze, who plays the heroine. She is the leading lady of the French company now in New York City, and is a decided addition to the Pathe program. She has a very expressive face, is thoroughly schooled in her art and possesses a pleasing personality. Frank Belcher, Core Mills Adams and William Raymond have the other important roles and prove satisfactory.

"Official War Pictures, Inc."

The third and fourth installments of "Official War Pictures" are of highly interesting scenes from the great conflict. Number three is devoted largely to illustrating how the British Navy is doing its part at its base in the North Sea. All manner of craft are shown, from the superdreadnoughts to the submarines, and the daily life of the officers and men in war time. The fourth number is devoted to the army in France and the work of the American Ambulance Corps. Aside from a few showings around the country under the auspices of the company formed by William K. Vanderbilt and other influential men to exploit these pictures, this portion of the work of rescuing the wounded has not been exhibited to moving picture patrons. Among the more interesting incidents is the inspection of the corps by General Joffre and his thanking the brave American boys that drive the cars.

"The Auction of Virtue"

Six-part Production, Featuring Naomi Childers, Appears on the Art Dramas Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. Macdonald.

THE reason for naming this six-part production of melodramatic tendencies "The Auction of Virtue" is somewhat artificial. The incident which serves as an excuse for giving this name to the picture is too minor in importance to leave any deep impression, and again there is a feeling that neither the subject nor the characters which predominate in the play are of the class that the public is at the present time demanding.

The cast in this picture is headed by Naomi Childers with a support consisting of Mrs. Miller, Evelyn Dumo, Leslie Austen, Wyndham Standing and Kirke Brown. Miss Childers does fairly acceptable work. Unfortunately, her expression from beginning to end of the picture betrays too continuously an agonized mental condition to be convincing. The intention of the picture is to play up a purity and strength of purpose in the heroine of the story; but in order to do this, too much of what might be termed "muck" has been raked in by way of contrast. For instance, all of the male characters with the exception of one mild looking artist, are of the undesirable sort. A too frequent portrayal of this species of manhood does not tend to strengthen the faith of the onlooker in humanity, and we are inclined to believe that there is very little call for this kind of picture.

As the story runs, a young woman, who serves as a model in a high-priced gown shop, becomes weary of the poverty that she has always known, and longs to live a life of ease and luxury. The borrowing without permission of a gown from the shop where she works to wear at a dance to which she has been invited by a member of the Bohemian class, opens an opportunity for a temptation to be presented to her by her employer, who tells her that she may have anything she wants at his expense. This is of course accompanied with a suggestion of wrong-doing. At the same time she is in love with an artist, but will not allow herself to acknowledge the fact because he is poor. The loss of the artist's eyesight forms the loophole for the incident from which the name of the picture is derived. At an auction of his pictures by the young woman, she last of all places herself among the articles for sale. Various bids are eagerly made for her by lewd men, one offering a "house on the Drive," another everything she could wish for, including love; and after all have made their bids the artist bids love and marriage. The young woman is lured by the highest bidder to the "house on the Drive," but when she realizes the degraded position in which she is about to allow herself to be placed she suddenly awakes, and after a struggle with the man returns to her artist lover.

Five-Reel Programs Made By Edison and Released By Forum Films Contain Comic, Educational and Dramatic Subjects.

THE new Edison family pictures is a definite move to release a regular program for the famliy, made up of five reels and including a dramatic production and comic, educational, cartoon and quasi-scientific units. These releases are called Conquest "Pictures" and will be distributed through Forum Films, Inc.

The first unit includes "Puss in Boots," a short silhouette comedy; "The Dinosaur and the Missing Link," a manikin comic; "Captains of To-morrow," showing the life and training at West Point; "A Vanishing Race," a short scenic of the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, "The Sea Horse," a study of a little known fish, and "The Half Back," a three-reel story of college life.

"Puss in Boots" is a novel telling of the fairy classic and will delight the younger members of the family: "The Dinosaur and the Missing Link" is startling and amusing at the same time. The grotesque manikins are curiously human in their movements and will excite the interest of the entire family. The three educationals have been made with care and are of real value.

"The Half Back" is the kind of college story that will please the youth of the land. It contains the usual hero who is forced to fight the bully of the school, and avoid the numerous traps set for his undoing. He triumphs in the end, however, wins the prize scholarship and enables his team to carry off the football honors. The game is reproduced with fidelity, and the different scenes of the story are given the correct background. The picture was directed by Ben Tourbett, and is well acted by a cast headed by Yale Boss, Ogden Childs, Scott Fletcher, William Wadsworth and Jessie Stevens.

A Couple of Mutuals

"Gladys' Day Dream," Featuring Marie Cahill, and "Whose Wife," with Gail Kane in the Leading Role, Interesting Offerings on Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Gladys' Day Dream."

A TWO-PART comedy, "Gladys' Day Dream," in which Marie Cahill uses her comedy wiles on behalf of the Mutual program, will be found most entertaining. The production is one of the clean sort that the public are clamoring for, and presents a most amusing situation, not new but always acceptable if well portrayed.

The story tells of a young woman who had a mania for romance. One evening the right opportunity presented itself when she was asked to meet a customer at the 5:15 train with a cloak and handsome evening gown which she had purchased from the romantic young woman's employer. Of course she misses the train, and once in her own room with the garments the temptation to wear them and go in search of romance proves too strong, and a few hours later finds her being escorted home from a dance in a taxi by a floorwalker who also aspires to better things. Gladys knowing that the Goobers, at whose beautiful mansion her brother is butler, are away, allows herself to be taken to the Goobers mansion, representing it as being her home, inviting the young man to call to see her on the following evening. In the midst of the frivolities of the following evening the Goobers return unexpectedly. The incidents that follow are very funny, and Marie Cahill bears out her reputation on the sunny side of life.

"Whose Wife"

With a story that is logical and interesting the five-part production, "Whose Wife," made at the American Studios and featuring Gail Kane, should be a more perfect sample of motion drama than it is. The first half of the picture suffers considerably from poor direction, causing the action to be less forceful than it might be. As it progresses, however, the strength of the story carries the production, and the spectator becomes fully interested in the fortunes of the chief characters of the play.

The story is one of the oft-repeated kind which tells of the woman who, believing her husband dead, is about to marry another, when her former husband appears on the scene. What saves the production from criticism on this point is the fact that various complications have been introduced which add to the interest of the story. The work of Gail Kane is pleasing in most instances, while we must admit that she has been seen to better advantage in other productions.

Triangle Program

"The Snarl," Five-Reel Ince-Kay Bee, with Bessie Barriscale in a Dual Role, and "The Man Who Made Good," Triangle Eastern Production.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE SNARL" is an interesting and picturesque complication, quite appropriately named and produced with the highest skill, but it has an added charm aside from its intrinsic merits in the return of Bessie Barriscale. I say return because it has been some time since this veritable artist has been seen in a role suited to her decided personality. "The Snarl" tells the story of two sisters of strong general resemblance, yet not an impossible one. The sister of fine character succeeds in securing an engagement to sing in opera, but she is injured by the automobile of a wealthy young high roller, temporarily paralyzed from the hips down. The uninjured sister takes her place on the stage mouthing her words, while the injured one sings off stage. The young worldling falls in love with the supposed artist during her performance, marries her hastily and takes her on a hilarious wedding trip aboard his yacht, accompanied by a gay party of friends. The lame sister is permitted to go along for her health.

The bridegroom becomes blinded by a premature explosion of powder intended for a saluting gun and is thus blinded to an affair his newly-made wife is conducting with one of his friends. Upon the lame sister falls the duty of reading to the blind man, which she is persuaded to do in the character of his wife. A veritable snarl of slender threads follows, but it is cut when the young husband recovers his eyesight and arranges with the physician who is treating him to give out the impression that he is still blind. He sees the true state of affairs with some dramatic results and a satisfying conclusion.

The entire story is picturesque in the extreme, with some settings that charm the eye, some fascinating camera points of view and fine acting by the entire company in every detail. To Miss Barriscale falls the difficulties of making a dual role plausible, and she does so with exquisite art of expression and makeup. She is especially effective in giving expression to herself in what she wears, having a fine sense of appropriateness not ordinarily seen on the screen. She is two entirely different people, each character being clear and distinct from the other, and both possessing decided individuality. Some remarkably fine double exposures and substitutions materially help in the illusion, but her psychology is the leading factor of this successful play.

"The Man Who Made Good."

"The Man Who Made Good" starts out with a title which has been used before and one which foretells the end of the story. The use of such titles is called "placarding the plot." It scatters suspense to the winds. The story itself is that of a clerk on small pay. He marries an ambitious girl who begs him to show more vim, but he is spineless until chance starts him on some remunerative work and restores him to a better position, as we are led to expect from the beginning. It could be easily told in one or two reels, is far from being a five-reel story, and is, in consequence, attenuated by well known methods of stretching every unimportant incident to the verge of boredom for the spectator. Aside from this story weakness, there is merit in both the direction and in the acting. They are wasted, however, because of scant opportunity. The general effect is not bad, but it is far below the standard of Ince productions.

Paramount Shows Two Subjects

Jack Pickford and Vivian Martin are Seen in "The Girl at Home," and Marie Doro in "Heart's Desire."

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is a good home atmosphere in "The Girl at Home," the Lasky release for April 26. It is written by Beulah Marie Dix from the story by George Middleton, and is produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The featured players are Jack Pickford and Vivian Martin. The story turns strongly, however, on the doings of two older characters than those portrayed by the youngsters—Squire Padgate and Mary Dexter, played by James Neill and Edythe Chapman. The squire is a "small town lawyer," plainly a successful one, and Mrs. Dexter is the mother of the misguided hero.

Miss Martin has the role of Jean Hilton, the ward of Padgate, who is reared under the care of Mrs. Dexter. Growing up in the same household, the two children fall in love. When Jimmie is about to be debarred from his collegiate education through the failure of his mother's investments it is Jean who insists that her money shall be used to see him through. Jimmie, unaware that any means other than his mother's is backing him, gets into a scrape with a young woman of the college town through her raising a check he had given her. Discovery follows, but everything turns out happily in the end.

The story will have special appeal for the younger element in the doings of the boy and the girl and for older persons in the guardian and the mother. It is a wholesome picture, well staged and well acted. Snow scenes add to the picturesque side.

"Heart's Desire."

The Famous Players will release on April 30 "Heart's Desire," featuring Marie Doro. The story is by Shannon Fife and Eve Unsell. Francis J. Grandon is the director, and he has selected for his backgrounds romantic spots in the far South. The subject will rank as a good picture, even though it may not be a strong one. The theme is of a hard-hearted landlord of the feudal type and the locale an island off France.

Miss Doro is Fleurette, a daughter of Brittany, who keeps a home for her grandmother and little sisters and brothers. It is a role finely suited to the personality of the player. Mario Majeroni is Henri Le Roque, the tight-fisted owner of the estate that figures in the story. Mr. Majeroni makes a disagreeable part stand out. Albert Roscoe is Paul LeRoque, the doctor-nephew of the landlord, who falls in love with the peasant girl. Mr. Roscoe has magnetism; he plays his role with skill and feeling. There is a good supporting cast.

Montagu Love, who has been on the sick list three weeks with a broken wrist sustained while filming "The Brand of Satan," a World picture in which he is starred, is expected back at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee, where he is to finish two pictures already started and awaiting his return.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE plot of "God's Law and Man's," a five-reel photoplay taken from Paul Trent's novel "A Wife by Purchase," is easy to anticipate, but it is well balanced and romantic in character. The Columbia Pictures Corporation has produced it in good style under the direction of John H. Collins, and in the Hindoo girl "Ameia," an opportunity is given Viola Dana to repeat the success she always makes of portraying a part of this type. The ardent but undisciplined nature of this offspring of an English father and a Hindoo mother is indicated by the actress with fidelity and unbroken charm. Her physical expression of the part is more than ordinarily convincing and she makes an appealing figure of the faithful "Ameia," who is ready to give her life for the man she loves.

The scenes of "God's Law and Man's" are laid in India and England and the local color of both countries is well sustained. A young English physician in India saves "Ameia" from being given to the priests of the temple of Krishna by buying her for a wife. He returns to England on the death of his elder brother and his father attempts to force him into a marriage for money. "Ameia" follows him home and a way is found to bring about a happy ending.

Excellent work is accomplished by the supporting company, which includes Robert Walker, Augustus Phillips, Henry

The Great Secret is then revealed to Strong, and he learns that the man he believes to be a criminal is his own father. The mystery surrounding him is cleared up; he is a Secret Service agent and became the leader of The Secret Seven in order to trap the entire band. "Eternal Love"

Five-Reel Universal Production Features Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard in Story with French Locale.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PERHAPS no theme has been adapted to the screen with greater frequency than the story of the artist and the country girl, in which the latter poses for the former and a love affair of the emotional type results. This story is reproduced here in all its familiar phases, and, unfortunately, without sufficient novelty of plot to give the production any great degree of freshness.

The greatest effort toward originality in this story, which was written by E. M. Ingleton, is not found in the plot itself, but in the costuming of characters and choice of attractive settings. The efforts of the director have been quite successful in these respects though the continuity of scenes is not good in places. In one or two instances attractive settings have been brought into the production too much for their own sake and without reference to the situation developed.

Douglas Gerrard plays the part of Paul, the artist. Ruth Clifford, an attractive girl, plays Mignon, the peasant miss, who meets and falls in love with the artist. There is a pathetic feature to the story, where the girl, after he has abandoned her, walks to Paris in wooden shoes, thinking he has been injured. Here she invades a dinner party and a "scene" follows. Later, after he has won the prize competition, Paul awakens to his real love for the girl. He wanders out into a storm searching for her. As a result of this exposure he becomes ill and the girl, learning of this, comes to him. Paul's makeup in the final scenes is bad and this gives an inartistic effect. Others in the cast are George Gebhart, Edward Clark, Myrtle Reeves, Dan Duffy and Miss Marvin.

These two five-reel productions are surrounded by three short-reel features: the 65th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the 66th of the series of weekly trips around the world, conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his travelers to "Colorful Ceylon," and a single reel Klever Komedy in which Victor Moore is starred entitled "Invited Out."

Miss Murray is the star in "The Primose Ring," while Tom Moore appears opposite her, and little Billy Jacobs is also seen in this production.

"The Silent Partner" is purely a drama, one that teaches a lesson of loyalty in business that might well be learned by every human being.

The cast surrounding Miss Sweet and Mr. Meighan in this production is composed of George Herbert, Mabel Van Buren, Ernest Joy, Florence Smythe and Mayme Kelso.

The 65th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, begins a series of motion pictures which will unmask the mediums who have been able to hypnotize thousands of people into the belief that their tricks are actualities rather than frauds. Hereward Carrington, the authority on psychic research, a man who has spent a lifetime in the study of this science, is giving his entire time to the production of these pictures, which will actually prove that more than 98 per cent. of all so-called phenomena are fake, and that the remaining 2 per cent. are in no wise of spiritual origin, but are merely due to an as yet unexplained power on the part of the medium which permits of accomplishing the most startling effects. These pictures will in no wise antagonize or oppose any cult, sect or religion, but will expose the fakir, who, claiming pyschic powers, preys on the credulous, not only for his monetary gain, but frequently to the serious mental hurt of his followers.

Other subjects dealt with in the screen magazine this week, include "The Transplanting of the Peasant Arts of Europe in America," an unusual subject entitled "Stung," and also a very interesting picture on the results obtained through proper training of the bodies of youthful Americans during their school days, as well as carrying out the methods employed in later life.

Burton Holmes in his 66th series of weekly trips around the world which he is conducting personally for his fellow-Paramountaineers takes the traveler to "Colorful Ceylon," a journey through a veritable garden of Eden.

The single reel comedy for this week will find Victor Moore performing in "Invited Out."

Pathe's Comprehensive Exploitation Plans Include Contest for Cash Prizes—Line of Exhibitor's Helps Already Completed.

CASH prizes amounting to two thousand dollars will be offered by Pathe to the motion picture public for the best ending to "The Neglected Wife," Pathe's latest serial, based on the famous novels by Mabel Herbert Urner and released May 13. This offer is in line with Pathe's policy of direct cooperation with the exhibitors and is sure to create a widespread interest in the serial.

No fiction characters of recent time are so well known to the American public as those created by Mrs. Urner in her novels "The Woman Alone" and "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and the "Helen and Warren" stories which are now being published in a list of newspapers including some of the greatest in the country. The thousands upon thousands of letters which Mrs. Urner receives indicate that her stories have struck a responsive chord. It is worthy of note that a great many of these writers suggested to Mrs. Urner that her stories be shown on the screen.

These prize offers will be announced to the public through eighty-two of the most important newspapers in the United States. Slides will also be furnished to the theaters giving the names of the newspapers in which the contest is being conducted. Many of these newspapers have already signified their willingness to co-operate with Pathe in this campaign because they believe it will be a good feature for their readers.

Under the new policy of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, "The Neglected Wife" will be advertised in the two leading newspapers in each community instead of one, as heretofore. A fiction version of "The Neglected Wife" has also been prepared for publication.

The usual complete line of exhibitors' helps has been prepared. These include advance sildes, advance tack cards, a postcard printed in two colors with a message from Ruth Roland, the featured player, advance 24-sheet posters, 1, 3 and 6 sheet posters for each release, one column cut of Miss Roland, two column cuts of scenes of the first three episodes, a stock slide, a newspaper slide, lobby display for each episode, mirrors, pin cushions, photo on easel of Miss Roland, canvas banners and felt pennants.

Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep" for Artcraft.

In further accord with the recent Famous Players-Lasky, Artcraft affiliation announcement, the productions of Elsie Ferguson, the famous stage beauty, will be distributed by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. This gives Artcraft the screen offerings of six of the most prominent motion picture and theatrical celebrities, namely, D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar, George M. Cohan and Elsie Ferguson.

Miss Ferguson is now concluding a triumphant theatrical season in "Shirley Kaye," which is touring the country after scoring an immediate hit on Broadway. Promptly upon concluding her engagement with this play, she will commence activities on her initial photoplay, to be distributed by Artcraft. This production will be an adaptation from the well known story, "Barbary Sheep," Robert Hitchen's greatest seller since "The Garden of Allah."

"The Trufflers" Released May 7.

Heralded by a nation-wide advertising campaign, "The Trufflers," was released May 7. This feature, produced by Essanay, is a picturization of Samuel Merwin's famous story of that title in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. The scenes are laid in Greenwich Village, New York City's Latin quarter, and reveal on the screen for the first time the fascinating Bohemian life of that section.

Nell Craig heads the all-star cast appearing in "The Trufflers." She essays the role of Sue Wilde, the girl who has cast off the draperies of conventionality in her search for the limelight. Sydney Ainsworth is seen as Peter Ericson Mann, the novelist whose jealous love of Sue induces him to portray her aged father as an embezzler. Ernest Maupain, Richard C. Travers and Harry Dunkinson are other well-known actors in the cast.

Finishing "The Planter."

Following the destruction of the studios and all of the properties and costumes of the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation some three or four weeks ago, while the entire cast was engaged in filming some of the big scenes of the 12-reel production of Herman Whittaker's famous novel, "The Planter," starring Tyrone Power, the company has since replaced the costumes and sets in various other studies and locations, and next week will complete the final scenes of the production.

These final scenes, by curious coincidence, will also be fire scenes, and strangely enough the set to be burned is one which was burned at the time the studio was destroyed. It comprises a large interior, and was on the stage at the time of the conflagration, as a great deal of action throughout the play takes place in this particular location.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

A MENAGERIE MIXUP (Kalem).—A sufficient number of laughs are contained in this one-reel Ham comedy. Bud gets a job as an escaped bear, and Ham, who is dressed in a bearskin, on his way to a party, is mistaken for the escaped bear. The "bears" meet in a cave and the real fun starts. Henry Murdoch helps the leading fun-makers considerably.

ROMANCE AND ROSES (Selig).—A fair comedy reel, which concerns the doings of two married couples at a summer resort. Slapstick is resorted to once or twice, and with quite good result. The players are John Lancaster, Lyllian Leighton, William Scott and Irene Wallace.

General Film Company Specials.

THE TRAPPING OF TWO-BIT TUTTLE (Kalem).—A murder mystery and its solution are used as the plot in this two-reel episode of "The American Girl" series. The usual good Western action and backgrounds characterize this release. The number is full of mystery and is thoroughly acceptable. Madge King and her followers this time not only solve the murder, but are instrumental in bringing about the capture of the culprit. It is in the chase scenes that excitement is highest. Reviewed in this issue.

PASS THE HASH, ANN (Essanay).—A delightful two-reel comedy-drama—one of the "Black Cat" features. There is humor and romance intermingled in an entertaining manner in the release, which elements are accentuated by Marguerite Clayton and Edward Arnold, who have the leading roles. The story tells of a youth who, having inherited a fortune, returns to his old boarding house. Despite obstacles, he marries the "hash slinger," who, it later develops, is a wealthy girl slinging hash to get a line on the "lower classes."

TWO-DOLLAR GLOVES (Selig).—A quite interesting story is unfolded on the screen in this two-reel drama. It tells of a girl, the daughter of a close-fisted merchant, who "gets her first taste of blood" when she goes to the city and spends two dollars for a pair of gloves. Soon she has squandered all of her money and, in desperation, she tells her father she is engaged to a bachelor. The bachelor, who has hitherto looked unkindly on the girl, marvels at her new appearance and makes the engagement a sure-enough one. The cast includes Byrdine Zuber, Fred Eckhart, Casson Ferguson and M. C. Von Betz.

Art Dramas, Inc.

THE AUCTION OF VIRTUE (U. S. Amusement Co.), May 3.—This six-part production features Naomi Childers and was produced by the U. S. Amusement Company. The picture is not especially commendable, for, while it intends to portray strength of character in the chief feminine of the story, the types of manhood shown are not calculated to inspire faith in humanity. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

TREASON, May 14.—A timely and thoroughly acceptable five-reel subject, in which many battle scenes have been filmed. The war stuff is well staged and fairly spectacular. Allen Holubar is the featured player. There is enough heart interest and suspense in the plot to carry the war stuff. A longer review is printed on the review page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

AMERICAN METHODS, April 30.—A five-reel screen version of Ohnet's celebrated novel of French life, this photoplay is well produced and has many engrossing situations. William Farnum heads the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

HER SECRET (Vitagraph), April 30.—A five-reel drama rich in dramatic strength. The picture is a fine example of continuity of thought and development. Alice Joyce and Harry Morey are featured. The story tells of a girl who was robbed of her honor by a drunken civil engineer and who, later, marries him, neither knowing that the other was the one of the hotel incident. The film was produced by Perry N. Vekroff. It is not one that will be thoroughly understood or appreciated by children. Reviewed in this issue.

H. Grosman Distributing Co.

WAR PRIDES (Finch).—Flora Finch is the one outstanding feature in this two-reel comedy. It is she who carries the production all the way through. It is not intended as a first-class offering; as a comedy it might be described as being of a poor degree of excellence. Lower-class audiences will appreciate this offering mostly. A full review was printed on page 808 of the issue of May 5.

K-E-S-E, Inc.

THE DANGER TRAIL (Selig), April 30.—An absorbing story of the far North, abounding in thrilling incidents, with an appealing display of a woman's devotion. A magnificent cast includes H. B. Warner, Miss Violet Heming and W. Lawson Butt. The great fight scene in this production is a worthy rival of the memorable fistic contest in "The Spoilers." The wonderful settings will appeal to every spectator. An extended review appears on another page in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation

GOD'S LAW AND MAN'S (Columbia), April 23.—A story of India and England, this five-reel photoplay is romantic and interesting, and is capitally played by Viola Dana and the supporting company. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

ONE OF THE FAMILY (Metro-Drew), May.—A new way of solving the servant-girl problem is shown in this one-reel farce. The plot is funny in itself, and the acting of the Drews and Georgie Drew Mendum makes the most of every situation.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 121 (Gaumont), April 25.—This number showe some scenes from the "Wake Up America" parade in New York, Rear-Admiral Peary reviewing a battalion of naval militia in Los Angeles, Allied warships in the harbor at Norfolk, Va., the naval militia leaving Los Angeles for Pacific Coast duty, the testing of a new tractor by the Government, and other interesting scenes.

AND IN WALKED UNCLE (Strand), April 25.—An amusing comedy based on an old-style story. Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco are the stars and acquit themselves well. The story tells of a young man who marries in haste and receives a letter from his uncle, offering him a new position. Uncle, of course, is not to know that he is married and walks into the young people's home at a very inopportune time. Complications occur in which the young man palms off his wife to his uncle as the wife of his friend, who happens on the scene at the time. The result is very amusing.

THE RANSOME (Cub), April 26.—In this number of the George Ovey series the hero disguises as a Russian chauffeur and applies for the position of chauffeur in the family of his sweetheart's father. His rival, trying to get revenge, unintentionally opens the way for Jerry to prove his bravery and capture a bandit for whom a large ransome is offered. Rather amusing.

REEL LIFE NO. 52 (Gaumont), April 26.—This number of "Reel Life" contains the following interesting subjects: "A Tabloid Bungalow," "Red Clay Workers of Barbados," "An Altiscope Rifle," "Cargo Boats of Tomorrow," "Metal Spinning," and "Life in the Soudan."

GLADY'S DAY DREAM (Cahill), April 30.—An amusing comedy featuring Marie Cahill. The story tells of how, Gladys, a romantic young woman, gets into trouble by following her desire for romance too far. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

MUTUAL TOURS NO. 26 (Gaumont), May 1.—This number of the series encompasses the following subjects: "Warsaw, Poland," "From Goteborg to Christiania," and "The Valley of the River Lot." These are all well illustrated and interesting.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A PLASTER FEI'D (Vogue), April 28.—It is rather difficult to find the comedy in this two-part production. It is made up more or less of slapstick stuff, and is based on the borrowing of a bag of plaster by one plasterer from another. The contents of the bag proves to be flour instead of plaster, and this of course is the cue for some rapid action by way of revenge.

WHOSE WIFE (Mutual Star Production), April 30.—A five-part melodrama featuring Gail Kane. The story follows the lines of an oft-repeated tale of the wife who believing her husband dead is about to marry again, when her former husband appears on the scene. Complications which have been introduced strengthen the interest of the picture considerably and aid in making it an acceptable offering.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

THE BUTCHER BOY (Arbuckle), April 23.—One of the best two-reel comedies that Roscoe Arbuckle has ever made. If one laugh weighed an ounce "The Butcher Boy" would weigh as much as the comedian himself. It is crammed full of laughs. Fatty's dog proves himself a great comedy actor, too. A complete review was printed on page 634 of the issue of April 28.

THE GIRL AT HOME (Lasky), April 26.—Jack Pickford and Vivian Martin are featured in this story, carrying a good home atmosphere—a wholesome picture and well made. It is reviewed in another column.

HEART'S DESIRE (Famous Players), April 30.—A good, although not a strong, picture, featuring Marie Doro. It is reviewed on another page.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

THREE STRIKES, YOU'RE OUT (International), May 6.—A very amusing Happy Hooligan baseball cartoon, it shares the reel with "Dredging the Quahog," an interesting showing of deep-sea dredging for the hard shell clam.

THE RECOIL (Astra), May 13.—Anthony P. Kelly is the author of this five-reel melodrama in which William Courtenay and Lillian Grauze play the leads. The story is up-to-date and filled with action. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE DELICATESSEN MYSTERY (Pathe), May 13.—Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby head the cast of this one-reel farce, which is full of broad and lively fun.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 31 (Pathe), May 13.—"Style Information" is the proper title for this instalment of the "Florence Rose Fashions." It is on the same reel with a colored educational, "Some Unusual Birds," Japanese sparrows and nightingales being shown.

CENTRAL ARIZONA (Pathe), May 13.—The eighth Combitone is devoted to more of the wonderful scenery of Arizona. Fish Creek, Devil's Gulch, Superstition Mountain, Eagle Head Rock and Arrowhead Mountain are among the points of interest.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 60 (Universal), April 25.—Opening of the baseball season occupies a conspicuous place in this week's review. Patriotic subjects are also treated in various ways of an instructive sort.

THE LOST APPETITE (Nestor), May 7.—An original and clever little comedy notion, written into scenario form by Fred A. Palmer, and featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts. A young couple in the city entertain a country relative, who almost eats them out of house and home. The relative makes good later by sending them a carload of potatoes. This is laughable and well acted. A good subject.

BASEBALL MADNESS (Victor), May 8.—Smiling Billy Mason appears in this, disguised as a Swedish waitress. The proprietor of the restaurant, portrayed by Victor Potel, falls in love with the supposed girl. Then Billy leaves suddenly and plays in another ball game. The action in this, as in previous numbers of the series, is jerky, and for this reason does not make a very strong impression.

SWEARING OFF (Victor), May 10.—A comedy subject, featuring Milton Sims and Eileen Sedgwick. The young husband is addicted to smoking and has a tobacco heart. He is ordered to the mountains, but the guides smoke and he has a hard time getting way from the habit. This is a small idea handled in a breezy and quite amusing manner. Good direction does a great deal to strengthen the subject.

FLAMES OF TREACHERY (Imp.), May 10.—A business story, by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, featuring Lois Wilson, Clyde Benson and Lee Hill. Change of ownership of the firm leads to an investigation. The young man sent to make this catches the manager in crooked work. The latter also tries to force his attentions on the girl stenographer. The villainy is a little too obvious in character, but the cast is agreeable and the interest well maintained.

SIGNS OF TROUBLE (Victor), May 11.—This comedy pictures Lucille, the resaurant queen, in search of a husband. She mitsakes an employment bureau for a matrimonial agency and gets in trouble with a married man in search of a cook. This contains a number of laughable moments.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

LITTLE BO-PEEP (L-KO), April 25.—Dan Russell is featured as a shepherd boy in this two-reel number. He falls in love with an actress whom he sees dancing over the meadows. The goat herd makes a good feature; also the large family of boys. This is full of good humor of the nonsensical sort. It is a very successful offering of the type, and is free from offense. A good comic number.

ETERNAL LOVE (Butterfly), May 7.—A five-reel subject, by E. M. Ingelton, featuring Douglas Gerrard, Ruth Clifford, Myrtle Reeves, George Gebhart and others. The story is laid in Brittany and in the Latin Quarter of Paris, and concerns a young artist who falls in love with a country girl. Later he deserts her and she follows him to the city, where they are reunited after numerous trials. There is no particular novelty of plot. Some of the scenic effects are very attractive. The closing half reel is marred by a bad makeup on the part of the hero, which detracts from the emotional quality of the situations depicted. The number as a whole is of only average strength.

THE GRIP OF LOVE (Gold Seal), May 8.—A three-reel subject, by Willard Mack, featuring Alan J. Holubar, Louise Lovely, Sydney Dean, Alfred Allen, Ed Brady and others. The story, laid in the Tennessee mountains, has all the familiar plot ingredients—the hero mistaken for a revenue man, the heroine a school teacher and the villian a jealous mountaineer. The presentation is consistent and carries the interest along in good style. Perhaps the characterizations are the freshest feature of this. At any rate they are much better than usual in this type of story.

TOM'S TRAMPING TROUPE (L-KO), May 9.—A two-reel burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin." This opens with the arrival of a company of actors in a small town. The performance itself is pictured in the second reel. The humor is not at all strong in this, none of the small business being particularly funny. The dinner scene in the first reel is not a good feature. The company, which includes Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton and others, has been seen in much better productions than this.

THE GIRL IN THE GARRET (Imp.), May 11.—A two-reel number by Ben Cohn, featuring Mollie Malone, Jack Nelson, Anna Dodge and George Berrell. This tells an entertaining little story of a girl sent to her aunt for an education. The aunt imposes on her, assisted by the daughter. The housekeeper steps in and lays the facts before the girl's father. There is a pretty love story also, and the affair between the father and the housekeeper is well presented. The number as a whole is bright and entertaining.

ONE WILD NIGHT (Bison), May 12.—A two-reel number, by W. B. Pearson, featuring Gypsy Hart, Kingsley Benedict nad a group of cowboy characters, including "Kewpie" Morgan, Ray Hanford, Billy Human, Charles Pearley and Sam Appel. The plot concerns an Arizona girl in the East. She meets up with a bunch of visiting cowboys in a unique way and they proceed to liven up a social affair. There is some amusing comedy of the farcical type in this. It strikes a good average.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE SNARL (Ince-Kay Bee), May 6.—An unusually interesting and picturesque story of dual characterization, with high complication, admirably pictured and affording Bessie Barriscale a rare opportunity to show her skill as an actress, to which she responds with decided grace and charm.

THE MAN WHO MADE GOOD (Triangle Eastern Production), May 13.—A very attenuated story of a young clerk who made good when he had a chance. Not up to the Triangle standard.

The Week in the Fox Studios

New Farnum Subject to be Made on the Coast—Other Subjects Ready.

AFTER completing the photoplay on which he is now working, William Farnum, star of many William Fox super de luxe productions, will return East. His future photoplays will be made at the Fox studios in Fort Lee. He and his company will start East within a month. Mr. Farnum left New York in December, 1915, and produced the first Fox picture made on the coast. Frank Lloyd, his director, will come East with him.

The cast for the new William Fox feature with Dustin Farnum has been completed. It includes Winifred Kingston, Willard Louis, William Burress, Bertram Grassby, Bert Hadley and Howard Gaye.

Valeska Suratt has presented a flag to the company of volunteers organized by the members of her company and employees in the studio in which she produces William Fox features.

William Fox has added two more new writers, famous in literary circles throughout the country, to his reorganized scenario writing staff, which will be under the supervision of Sydney Reynolds. They are George Scarborough and Larry Evans, the former a well-known dramatist and the latter one of the best short story writers of the day.

Stuart Holmes and his company, which has been producing a new film drama for William Fox in Fort Lee, is now doing exteriors while a huge ballroom set is being built at the studio.

Another R. A. Walsh photodrama will be soon released by William Fox. The leading role is played by Miriam Cooper, who sprung to fame by her work in "The Honor System." Mr. Walsh is now putting the finishing touches on the picture.

A June Caprice feature is booked for release the week of May 7. It is "A Small Town Girl," which shows the little Sunshine Maid in a typically happy role. It was directed by John G. Adolfi.

May Mutuals

List of Subjects to Be First Offerings on New Two-Features-Weekly Plan.

In line with its new policy of two feature releases every week the Mutual Film Corporation announces the following list of star productions scheduled for the month of May.

"Hedda Gabler," a picturization of Ibsen's famous play, brings to the screen Nance O'Neil's portrayal of the role of "Hedda Gabler," which she has played over seven hundred times on the speaking stage.

May 14: "Annie-for-Spite," a picture in which Mary Miles Minter apears first as a homely girl, and later, when adopted by a wealthy woman, develops into a beautiful girl.

May 22: "The Mirror," a story of theatrical life starring Majorie Rambeau. Much of the action occurs on and about Broadway. "The Checkmate," Jackie Saunders plays a dual role of twin sisters in this photodrama.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

SEENA OWEN IN O. HENRY STORY.

Director Chester is now filming the final scenes of "Madame Bo-Peep," in which Seena Owen will be starred, at the Triangle studios in Hollywood, California.

This will be a screen version of O. Henry's story, "Madame Bo-Peep of the Ranches," written in the heyday of the great American author's success. When O. Henry's death occurred in 1910 the silent drama was still in a very primitive stage development. In fact, it is doubtful whether he ever looked forward to the time when his stories would be considered ideal screen material, and companies would offer better prices for the cinema rights than he had been able to obtain for periodical and book rights combined. However, that time has arrived.

It is said that Seena Owen appears at her best in this dramatic story of the Texas sheep country. She will be supported by A. D. Sears, F. A. Turner, and other capable Triangle players.

"UNCONQUERED" TO BE FANNIE WARD'S NEXT PICTURE.

Fannie Ward, who was last seen upon the screen in "The School for Husbands," in which she scored a distinct personal success, will next be starred by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. in "Unconquered," an unusually powerful dramatic story by Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun.

Miss Ward has already established a reputation for her versatility by reason of her remarkable work in such dramatic productions as "The Cheat" and by her delightfully comic impersonation in "The School for Husbands." "Unconquered" is decidedly her most dramatic role since "The Cheat." It is the story of a young mother whose devotion to her small son leads her to risk life itself in protecting him from a brutal father and later from a negro fanatic.

In "Unconquered" there appears the strongest cast which has been assembled in any one Lasky production since "Oliver Twist," including in support of Miss Ward such distinguished players as Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Jack Dean, Mabel Van Buren, Jane Wolfe and little Billy Jacobs. It will be remembered that both Mr. Bosworth and Mr. Marshall did notable work in "Oliver Twist," that Miss Van Buren has played a number of "heavy" roles in the receent Lasky-Paramount pictures, and that Jack Dean has contributed dramatic and comic skill to several of Miss Ward's recent pictures.

MARGARET ILLINGTON COMPLETES "SACRIFICE."

"Sacrifice," which was written especially for Margaret Illington as a vehicle for her stage debut, has been completed at the Lasky studio and Miss Illington is now on her way East. The picture will be released by Paramount on May 3d. Charles Kenyon, who has written several of Miss Illington's stage successes, is also the author of this photoplay. The scenario is the work of Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun, whose technical skill has been shown in several recent Lasky pictures. Frank Reicher, well know stage director, who has been a member of the Lasky directorial staff for several months, directed this production for Miss Illington.

ART DRAMAS EXPANDING.

Following the announcement recently made that the Modern theater, Boston, one of the largest and most important picture houses in that city, had booked the Apollo-Art Drama "Pride and The Devil" for a two week's run, comes a telegram from Sol Lesser announcing an even more encouraging state of affairs.

Mr. Lesser recently contracted to handle the Art Dramas Program for three Western states. That his exploitation has been successful is demonstrated by his wire, which reads:

"In spite of the most spirited competition in the history of the picture industry in this city, we have secured three first-run engagements in leading theaters for Ara Dramas, in our first week of exploitation. 'Pride and the Devil' is booked for the Portola theater for the week of April 22; 'Rosie O'Grady' for Tivoli the week of May 6; 'A Man and the Woman' at the St. Francis for week of May 6, besides numerous requests for bookings from all parts of the territory. I am highly elated over results so far and futurs prospects are even more encouraging.

"SOL LESSER, San Francisco."

"THE MARCELLINI MILLIONS" COMPLETED.

"The Marcellini Millions," the next Morosco-Paramount picture starring George Beban, has been completed and is scheduled for release on May 14. The story was written by Edith Kennedy and prepared for the screen by the author and Mr. Beban in collaboration. It was directed by Donald Crisp, who has presided over all of Mr. Beban's recent photoplay successes. An exceptionally large cast of well known players appears in support of Mr. Beban, including Helen Jerome Eddy, Pietro Sosso, Henry Woodward, Eugene Pallette and Adele Farrington.

Miss Eddy, who plays the role of Beban's wife in the picture, will be remembered for her distinguished work in "The Wax Model," "Her Father's Son," "Pasquale," "As Men Love" and "His Sweetheart," in all of which she made herself conspicuous by her clever acting. Miss Eddy is in fact one of the very few young actresses who has made a success of character work upon the screen. Her young Italian woman in "The Marcellini Millions" will rank with any character work that has been done on the screen.

The settings for this production are extremely elaborate, the exterior of the Marcellini mansion being the most comprehensive set that has ever been built in the Morosco studio. The spacious great hall with its grand staircase, the mezzanine balconies, and all the magnificent paneling, elaborate in every detail, would in itself constitute an exceptional piece of scenic construction. This, however, is only one part of the remarkable setting which also includes the living room, the dining room and some of the upper rooms of the mansion. Every room in the scene was designed and executed in a manner commensurate with the lavishness and splendor of the great hall. Massive furniture and huge paintings and tapestries stamp this entire dwelling as being unmistakably that of a millionaire.

Pathe Program Week of May 13

Courtenay in Strong Feature, First "Neglected Wife" Episode and First Myers-Theby Comedy Features of Week.

WILLIAM COURTENAY in another Gold Rooster Play comparable to "Kick In" and "The Hunting of the Hawk," the first episode of the big "Neglected Wife" serial and the first Myers-Theby comedy, are features of Pathe's program for the week of May 13.

In "The Recoil," William Courtenay has opposite him Lillian Greuze, famous as the star of New York's French threater. The stars are the best the stage affords, the sets are sumptuous, the location well chosen and the atmosphere perfect, as goes without saying, when it is known that the picture was produced by Astra under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

"The Recoil" is a typically modern play, written by Anthony P. Kelly. It tells how a young girl is saved from a bruite, how he is killed and her brother arrested for the murder on circumstantial evidence and how the United States Secret Service plays an important part in the climax. The action is rapid and the production thrillingly dramatic.

The first episode of "The Neglected Wife," in which Ruth Roland is starred, supported by a strong cast including Roland Bottomley, the celebrated English actor, is entitled "The Woman Alone." The picture asks the question, "Which is to blame, the wife, the man or the 'other woman' for the happenings in this great story of life as it really is?"

"When Jail Birds Fly" is the title of the ninth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross." The production is by Astra under the direction of William Parke, and the serial is playing to great success everywhere throughout the country.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby appear for the first time on the Pathe program in "The Delicatessen Mystery," a hilarious comedy in one reel. Harry Myers is funnier than he has ever been before and Rosemary Theby prettier than she has ever been before. In addition, there is the most killingly farcical detective ever seen on stage or screen.

The eighth release of "Know America, the Land We Love" Combitone scenics, is entitled "Central Arizona." Rugged and picturesque Arizona affords unsurpassed opportunity, and these pictures take full advantage of it. A young mountain lion is caught by the camera as well as a number of the most beautiful spots in the world.

"Style Information" is the title of the thirty-first Florence Rose Fashion Film, released in split reel. On the same reel with the Fashion Film is "Some Unusual Birds" a split-reel Pathecolor showing many of the most beautiful birds of China and Japan as they really look.

Neilan and Melford Continue With Lasky

Well-Known Directors to Continue Producing for Paramount—Each Signs Two Years' Contract.

ONE of the first important pieces of information to find its way East after the arrival of Jesse L. Lasky at his studio in Hollywood, is the announcement that Marshall Neilan and George Melford have signed two-year contracts to continue directing Lasky-Paramount pictures—this, despite a recent announcement that Mr. Melford had been engaged by another producing company. The record of these two directors is one of which they may be justly proud, for they have contributed many notable productions to Paramount Pictures.

Marshall Neilan joined the Lasky directorial staff after he had won a great personal success as Lieutenant Pinkerton in the Famous Players' adaption of John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly," in which Mary Pickford starred. He had had considerable experience in directing for other companies and this has been ripened under the tutelage of Cecil B. DeMille.

Mr. Neilan has directed two important adaptations of successful novels for Lasky; namely, F. Hopkinson Smith's "The Tides of Barnegat," and Gene Stratton Porter's "Freckles," in the latter of which Louise Huff and Jack Pickford are co-stars. One of his most sensational successes was an adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's short story, "The Bottle Imp," in which Sessue Hayakawa starred.

George Melford has to his credit a number of tremendously popular Lasky pictures, among them being "The Governor's Lady," "A Gentleman of Leisure," "The Fighting Hope," "Armstrong's Wife," "The Immigrant," "Out of Darkness," "The Puppet Crown," "The Race," "Stolen Goods," "To Have and to Hold," "The Woman" and "Young Romance."

Mr. Melford has directed Fannie Ward in such screen successes as "Tennessee's Pardner," "The Years of the Locust," "The Gutter Magdalene" and "Each Pearl a Tear;" "Wallace Reid in "The Yellow Pawn," "The Selfish Woman" and "The House of the Golden Windows," and Lou-Tellegen, who has recently become a Lasky director himself in "The Unknown" and "The Explorer." Among his more recent contributions to the screen are "The Cost of Hatred," co-starring Kathlyn Williams and Theodore Roberts, and "The Evil Eye," which was written by Hector Turnbull, and "The Winning of Sally Temple" and "The School for Husbands," starring Fannie Ward. Mr. Melford has completed for release "The Crystal Gazer" and "Her Strange Wedding" and is now beginning work on another production, the name of which will be announced later.

Harry Cohen Returns to New York

Metro Special Representative Tells of Motion Picture Conditions in British Columbia.

AFTER having covered 15,000 miles in four months as Metro's special representative, Harry J. Cohen has returned to the home offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation. Mr. Cohen left New York Dec. 20. Primarily he was to supervise the Western campaign for Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are stars.

His handling of "The Great Secret" was exceptionally brilliant and when he had completed that work he began looking after general business for Metro along the Pacific Coast and in British Columbia.

In discussing his trip, Mr. Cohen said: "I found general picture conditions excellent in the Western States and British Columbia. This was particularly true of Washington and Oregon. Conditions have never been better in Seattle. The program picture is demanded in the West. The exhibitor understands that the program showing is to his benefit, and the regular patron knows he will get his money's worth.

"War conditions are not worrying the Western exhibitors. I was in the West when the 'state of war' was declared to exist. The President's message aroused tremendous enthusiasm, and the response in the way of enlistments has been all that could be desired."

Mr. Cohen said that when he went to Vancouver he found the newspapers there had agreed that motion pictures were of no general interest to the average reader and had adopted a system of treating motion pictures "as they would a patent medicine." He arranged a meeting of editors and went over the field of motion pictures with them. He argued that motion picture productions are as good a newspaper feature nowadays as are sporting events or social happenings. Mr. Cohen presented statistics showing that thousands of motion picture-goers were reading newspapers chiefly because of the picture features in them. When he had finished his talk the editors, by a unanimous vote, agreed that motion pictures are good circulation builders and holders.

SELIG REPORTS QUICK SALES ON BIG FEATURE.

The Selig Polyscope Company reports quick sales on what is said to be Selig's most expensive and elaborate motion picture drama, "The Garden of Allah." Territorial rights are selling rapidly and it is expected and planned that a Chicago premier will be given in the near future. No time nor expense will be spared in presenting "The Garden of Allah" in a manner befitting its beauty.

"Beware of Strangers," another of the Selig Diamond Specials, is said to have broken records for the rapidity with which territorial rights were disposed of and reports received from all sources by the Selig Company are that "Beware of Strangers" is a first class box office attraction.

Extensive exploitation of the latest of Selig feature films, "Who Shall Take My Life?" has not as yet been instituted, but, according to the Selig Company, will start in the near future. "'Who Shall Take My Life?" is a forceful argument against capital punishment and was written by Maibelle Heikes Justice.

The Selig Company announces ones, threes, sixes and twenty-sheets, slides, press sheets, cuts, ad sheets, folders, heralds, lobby displays in oil colors can be furnished with "'Who Shall Take My Life?"

MAE MURRAY IN "AT FIRST SIGHT."

Mae Murray has begun work on a photophlay version of George Middleton's "At First Sight," which is being staged in the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studio, in accordance with arrangements completed with Mr. Lasky. Robert Leonard, who accompanied Miss Murray East from the Lasky studio, is in charge of the production, which will be known as a Lasky picture when it is released by Paramount. Cameraman Charles Rosher, who has been working with Mr. Leonard in several of his more recent pictures, is also doing the photographic work in this production.

The story of "At First Sight" is such a one as might be expected from the clever author of "The House of a Thousand Candles," "The Cavalier," and "Hit the Trail, Holliday." Miss Murray plays Justine Gibbs, an attractive and highly American type of girl, who rebels against a prearranged marriage and follows the dictates of her own heart.

BONAVITA WAS IN "WOMAN AND BEAST."

Graphic Features, producers of "The Woman and the Beast," have just disclosed that Captain Jack Bonavita, the famous animal trainer slain recently by one of his own lions, appeared in this film production.

"We did not feature the fact in our advertising, on the posters, or in the film," says the Graphic, "because we did not want it to appear that we used a tragedy for advertising effect.

"But although you will find no trace of it in film or advertising, it is a fact that Bonavita appeared in our film, doubling in the scene of the battle between man and beast, for Alphonse Ethier.

"Ethier is a giant in stature and nerve, but he assuredly needed a double for the particular scene, and Bonavita was the double."

PRIZE OFFERED FOR TRADE MARK.

Harry R. Raver, President of Art Dramas, incorporated, announces that his company will offer twenty-five dollars for a design or a suggestion that will make an acceptable trade mark.

The contest closes June 1. As soon after that date as possible the winner's name will be announced. The jury which will be in charge will be selected in a few days. Mr. Raver will head the committee.

The accepted design will be used in all advertising, photographs and also on the films themselves. It must be of a sort which will attract the eye, and which can be easily remembered.

Furthermore, as it must be used often in greatly reduced size, its detail must not be so full as to make it indistinct. Simplicity, originality and uniqueness are the qualities sought for.

Since the contest was first proposed, a few weeks ago, designs have been pouring in, and these have all been, without a single exception, in the form of a pallette. This design is inacceptable to Art Dramas, so contestants are advised to be a little more original.

All designs should be sent to Contest Committee, Art Dramas Incorporated, 1400 Broadway, New York. Stamped envelopes for return should be inclosed. The company will not be responsible for any drawings which are not sent in compliance with this last rule.

IMPROVED REEL AND SHIPPING CASE.

A reel with a new rim locking device is to be placed on the market shortly by the inventor, A. B. Carter, 32 Oak Street, Brattleboro, Vt. The reel has a band that engages the outer edge of the sides of the rim and securely locks it, thereby preventing all injury to the film during handling and shipment. Mr. Carter also has patents pending on a film shipping case that will appeal to all exchanges and shippers of film. It is a circular metal case and will be made in different sizes to carry two, four, six and eight reels. The inventor spent several days in New York recently, visiting the trade and demonstrating his two devices.

"A SOCIAL CLIMBER" (Selig).

"A Social Climber" is the title of the latest Selig multiple reel drama released in General Film Service. The play has to do with a real-for-sure Viscount, who visits America on a sightseeing tour. On the same train Westward bound with the English nobleman is "Gentleman" Jimmy Burke, a confidence man. The train is wrecked and Burke, believing the Viscount killed, appropriates the Englishman's baggage and assumes the Englishman's name. The crook makes love to the belle of Hicksville, who is a social climber. The real Viscount without baggage or other means to establish his identity is frowned upon by the Hicksville belle, but her younger sister pities the unfortunate man, who bears evidence of refinement. At the proper time the social climber discovers that she has become engaged to marry a crook, while her plainer sister accepts the Englishman's offer of marriage. A capable cast, appropriate scenic effects and good photography make this release all that can be desired.

"Rescuing Uncle" is the latest Selig comedy in General Film Service, and was written by W. E. Wing. There are a lot of laughs in this genuine comedy plot, which is carried to a merry-making conclusion by such comedians as John Lancaster, Sidney Smith and William Scott.

"THE SLACKER." (Emerald).

"The Slacker," a spectacular military production, in which actual units of the United States military service participate, and based upon the recent historical events leading up to the declaration of war against Germany, is being produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., under the auspices and direction of the Wisconsin Defense League. It is a semi-official Government proposition, the army, navy, marines and national guard co-operating in producing the military scenes.

"The Slacker" has three aims: First, it is produced to assist in the recruiting campaign, not only in Wisconsin but throughout the United States; second, to portray in picture for educational purposes the real reasons why the United States went to war with Germany; and third, to show the intrigue and activities of German Government agents in the United States.

As its title suggests, "The Slacker" deals with a young man who slacks his duty as an American and who has come under the influence of a German Government agent. Though replete with stirring scenes there is no "flag waving" for effect, and it is based upon a strong and consistent story.

Nell Creig, who has just closed with the Essanay company, and Edward Arnold will be seen in the principal roles of this production, which is being made under the personal supervision of Frederick J. Ireland, President of the Emerald Motion Picture Co.

The scenario is the work of Mr. Ireland, who is primarily responsible for the culmination of this new recruiting scheme.

BRITISH WAR FILM BIG HIT IN CHICAGO.

Following the announcement that Pathe and not the General Film Company would release the output of Official War Pictures, Inc., it is stated that after a $7,000 advance sale, the British War Films played the Chicago Auditorium April 11 to a capacity house totaling $10,000 in paid admission, and that bookings are especially heavy also in the New Orleans, Boston, Philadelphia and Omaha territories, despite the fact that only about a week has elapsed since the transfer and all Pathe offices have not yet received prints sufficient to fill the demand.

Probably the Chicago papers have never been so enthusiastic in greeting an attraction either of stage or screen as they were in this case. Leading citizens of Chicago joined with these big papers in declarations which show conclusively that any idea such as that reported to have been advanced by one man in Pittsburgh is mistaken.

Thanhouser Favors Stars

Believes Beautiful and Talented Players Are Entitled to Distinction in Cast.

FROM every section of the country where the movie fan holds forth," states Edwin Thanhouser, "comes commendation of our work. The Thanhouser Gold Rooster feature has gone over, and with a bang. No single producer can boost such fine press criticisms as our feature product is receiving.

"And it isn't just the fans and the critics who are talking about us. Take the letter that our star, Frederick Warde, has just received. It is on the letterhead of the Board of Education of Cleveland and is signed 'J. M. H. Fredericks, Superintendent of schools.' It says:

"'I wish to assure you that it was a great pleasure for our teachers and myself to witness the private view of 'The Vicar of Wakefield' last Saturday. The moving picture is certainly elevated by such a visual presentation of such a story.'

"So the big, costly feature finds its meed of appreciation," went on Mr. Thanhouser. "The star of the Warde type, with enormous national prestige, is sure to attract the best people everywhere. The big star, in the big production, pays.

"Our Gold Rooster, 'Mary Lawson's Secret,' is another example. The leading role was a typical Charlotte Walker role, so we went out and engaged Charlotte Walker. When you see the critisms, you will see it paid. The critics have got to like a big star in a big play!

"Another Thanhouser Gold Rooster that will leave its impression is 'When Love Was Blind,' which features the greatest Thanhouser star, Florence La Badie. No actress in the country to-day enjoys a larger following than this popular star and her performance in this Gold Rooster play belies her reputation.

"Speaking of stars, let me say that I have not lost faith in my old theory that the right kind of star material can with intelligent training, sometimes be developed from players whose physical attractions and all-round talent entitles them to something better than the minor parts. In other words, I believe in granting to players of such gifts the right to promotion. This sort of material is very scarce, I grant. I think our Gladys Leslie is this sort of material and I expect to prove it to the fans in a feature that Van Dyke Brooke is making at this moment.

"We have shifted our all-star producers' staff about a little. Ernest Warde, who directed his father to such advantage in 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' has been given Miss La Badie to produce, and Emile Chautard will make the next Frederick Warde production.

"The new La Badie feature is a seven-reel like 'Vicar of Wakefield.' But it is not that style of a play. I would call it a red-blooded melodrama. I cannot give more particulars until we have run through a first print, but I don't mind indicating here that the new seven-reeler is in the sensational class. Strictly clean, of course. In Miss La Badie's support are Richard R. Neill, Wayne Arey, Gertrude Dallas, J. H. Gilmour, Arthur Bower and Claude Cooper.

"So many people are curious to see Frederick Warde in his first modern play, 'Hinton's Double,' that we have casted him for another minus doublet and hose. The Shakespeare fans throughout the country, who have organized Frederick Warde Shakespearian clubs, don't know what to make of it. But they all wish him well in the change and their interest in his future pictures has increased for the very reason that the films will reveal a new Frederick Warde to them. We have not decided on a definite title for this feature as yet, but I might state the cast consists of Mr. Warde, Jeanne Eagels, Robert Vaughn, Carey Hastings, James Ewens, Ernest Howard, Grace Stevens and little Helen Badgley.

"While I am speaking about our productions in work, let me mention a completed one. It is our next Pathe release, called 'The Candy Girl.' The finest notices given a feature film in a long time will be accorded this feature. Just note this prediction."

"PERIWINKLE," NEXT WINTER PICTURE.

Mary Miles Minter has started work on her next production, "Periwinkle," which is an adaptation of the story by William Farquar Payson.

In this feature the little star appears most of the time dressed in trousers, rubber boots, oilskin coat and sou'wester. She is a little waif rescued from a shipwreck and reared by a beach comber and his daughter, and given the name of "Periwinkle."

George Fisher plays opposite Miss Minter, and others in the cast include Arthur Howard, Clarence Burton, Alan Forrest, Harvey Clark, George Periolat and Ann Schaefer.

"A BIT OF KINDLING" SAUNDERS' NEXT.

"A Bit of Kindling" is the title of the next picture shown for Jockie Saunders. It will be the fourth of the series of features in which Miss Saunders is appearing for Mutual.

Arthur Shirley plays opposite Miss Saunders in the role of a young civil engineer. The supporting cast includes J. P. Wade, Charles Dudley, Ethel Ritchie, Edward Jobson, H. C. Russell, Charles Blaisdell and George Austin.

May Metros

Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlen, Frances Nelson and Mme. Petrova the Stars in Four Strong Features.

FOUR of the most attractive screen productions of the year will be released during the month of May by Metro Pictures Corporation. The stars represented will be Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlen, Frances Nelson and Mme. Petrova. Three of the productions have been made by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and are presented by B. A. Rolfe, the fourth being a Popular Plays and Players production.

First on the list is "Sowers and Reapers," starring Emmy Wehlen, a five-act feature photodrama written and directed by George D. Baker. "Sowers and Reapers" tells the story of the phenomenal career of a girl who became a motion picture star. Love interest of unusual strength underlies the incidents that develop this absorbing photoplay, and the appeal to the heart is a powerful one.

In "Sowers and Reapers" the director, George D. Baker, appears for the first time as an actor before the camera, Mr. Baker having consented to take the part of the director in a motion picture play which is shown in the production. Prominent in Miss Whelen's support are George Stuart Christie, Kate Blancke, Frank Currier, Peggy Parr, Walter Horton, Harry Davenport and David Thompson.

Metro's May 14 release is "The Soul of a Magdalen," with Mme. Petrova as star. This feature, written by L. Case Russell and directed by Burton L. King, was produced by Popular Plays and Players. As the title indicates, it has unusually strong story interest.

The production of "The Soul of Magdalen" is marked by handsome and elaborate scenic effects. A distinguished supporting company includes Mahlon Hamilton, Wyndham Standing, Mrs. Mathilde Drundage, Violet Reed and Gene Burnell.

"The Beautiful Lie" is scheduled for release May 21. This is a picture version of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's celebrated poem, "A Reverie in a Station House." It has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis and directed by John W. Noble, being produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., with Frances Nelson as star, Miss Nelson's previous pictures on the Metro program having been "One of Many" and "The Power of Decision."

The part of Louise Joyce is admirably suited to Miss Nelson's splendid emotional abilities. The star is surrounded in "The Beautiful Lie" with an exceptionally capable cast. Edward Earle, who has played leading parts opposite Viola Dana in several Metro wonderplays, has the part of Paul Vivian, the young artist; Harry S. Northrup plays the architect, Mortimer Grierson; John Davidson is cast as Howard Hayes, Grierson's nephew; Sally Crute is Mary; Mrs. Allan Walker plays Mrs. Joyce, and Emil Collins has the part of the butler.

A true Metro wonderplay, with Ethel Barrymore as star, is scheduled for release the final week in May. This is "The Greatest Power," directed by Edwin Carewe, and produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., presented by B. A. Rolfe. Albert Shelby Levino had arranged this production for the screen from the original manuscript of Louis R. Wolheim. In this five-act production Miss Barrymore plays the part of Miram Moore, an up-to-date young American girl with a genius for compounding chemicals.

Miss Barrymore is surrounded by a cast of Metro favorites William B. Davidson will have the leading male part and Harry S. Northrup is the principal "villain." W. W. Black, Frederick and Kenneth Cree are other members of the cast of "The Greatest Power," which will be a Metro production de luxe.

Besides these powerful features the Sidney Drews will be seen on the Metro program for May in "Her Lesson" and "Nothing to Wear."

INCE STARTS BIG NAVAL TRAINING FEATURE.

For ten days a corps of Triangle directors and camera men, sent out by Thomas H. Ince, have been working at the United States Naval Training Station at Goat Island in San Francisco Bay on the film that is to be presented to the United States Government as a patriotic gift to assist in the recruiting of the Navy.

This is the first and only film ever made that shows in complete detail just exactly what Uncle Sam does when he takes a sturdy young American in civilian clothes, from his civilian environment, and turns him into an able seaman and first class fighting man afloat.

Captain Durrel in command of the Training Station, and the sixteen hundred apprentice sailors in the three separate training camps that have been established on that island, together with Lieutenant Commander Shoup, Lieutenant Gaddis, and Chief Boatswain's Mate Miller who is the Adjutant, acting under instructions from the Navy Department at Washington, suspended the regular program for the week to the necessities of the film and provided apprentice seamen by sections and companies and battalions to illustrate the various phases of training.

This film will show every step taken in a strikingly original way as a result of a scenario that has been developed by Ince himself, in consultation with the Government officials who are assisting him in the preparation of the unique production.

Kalem's "Stingaree" Series

Great Variety of Theme Promised in E. W. Hornung's Latest Stories—Kalem's Production Policy Outlined By William Wright, Treasurer.

THAT KALEM'S policy of production in the forthcoming "Stingaree" series would be to outdo the success of the original series of that title by emulating the characteristics of that series, was evidenced by a statement of William Wright, the Treasurer of that company.

"Some people," said Mr. Wright, "like comedies, some dramas; others like melodramas, and still others like heart-interest stories. In fact, there is nowhere a greater divergence of tastes than among moving picture audiences. They present a pretty puzzle to the manufacturer about to produce a series picture. 'Now, what do they like best?' he asks himself, 'What is there the greatest demand for: Shall I give them melodrama, drama, or comedy?'

"The Kalem company has found a new answer to the riddle. We give them everything—yes, and all in one picture. I refer to our forthcoming Stingaree productions. E. W. Horning, the author of 'Raffles,' has written for us the same type of stories that characterized our former Stingaree series, which was so phenomenally successful. These stories are not comedies, but they have subtle touches of comedy that will tickle the risibilities of the gruffest grouch; they are not heart-interest dramas, but they contain bits of human pathos that will make the eyelids of the sternest stoic flicker; they are not melodramas, but they contain thrilling action that would send a chill up the spine of a polar bear.

"People get tired of laughing—if they laugh incessantly. They get tired of thrills—if you serve nothing but thrills. They get tired of heart-interest—if you give them nothing else. But if you can mix your laughs and sobs and thrills and suspense—well, they'll never get tired.

"No character is better adapted to comedy, pathos of thrilling melodrama than that of Stingaree. No more picturesque character has been brought to the screen in recent years. Stingaree is a bushranger, an outlaw who roams the bush country of Australia in quest of booty. Nevertheless, his fine qualities endear him to his every follower. Stingaree is a gentleman; his dainty monocle and neat attire fitly correspond with his unfailing courtesy. And Stingaree, best of all, is the soul of chivalry. Practically every story finds him protecting one of the weaker sex from a scheming 'gentleman' who looks down upon the bushranger as a 'bad man'. His daring provides opportunities for thrilling action; his ultra-polite manners bring many a chuckle, and his whole-hearted chivalry compels real heart-interest.

"A character second in interest only to that of Stingaree, is Howie, his rough and ready partner. During the run of the first Stingaree series, the whimsical, irrepressible Howie was one of the most lovable characters on the screen. In sharp contract to Stingaree's polished gentility, Howie's rough appearance and quaintly uncouth mannerisms render the two characters the most picturesque creation of recent years.

"In the new series, the parts of Stingaree and Howie will be played by the actors who created the roles, namely, True Boardman and Paul C. Hurst. Boardman's original characterization of Stingaree made him the idol of moving picture fans. Paul Hurst is directing the productions, and he will have an able cast in True Boardman, Hal Clements, Edythe Sterling, and Thomas Walsh.

"Although E. W. Hornung's stories of 'Raffles' and his original Stingaree series were considered remarkable in compelling interest, the new Stingaree stories promise to outdo them. Each one is on novel adventure, just brimming over with good drama, deft touches of heart-interest, appealing bits of comedy, and real rousing thrills. They are a fitting ground-work for Kalem's policy of producing attractive series pictures."

THRILLS PYRAMID IN PATHE SERIAL.

"The Stranger Disposes," the eighth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," is announced for release the week of May 8. Mollie King is scoring a distinct success in this big Pathe mystery serial produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke.

Thrill follows thrill in this episode. Peter and Annessley investigate Bentley's quarters while he in turn is rifling the Brewster safe for a paper revealing the secret of Philippa's birth. Peter discovers him. With the aid of his lieutenant, Bentley overpowers Peter and plants on him certain valuables. Peter is arrested. While Bentley is standing by the window with the document for which he searched in his hand, it is suddenly seized and the person who took it mysteriously disappears.

SELIG SUBJECTS FOR GENERAL FILM.

The latest picture plays to be released in General Film service by the Selig company are "The Prodigal's Return" and "The Last of Her Clan." "The Prodigal's Return" is said to be a gripping story of the return of the prodigal son who brings happiness and love after an era of misunderstanding.

"The Last of Her Clan" is a thrilling drama of the Tennessee mountains and how the rival clans were finally reunited through the love of a man for a woman. Beautiful scenery and fine acting are said to distinguish this latest offering of the Selig company.

CIRCUS AT BELLEVUE FILMED BY GAUMONT.

The graceful custom inaugurated by the Barnum & Bailey Circus of giving a free morning performance for the patients of Bellevue Hospital, New York, was followed this season, and the event was caught for the screen by a Gaumont cameraman. Hence, motion picture patrons throughout the country will not only have the pleasure of seeing a circus on the screen, but its unusual spectators as well. The editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is always alert to photograph the unusual, recognizing that it is through variety as well as newsiness that this popular news reel maintains itself as a screen standard. The circus pictures appear in Mutual Weekly 123.

Barnum and Bailey Circus at Bellevue Hospital, New York (Gaumont Mutual Weekly).

The various Gaumont editorial staffs recognize that owners of motion picture theaters want pictures that will keep their patrons interested, the single-reels being now as carefully selected by program-makers as are the longer features. For this reason every news or magazine tip is followed, and where found practicable for the screen a picture is at once secured. For example, the announcement that the United States had purchased the Virgin Islands was the immediate cause of sending Willard Van der Veer and his assistant, J. Norton Nellis, to photograph St. Thomas and St. Croix, the two larger islands, and then visit other islands of the West Indies. The result has been highly gratifying, for exhibitors have substantially expressed their appreciation by their orders for "Tours Around the World," the series in which these travel pictures are being shown. Other pictures sent by Mr. Van der Veer are being used in "Reel Life," Gaumont's Mutual Magazine in Film. These also are extremely popular.

"GOLD SPOON MARY" (A. Kay).

The A. Kay Company, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, which confines its output to animated cartoon burlesques of well-known screen successes exclusively, will release its second picture, "Terry-made," April 30. Titled "Golden-Spoon Mary," this picture promises to equal the success met with by their first release, "20,000 Feats Under the Sea," which scored an instantaneous hit all over the country, and on which practically all American and foreign rights have been closed.

The theme of the picture, "Golden-Spoon Mary," offers even more chances for ludicrous treatment than did "20,000 Feats," which seemed to be the acme of burlesque humor. The weird adventures, trials and tribulations of a very rich, very poor little girl, and the sad (?) plight of such a poor mortal offer possibilities for comic treatment that Mr. Terry has shown his talent for developing to their best degree. And in "Golden-Spoon Mary" Mr. Terry has surpassed himself in producing a superlative work of comic burlesque art.

BIG PAPER ORDER FOR "THE SUBMARINE EYE."

Williamson Brothers have contracted with the Greenwich Lithographing Company for an extra large edition of paper for their third picture "The Submarine Eye." This was done to enable them to secure paper in five colors at a six cent price, so that exhibitors can purchase these at cost.

Worthy Butts, who negotiated the deal for the Greenwich Company, after seeing a private run of "The Submarine Eye," declared it the best money maker he had ever seen, and to back up his judgment, increased the paper order to sixteen thousand dollars on his own responsibility.

Therefore, "The Submarine Eye" will go forth into the world on May 6 with sixteen thousand dollars worth of paper back of it, ranging in size from half-sheet window cards to twenty-four sheet stands.

Bluebird's Summer Roster

Productions of Directors Jack Conway, William Worthington, Ida May Park, Rupert Julian, Joseph De Grasse and Lynn F. Reynolds Ready.

DIRECTORS of Bluebird photoplays have been busy for some time preparing releases for the use of exhibitors during the summer months, and now make announcement of several features that are ready for circulation, although some of them await the formality of being definitely scheduled. Jack Conway, William Worthington, Ida May Park, Rupert Julian, Joseph De Grasse and Lynn F. Reynolds are foremost among the Bluebird producers who have arranged attractions for summer showings.

Mr. Worthington starts off with "Bringing Home Father," the offering set for June 4, with Franklyn Farnum and "Brownie" Vernon in the leading roles. Some time in July Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon will have another Worthington fetaure, "The Car of Chance," already completed from a story by Waldemar Young.

On June 11 Joseph De Grasse will be represented by Dorothy Phillips in "A Doll's House," a screen version of Henrik Ibsen's famous stage play. In this play Mrs. Fiske, Eleanor Duse, Nazimova and other stars of the legitimate assisted themselves to a reputation, and those who have seen the early showings of the screen drama assert that Miss Phillips gets into her proper class through this release. Further along Mr. De Grasse will offer Miss Phillip in "The Vengeance of the West."

Ida May Park, who alternates with her husband (Mr. De Grasse) in directing Miss Phillips, has written and produced "Fires of Rebellion," in which Miss Phillips will make her July appearance. Rupert Julian will be represented by "A Kentucky Cinderella," prepared by E. J. Clawson from F. Hopkinson Smith's story.

On June 18 Ella Hall will be seen in a Jack Conway production, which bears the temporary title of "The Little Belgian." H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, offers this as his second screen story. Late in July, Lynn F. Reynolds will make his regular contribution to Bluebird's in "The Code of the Klondyke," a subject likely to be re-named before it is released. It will be readily perceived that exhibitors have reason to expect much valuable help from Bluebird in offsetting the inroads of summer opposition.

NINTH "RAILROAD RAIDERS" COMPLETED.

The Helen Holmes company this week completed the ninth chapter of the Mutual-Signal serial "The Railroad Raiders," entitled "The Knotted Cord."

The ninth chapter is the most tense of any of the episodes so far completed. There is a ferry robbery, followed by a clever international intrigue, a bomb plot, a leap by auto from a dock to the deck of a barge, a number of unusual water feats and the destruction of the barge by explosion.

STUNTS FOR RUSSELL IN "THE FRAMEUP."

William Russell, in the new American-Mutual five-reel production, "The Frameup," released May 7, is given one of those slam bang rattling opportunities that so well suit his requirements as a star and so thoroughly accord with the public taste in adventure drama.

Scene from "The Frameup" (Mutual).

Mr. Russell comprehends the value of the "stunt" and in the new play soon to be released he displays the remarkable athletic and acrobatic versatility for which, in connection with irreproachable artistry, he has become famed among picture fans.

Director Edward Sloman has no trouble in getting difficult feats put over for the screen when William Russell is on the job. The star's constant demand is for "something new in action." Russell's back somersault out of a speeding automobile to escape from the police, and his thrilling leap from the tonneau of one fast traveling machine to the tonneau of another are examples of the chances he takes of physical injury in "The Frameup."

"OUR FIGHTING FORCES" TIMELY PATHE SPECIAL.

Considerable interest attaches to the release by Pathe on April 29 of the two-reel special production entitled "Our Fighting Forces."

By comparative tables, diagrams and pictures, the lamentable difference between America's powers of defense and the powers of aggression possessed by other nations is made plain. The amounts expended for these purposes by other nations and the United States are set forth, and the relative strength of the various arms of the national service is shown in a realistic manner.

There are several redeeming features to the situation as shown by the screen pictures, prominent among them being the gratifying jump in appropriations and extension of plans for developing the resources, military and naval, of this country for the present fiscal year.

The pictures were taken especially by Pathe and present a powerful argument for preparedness on a scientific and efficient basis.

JACK GARDNER, NEW STAR IN NIGHT WORKERS.

Filming of "The Night Workers," Marguerite Clayton's forthcoming Essanay feature has been completed. The film is in the factory now and will be completed within a few days. Trade showings already have been announced at all Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch offices. The production will be released May 21.

Essanay presents a new star to filmdom in "The Night Workers," which is a picturization of night life in a big city. He is Jack Gardner, who is recruited from the stellar ranks of musical comedy. Among the national stage hits in which Mr. Gardner has starred are "Madame Sherry," "The Chocolate Soldier," "The Belle of Mayfair" and "Oh Boy." Miss Clayton is well known in film plays, having been starred in "The Prince of Graustark" and Essanay's series of short dramatic productions, "Is Marriage Sacred?"

"The Night Workers" will have a screen time of approximately 1 hour, 15 minutes.

NEW CHICAGO FILM CORPORATION.

The Wholesome Films Corporation, an Illinois corporation, has opened offices in the Consumers Building, Chicago and while they are not ready to reveal their policy or plans at the present time, it is understood that the concern will produce and distribute a particular class of pictures which heretofore has not been exclusively commercialized.

M. J. Weisfeldt, for several years connected with the Mutual Film Corporation, has been engaged as general manager. The officers are Milton Daily, president; A. M. Allen, vice-president; P. W. Stanhope, secretary and treasurer. The officers are said to be wealty business men and, with the exception of Mr. Allen, Minneapolis capitalist, the organization is made up of Chicagoans.

EXHIBITORS PRAISE PRESS BOOK ON "THE BARRIER."

The Publicity Department of the Rex Beach Pictures company is in receipt of many letters from exhibitors in all parts of the country who are unanimous in their praise of the Press Book and Exhibitor's Aid on "The Barrier," which is being distributed to all theaters showing this feature. This book not only contains a complete assortment of press stories of every description, including specials and careers of all the principals, but also contains samples of thirty different styles of advertisements, original mats of which may be secured at a low cost.

FOURTH WARWICK SELZNICK PICTURE ANNOUNCED.

Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corp appears to be out for a record in the rapid-fire production of big motion picture features. With "The Argyle Case" and "The Silent Master" already on the market, under the banner of Lewis J. Selznick, and a third production nearly completed, the indefatigable Mr. Rapf announces the preparation of an adaptation of Frank Packard's widely read novel "The Beloved Traitor," for Mr. Warwick's fourth Selznick-Pictures.

STATE RIGHTS MEN INTERESTED IN PARALTA.

That state rights buyers are becoming deeply interested in the Paralta Plan was amply evidenced at a meeting held with Carl Anderson, president of Paralta plays, in the offices of the company, 729 Seventh Avenue, Thursday afternoon, April 26. Mr. Anderson met several men for an informal discussion in which the new distributing proposition was considered in detail. Another meeting will be held Thursday afternoon, May 3d.

General Film to Double Service

Business of Distributing Company to be Focussed Upon Desirable Short Subjects.

PLANS are now well advanced at General Film for a vastly increased service. The public's liking for the better short-length releases, such as those most successfully supplied by General Film, is to be further satisfied with the addition of new matter equally as good.

The new subjects will have an especial leaning toward comedies, which will mean something to the exhibitor and to the public. For instance, the comedies will come in a series—each unit of the same type and released at regular periods—so that the public will be familiar with the series from the beginning. There is to be no lost prestige through flinging them into the market as isolated releases. A straight, continuous standard will be insisted upon through the whole series. In the same way dramas of a certain type will be grouped in series covering a long term, in order that they may become identified for their value and drawing power. Besides this there will be serials released with all the cumulative popularity insured that attaches to serials.

The profound success of the several groups already being released by General Film has been reflected in an insistent demand for more groups of similar attractiveness. These Broadway star features which are already meeting with such significant response include the O. Henry stories. They include also the Black Cat stories, each an Essanay screen interpretation of some richly brilliant plot from the famous classics of The Black Cat publication, whose short stories have for years been noted for their ingenuity and remarkably clever twists.

The American Girl series of stories written especially by Fred R. Bechdoldt, is also another group that is gripping the picture-loving public. They are produced by Kalem.

Other groups are respectively those of the Selig two-reel dramas, the bi-weekly Selig Tribune news reel, and a weekly comedy from the same studio.

To these in the way of new matter, most probably will be added groups such as these:

A weekly two-reel drama of consistent type throughout, inclining toward the ever-acceptable detective and mystery plot; a weekly clever, really mirth-provoking and robust comedy, with lots of disturbance and laughs; a weekly three or four-reel drama release of appeal equal to standard feature subjects, with favorite players whose names will add to their drawing power, and a very attractive serial which has had a forerunner, whose prestige is an earnest of welcome and enthusiastic appreciation.

These are the main additions to General Film's list now under consideration. In a short time the selection will be ripe for definite announcement, when it is believed by the management of General Film that the subjects chosen will prove to be a surprise even more agreeable then forecasted.

SECOND FINCH FILM A PUZZLE NOVELTY.

Following the success of "War Prides," the first release of the Flora Finch Comedy Film Corporation, it is announced that the element of novelty is to be given unusual attention, and the second release bears out the fulfillment of the promise. "Guess What" would appear to be the title, the idea being that the story is a travesty on some well known production. The main title in the film reads "Flora Finch in a travesty on a photoplay you know—Guess What." Prizes for the correct answer are offered, consisting of pickles and mailed kisses from Flora.

The second Finch comedy shows Flora as an artist's model, posing as Cupid, with ropes attached to her extended foot and neck to maintain her equilibrium as the artist paints her. She becomes involved in a love affair in the course of which she excites the jealousy of the artist's wife, and the climax comes when she attempts to shine as a hula dancer on top of a banquet table. This leads her into a dagger fight with the wife, from which she emerges triumphantly; for she kills the woman, which, as everybody knows, entitles her to headline position in vaudeville.

"Guess What" will be released May 6, and will carry a separate line of lithographs and advertising matter, as will all the Flora Finch productions. The H. Grossman Distributing Co., Inc., has adopted this policy, instead of issuing "stock" sheets that may apply to more than one picture.

MARGARITA FISCHER RECOVERS.

Margarita Fischer has recovered from a dangerous illness which kept her in St. Joseph's hospital, San Diego, for more than two weeks, and has begun work on her new Mutual Pollard photoplay, "Little Miss Missionary," in which she plays the role of "Prudence."

"Little Miss Missionary" is a comedy drama, laid in a Hopi Indian village. It was written by J. Edward Hungerford, author of the "Devil's Assistant," Miss Fischer's last picture. It will be produced under the direction of Harry Pollard.

Miss Fischer was stricken suddenly ill soon after the completion of "The Devil's Assistant," and her condition grew so serious that she was removed to the hospital, where she lay critically ill for a fortnight.

Triangle Productions for May 20th

Wilfred Lucas, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Dalton Will Appear in the Week's Releases.

WILFRED LUCAS, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Dalton are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for May 20th. Lucas and Miss Gish will be co-starred in a story of strong and vivid characterization entitled "Souls Triumphant," written by Mary H. O'Connor and directed by John O'Brien. Dorothy Dalton will be presented by Thomas H. Ince in a rattling comedy-drama of life in a fashionable Southern community, known as "Wild Winship's Widow," written by John Lynch and directed by Charles Miller. Miss Dalton is ably supported by Alice Taaffe, Lillian Hayward and other well known Ince players.

"Souls Triumphant" is the picturization of a wronged wife's fight to restore her erring husband to a position of self-respect The story shows the reverse of the usual three-cornered affair growing out of one man's relations with two women, and thus gains for the spectator a situation of unsual dramatic interest and emotional appeal. The element of mystery injected into the plot keeps the interest from flagging, and until almost the last moment of action there is never a time when the spectator may be sure he has anticipated the outcome.

Dorothy Dalton's impersonation of the title-role of "Wild Winship's Widow" is said to be one of the most engaging that she has yet given to the screen. She takes the part of a young and pretty widow with every luxury at her command, who has elevated the memory of her husband into a religion, although "Wild Winship" has been anything but a laudable character. The habit of intense mourning becomes one of the active duties of her life, and as a matter of fact she extracts much enjoyment out of her self-enforced misery. But at length, Mrs. Winship discovers the error of her ways, and becomes almost reckless in her attempts to prove that she is still young and attractive enough to win the admiration of the masculine sex. The result is that she gets more devotion than she really cares for, and has to resort to certain very feminine wiles to extricate herself from an extremely embarrassing and amusing situation. There are several unusually beautiful scenes of fox-hunting and cross-country riding that add the typical Ince atmosphere to the production.

"THE SOUL OF A MAGDALEN" (Metro).

"The Soul of a Magdalen" is the release of Metro Pictures Corporation for May 14. Mme. Petrova is the star of this five-act production, written by L. Case Russell and directed by Burton L. King for Popular Plays and Players.

"The Soul of a Magdalen" presents contrasting pictures of purposeful, earnest lives, such as that of its author-hero, Carter Vail, and those which waste the hours in riot and revelry, exemplified in Leland Norton, a man without a conscience.

The clear photography that marks this production is the work of Harry B. Harris. Special settings were built by Lester Vermilya, technical director, to show Leland Norton's secret room, "The Garden of Eden," opened by a sliding panel in the wall. A raised stage of glass is illuminated from beneath, throwing into relief the figures of Hawaiian dancers. The entire production has been lavishly staged.

Scence from "The Soul of a Magdalen" (Metro).

Mahlon Hamilton, who has appeared as leading man in various Popular Play and Players productions, is again the hero. Violet Reed, has the part of a shop girl of the flashy type, this character adding to the evidence of her versatility. Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, one of the best known "mothers" of the screen is seen as Mrs. Broulette. Wyndham Standing plays the part of Leland Norton. Gene Burnell is Alice Vail. Others in the cast are Frances Walton, Richard Bartholmes, Boris Korlin and Frank Moore.

"Submarine Eye" on Open Market.

Williamson Brothers Announce Under-Sea Picture Will Be Marketed on Territorial Rights—Exceptions to General Plan Given.

THE WILLIAMSON BROTHERS announce that their third under-water picture, "The Submarine Eye," will be marketed on a territorial rights basis with certain definite exceptions to the plan followed out by other producers. These exceptions include the probable reservation by themselves of certain territories.

George Williamson, in speaking of the manner of distribution of the "Submarine Eye," said:

"We had determined not to go on record as supporting any definite marketing policy until we had a chance to check up the results of our advertising. But in justice to those who have expressed the keenest interest in our plans, and who are anxious to secure contracts for the exploitation of 'The Submarine Eye,' I am pleased to state that our picture will be marketed upon the territorial rights basis with certain definite exceptions to the general plan followed by other producers.

"There are certain districts which we may want to reserve for ourselves. It is our aim to definitely establish its value throughout the 'Big Time' so that when the picture is finally ready to be thrown open to bookings for the smaller houses it will be so well known that exhibitors will reap the additional benefits of the advertising done locally and play to record-breaking crowds for longer runs than the average feature receives.

"In all our contracts we will insist upon assurances that 'The Submarine Eye' will be treated in the same manner as a theatrical production. We have announced in our advertising, 'Fair Play and Full Protection to All.' By producing only two pictures a year we can live up to this promise very easily. Six months' leeway between productions will give every buyer who contracts for "The Submarine Eye" ample time to get back a goodly profit on his original investment.

"In marketing our product we will offer territorial rights subject to our control, but we will not make outright sales of prints. All prints will be leased at seven cents per foot and a rebate of two cents per foot will be allowed on prints returned from any territory at the end of the contract period. This simply means that we do not want to make any profit on the sale of prints, and it is also a double safe-guard against unscrupulous handling of our product. I understand that five cents is the approximate actual cost of the printing, and inasmuch as 'The Submarine Eye' is beautifully tinted and toned, I think it is a very reasonable price.

"There will be a press book of ready-made press stories, newspaper and magazine advertising; also a splendid assortment of five-color lithographs that we will sell at six cents per sheet; three color paper at five cents per sheet; heralds, slides and a magnificent lobby display.

"We have also had a complete musical score prepared for any size orchestra from piano to an arrangement for sixty pieces. Tho two themes of this score were composed by M. L. Lake. Carl Fisher, of New York, Chicago, and Boston is the publisher.

"We will also carry out a campaign of propaganda that will reach the schools, clubs and civic bodies in both the United States and Canada, stimuating attendance everywhere.

"We want to emphasize the timeliness of 'The Submarine Eye'—our first independent attraction. The exploit of the American armed liner Mongolia in sinking a German submersible on April 19, first demolishing its periscope or eye, calls atention in a forceful way to the invention introduced in our attraction. Ours is an inverted under-water periscope, constructed along the lines of the submarine's eye. It points the way to effectual preparedness against skulking U-boats."

WAR MISSIONS IN GAUMONT'S MUTUAL WEEKLY 122.

Instead of picture "somewhere in America," the Mutual Weekly No. 122 is able to announce—with the permission of the government—that it has pictures from Washington, D. C., of the arrival of the great British and French missions sent to confer with this government regarding war measures. The Right Honorable Arthur J. Balfour, England's Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his suite are pictured as they reach Washington by rail. They are met by high state dignitaries and escorted to the home of Breckenridge Long, where they are to live. The Gaumont cameraman also caught Mr. Balfour and Secretary of State Lansing as they went to call on the President.

The French mission was photographed as it debarked from the President's yacht, "Mayflower." Rene Viviani and General Joffre are the principal figures. There is also a picture of the home of Henry White, former ambassador to France, where the distinguished French visitors will live while in Washington.

The West Point cadets of the class of 1917 were graduated ahead of time, but not with such speed that they were not caught by a Gaumont cameraman for this issue of the Mutual Weekly. Other pictures bearing on the war show the parade of the Eighth Coast Batallion in New York, and the ride of "Paul Revere" in Boston with an escort of National Guard cavalrymen.

Selznick Gets "The Barrier"

Obtains World Rights for Distribution—Prints Being Rushed to Selznick Exchanges.

ONE of the most important news announcements of the week is that Lewis J. Selznick has obtained the world rights for the distribution of "The Barrier," by Rex Beach. The success of this big film production during its pre-release showing in New York at the Boardway Theater convinced Mr. Selznick that in "The Barrier" he would have an attratcion worthy of the quality standard he had set with his Selznick-Pictures, and a deal was consummated with Benjamin B. Hampton and Rex Beach through which the control of "The Barrier" passed entirely into Mr. Selznick's hands.

As soon as the contract was signed, Mr. Hampton delivered to the Selznick organization all the prints of the film that were completed, as well as all advertising and general publicity matter. Prints are being rushed to all the Selznick exchanges, where the picture can be seen by exhibitors throughout this country and Canada.

In commenting on the deal Mr. Selznick said:

"I have taken over the distribution of "The Barrier" for two reasons: First, because it is unquestionably one of the greatest photoplays ever produced and I wanted it; second, because Mr. Hampton and Mr. Beach realized that my system of distribution was the only one in existence that would give this splendid production the fullest possible chance to reach the screens of every first-class motion picture theater in the United States and Canada. From the moment it was shown to the public in New York its success was instantaneous, and so far there has not been a single dissenting voice raised in criticism."

The wonderful vivid and picturesque Alaskan romances of Rex Beach have been read by so many millions that Mr. Beach is today one of the most popular of American authors. One of his most widely read stories is "The Barrier." The picture closely follows the swift action and striking situations of the book, and is a faithful portrayal of adventure and romance of life in Alaska in the days when that land was the haven of hunted men and the last frontier of civilization.

From the first showing of "The Barrier," this picture has proved an amazing success. It captured the big audience at the very start. It held them breathless through scene after scene of swift, stirring action. It called forth waves of applause as the thrilling climaxes were reached.

A unique phase of the New York run is that the press has been absolutely unanimous in praise of "The Barrier."

PATHE-COMBITONE EXPEDITION NOW IN TEXAS.

The Pathe-Combitone Expedition, which is securing in every State in the Union all that is best in the way of scenic, industrial and archaeological pictures, is now in Texas, and has already sent in some most interesting material from the Lone Star State.

Since beginning operations in Texas, Col. A. L. Westgard, who is supervising the Expedition, has taken many views of the largest herd of Angora goats in the country, a herd comprising over 17,000 animals. He secured scenes of what is probably the largest herd of Jersey cows in the country, that filmed at Talfurrias containing 2,400 registered cattle of that breed. He has secured views of the world's largest onion patch at Laredo, the largest farm in the world, known as the Taft ranch, near Corpus Christi, and also views of the fishing industry at this last mentioned place. Mixed in with these pictures representing the business side of Texas, he has secured thousands of feet showing the scenic beauties of the State.

Old missions of Spanish architecture and old battlefields have not been neglected in this comprehensive filming of the largest State in the Union.

"THE GRAY GHOST," NEW UNIVERSAL SERIAL.

Work on the new Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," has begun under the direction of Stuart Paton, who has to his credit, among other great film triumphs, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Voice on the Wire." "The Gray Ghost" is a film adaption of Arthur Somers Roche's story, "Loot," which ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post.

The serial will be in fifteen chapters, each being crowded with thrilling situations and carrying a suspense that will whet the appetites of the most exacting film fan. A conference was held in which heads of all departments that will be concerned took part and a perfect arrangement perfected whereby all will contribute the best skill and experience toward making this a epochal event in serial production.

The leading roles in "The Gray Ghost" will be played by Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson, Harry Carter and Eddie Polo, whose work in the serials, "The Broken Coin" and "Liberty" won for him hosts of admirers in this country, Europe and the Orient. Polo will have a fine role in "The Gray Ghost" and his work fits him for difficult tasks that are ahead of him.

MICHIGAN RIGHTS SOLD FOR "BACK STAGE."

The state rights of the King Bee Billy West comedy, "Back Stage," have been sold to J. Palley, of Detroit. The picture has not yet been released, but wherever it is shown in projection rooms, it convulses its ice-cold audiences, the severest test to which you can place motion pictures of this character.

Confidence in World Program

W. A. Brady Says Rigid Adherence to Program Has Built Up Confidence in World-Pictures Brady-Made.

ABSOLUTELY rigid adherence to the program is the very first principle of World-Pictures Brady-Made," says director general William A. Brady. "In fact, we go further than that," he continued, "for we not only positively protect the integrity of our output but make additions to it whenever the opportunity arises to do so upon an important scale.

"This latter assertion is in reference to the series of French photoplays we have been enabled to place within the reach of our exhibitors without 'raising the ante' upon them—a service the value of which is obviously appreciated at its utmost, since the applications are pouring in at a rate that represents very close upon one hundred per cent. of the managers using World Pictures.

"In fact, we have never observed such a complete and emphatic response to an invitation to participate in a melon-cutting as the one at present in evidence, and it serves as a great endorsement of our previously formed conviction that the straight-out program policy is the real thing in this business.

"When the present management of our corporation took hold, it found not alone a large number of things to do but quite a number to undo. There was a very general condition of unrest and lack of confidence among exhibitors, and the readjustment of this situation was a task of considerably greater difficulty than improving the quality of our plays.

"To every young industry, particularly where the opportunities for large profits on a narrow investment margin are extremely evident, irresponsible and unscrupulous persons are attracted, and these had been at work upon the motion picture industry until the exhibitors regarded manufacturers and distributors with the utmost suspicion. It does not take a great many broken promises and breaches of faith to build a big barrier in the path of square dealing, and every on-the-level concern in this industry has had its difficulties greatly increased by the few 'gyps' who fastened themselves upon it in the early stages.

"This is how it happened that when we set out upon our campaign for the inviolable program, exhibitors smiled more or less grimly and awaited the time when we should produce a picture so good as to be worth exploiting all by itself. They are no longer waiting, for we have gone far beyond the letter of our undertaking.

"The addition of 'Mothers of France,' 'Atonement,' 'A Naked Soul,' 'The Golden Lotus' and 'When True Love Dawns' to the list of best sellers within the reach of our exhibitors has put the cap-stone upon our structure of confidence, and we find that our word is accepted at its face value—which is an extremely gratifying condition pointing the way to further efforts along the same lines.

"As our plan of interchange with Louis Mercanton, the famous French director, works out between now and the re-awakening of European motion picture activities after the war, we shall have a further number of pleasant and profitable surprises for exhibitors—all of these providing further support to our faith in the permanency of the program as a survival of the fittest."

SECOND ARBUCKLE-PARAMOUNT COMEDY MAY 21.

Paramount Pictures Corporation has set May 21 as the release date for "A Reckless Romeo" the second of the series of two-reel comedies in which Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is the star, and which Paramount is releasing to all exhibitors irrespective of the present program system of releases of their five-reel features.

So wonderful has been the success of the first comedy, "The Butcher Boy," and so great has been the clamoring for additional pictures of this class, that Paramount has decided to release the second picture one month after the first feature was shown.

Paramount has established in each of their 27 exchanges Arbuckle departments who are handling these comedies separately from their feature program, and in every section of the country they have broken all previous records for contracts on a two-reel feature. While there were 153 prints on the first comedy, Paramount is preparing to have over 200 prints on the second production.

Save for Al St. John, an entirely different cast of stars will be seen appearing with Mr. Arbuckle in this second picture, which is filled to overflowing with comedy situations, intermingled with some inimitable Arbuckle slap-stick fistic encounters, plenty of action, a smattering of heart interest, lots of suspense and that over present Arbuckle ultimate justification.

GOODRICH FILM NEARING COMPLETION.

At the Empire All-Star Studio Edna Goodrich is working on the final scenes of "Reputation," the drama by John Clymer. "Reputation" will be Miss Goodrich's first appearance on the screen. May 28 has been set as the release date of this photodrama. William Hinckley plays opposite Miss Goodrich, and others in the cast include Frank Goldsmith, Carey Lee, Esther Evans and Nellie Parker Spaulding.

NANCE O'NEIL IN "HEDDA GABLER" MAY 7.

Miss Nance O'Neil, in "Hedda Gabler," the new Powell-Mutual five-reel presentation of Henrik Ibsen's famous drama, has a medium that affords her opportunity for display of her emotional dramatic genius. "Hedda Gabler" is released May 7.

Miss O'Neil makes Hedda Gabler, the passionate, intriguing and degenerate daughter of a drunken, duelling father, live her life on the screen in a fascinating sequence of sensational episodes.

Miss O'Neil's characterization gives the lie to those critics who have been insisting that Ibsen cannot be effectively picturized.

Director Frank Powell, who is at the head of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, and Miss O'Neil are completely in accord with regard to the dramatic value of the Ibsen drama for screen purposes.

The settings of the play are superb. Miss O'Neil herself has had a great deal to do with the selection of accessories and her deep study of Ibsen during her association with the plays of the Norwegian genius, especially qualified her to dictate the details of stage settings.

BEECROFT SELLS TRIUMPH FILMS IN UNITED KINGDOM.

Chester Beecroft has made arrangements for the sale of the product of the Triumph Film Corporation in the United Kingdom to Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., of London.

Mr. Beecroft has an agreement with Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., to furnish them each month, for the next two years, with four of the best American-made productions. He is already supplying Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., with one picture a month—the Frohman Superpictures. Among these are included "The Witching Hour" and their latest subject, "God's Man."

The Triumph sale also calls for one feature a month. The productions which the Triumph has made were directed by Julius Steger and stand out as being among the finest pictures obtainable. Mr. Steger has surrounded himself with an highly efficient organization and the quality of his future undertakings will necessarily be all that can be desired.

Mr. Beecroft has negotiations under way with other producers to place their pictures with Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., and the names of those concerns whose features are selected will be announced upon the completion of negotiations.

MANY NOTED PLAYERS IN "THE LONE WOLF."

The term "all star cast" has been so violently misused in photoplay and stage affairs that Herbert Brenon declines to employ it in connection with his production of "The Lone Wolf" for Selznick-Pictures, and simply announces the following list of players: Bert Lytell, Hazel Dawn, Edward Abeles, Alfred Hickman, William E. Shay, Stephen Grattan, Joseph Chailles, Ben Graham, William Riley Hatch, Robert Fisher, Florence Ashbrooke, Juliet Brenon and Cornish Beck.

"The Lone Wolf" is now nearing completion. It will be a melodrama de luxe, telling a story which for speed and fascination has few equals. It is taken from the novel by Louis Joseph Vance.

BESSIE BARRISCALE IN NEW YORK.

Bessie Barriscale, who has been one of the most prominent stars on the Triangle program during the past two years, has arrived in New York from Los Angeles and will remain for a few weks.

Miss Barriscale's contract with the Triangle company has expired and her future on the screen will be identified with other interests, which have not yet fully developed.

Her visit to New York is in connection with several offers that have been made to her to appear in important screen productions to be distributed on state rights basis.

"INVITED OUT" (Klever Komedy).

Victor Moore will offer for his next release (May 7) Thomas J. Gray's farce called "Invited Out." Moore is again seen in one of those human type of characters that he scored in so heavily in the laugh riot "Flivvering."

"Invited Out" is the story of a clerk in an office, whose life is full of restaurant meals, and his one wish is that sooner or later someone will take pity on him and invite him out to a HOME COOKED meal. It is not long however before Vic's wish is gratified, and he receives no less than three invitations. One of these invitations happens to be from his Boss' daughter who is rather "smitten" on Vic. This however, only helps get him into a worse predicament, as the necessity of dress clothes for this invitation looms up. Vic is not the possessor of such "harness" so he starts out to make a suit himself. He does this in the most unique way, and the result of the scene causes laughter from start to finish. After going to all the trouble of the clothes, he gets to his Boss' house only to find the dinner put off until later. He then decides to visit "home cooked meal" invitation number two which he does and he finds his friends just going out to dinner. He is all at sea and hungry, so he makes one last attempt to get a Home Cooked meal by going to accept invitation number three. He arrives at the house, and is as welcome as "the birds in May." Everything looks fine and the principal thing on the menu is Irish Stew. Vic is ready for sure—but, while the stew is cooking a water pipe in the kitchen bursts and the water ruins the stew and wets everyone including Vic. Vic madly rushes from the house and gives up the "home cooked meal" in dismay. He finishes up in a restaurant, a much sadder and "wetter" man, to which is added the following moral.

"When invited out to dinner — go to a restaurant First. Vic went to one Last."

"Invited Out is one of those little comedies that has happened to everyone during a life time, and moore puts it over in splendid style.

SPITZER ON WAR AND COMEDIES.

Nat. H. Spitzer, for ten years in the sales end of the motion picture business, and at present sales manager of the King-Bee Film Corporation, believes that comedies will be much more in demand now that the war spirit pervades the nation.

"The country," says Mr. Spitzer, "is now in the great war and everybody's mind is more completely saturated than hiterto with the horrors of international murder. More than ever the motion picture theater will have an important duty to perform toward the public. Upon the motion picture theater will fall the burden of helping lift us out of the gloomy mood in which the war has thrown us. Comedies, I believe, will do this to a far larger extent than any other type of pictures.

"I believe there are far too many heavy and depressing features before the public at the present time. But since President Wilson's proclamation there seems to have been a marked change in the nature of the films offered the public. It is perceived that there is an overwhelming demand for high-class, refined comedy subjects.

"King-Bee comedies supply that demand. I assert without fear of contradiction that we have ready, and in preparation, some of the most brilliant comedies that any manufacturer could produce. Louis Burstein has charge of the studies at Jacksonville, Fla., where Billy West, assuredly the most genuinely humorous comedian ever seen on the screen, is hard at work under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom, who made his reputation with the famous Keystone banner. In the casts of these comedies Ethel Burton, Babe Hardy, Leo White and other notable players are seen. Stories, acting, photography and production are, in my opinion, unexcelled—King-Bee goes the limit.

NORMA TALMADGE IN "POPPY."

The millions of readers of "Poppy," Cynthia Stockley's famous novel of the love-starved South African girl, are keenly anticipating the thrill of meeting face to face via the motion picture screen the heroine of that widely discussed romance, when Norma Talmadge is presented in a Selznick-Pictures version of the story.

"Poppy" was made under the direction of Edward Jose, and is in eight reels. Mr. Jose has the further distinction of having written the scenario.

Mr. Jose's familiarity with South Africa, where he was a resident for five and a half years on the very scenes of the photoplay, admirably fitted him for supervision of this important work. The Transvaal is as well known to him as Broadway.

Mr. Jose is enthused over Miss Talmadge's impersonation of "Poppy," and declares she has scored the biggest triumph of her career in this role. Particularly fascinating are her scenes in the early part of the story when she is shown as the child drudge, unhappy and so misunderstood. "Poppy" at her maturity was, of course, less difficult for Miss Talmadge to portray.

Eugene O'Brien, as Carson; Frederick Perry, as Luce Abinger; Jack Meredith, as Braham, and Dorothy Rogers as Mrs. Carson are all happily fitted to their respective roles, according to Mr. Jose.

"THE SNARL" (Triangle).

A new standard of double exposure photography has been set, it is asserted, by Director Raymond B. West, in the Triangle-Kay Bee productions "The Snarl," the new drama by Leona Hutton and Lambert Hillyer, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale as star. In this play Miss Barriscale portrays a dual role, that of twin sisters. As many of the scenes show the girls in each other's company, double effects were necessitated.

The most startling of these scenes is that in which one of the sisters enters the room and "crosses the line" to embrace the other. After long and careful experiments, Director West achieved results which are believed to surpass any previous accomplishments in this line of photography.

As Helen Dean, Miss Barriscale creates a noble woman of ideals and intellect; as the twin sister, Marion Dean, she portrays a shallow, unscrupulous girl, who profits by the misfortunes of others.

"BRINGING HOME FATHER" (Bluebird).

Franklyn Farnum and "Brownie" Vernon, who have become identified as Bluebird's light comedy stars, will appear June 4 in another play of a nature similar to "The Clock," "The Man Who Took a Chance" and "A Stranger from Somewhere"—features that won favor for these leaders earlier in the Bluebird series.

H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, where most of the Bluebirds are produced, found time apart from his other duties to write the story upon which "Bringing Home Father" was founded. The plot deals in lighter vein with the problems of prohibition and woman's suffrage as applied to an aldermanic campaign in a Western city.

William Worthington directed the production from Bess Meredyth's scenario, and in support of Mr. Farnum the principal roles involve Florence Mayon (the suffrage candidate), Arthur Hoyt (the worm who finally turns) and Richard Le Reno (an old school politician). There will be a suffrage mass meeting and parade as special examples of good direction—but the situations and fast-moving comedy episodes will be the dominant source of entertainment.

PLAN GOLDWYN BRANCHES IN EIGHTEEN CITIES

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, chartered at Albany, N. Y., with a capital stock of $1,000,000 and through which medium the Goldwyn pictures will be distributed to American exhibitors, will begin at once organizing and opening branches in eighteen important cities.

At this time the outlook is that the officers will be located in the following cities, thus affording distribution facilities in every important section of the United States:

New York, Boston, Buffalo, Philadelphia and Washington, for the East and Northeastern states; Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati for the Central states; Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Denver for the Central West and middle Northwest; Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles for California, the Pacific Coast and the Northwestern territory, and Atlanta and Dallas for the Southern states.

While one or two changes of shifts might be made in certain territories, the likelihood is that these enumerated cities will be the focal points of distribution.

EXHIBITOR BEATS SUNDAY CLOSING.

The exhibitors who have been fighting the Sunday closing movement in their town may be interested in the manner in which E. F. Daniels, manager of the Daniels theater, Iron River, Wis., beat the movement. Mr. Daniels writes:

"Last January the reform element in our city secured the services of an evangelist and tried to close my show on Sunday night. I fought them and beat them to a frazzle. I immediately began an education campaign, giving a talk to my patrons every show night on Sunday amusements and the reforms.

"I have just been elected mayor of this city by a two to one vote over my opponent, who is considered to be one of the most popular men in the city and who is trustee of one of our churches."

Mr. Daniels is using Mutual films in his theater on Sundays and other days as well.

"WHOSE WIFE?" GAIL KANE'S FIRST MUTUAL.

"Whose Wife?" Gail Kane's first Mutual production, released April 30, depicts the perils of marriages which are made in haste and for convenience. It sets forth a vivid lesson.

Miss Kane's work in the new production is considered the best that she has ever done for the screen. She makes the appealing character of Mary Melville, a living, breathing human entity—a thrilling presentment of constancy, sacrifice and love that grips the heart and inspires the imagination. Miss Kane's youth and great beauty add to the convincingness of her interpretation.

"Whose Wife?" is an adaptation of a thrilling love story by the successful English novelist, Cecil Henry Bullivant. Its plot involves a succession of intensely dramatic situations, sequentially developed through the exigencies of the story, of which additional strong points are the perfect continuity of acting and interest.

BUYERS INTERESTED IN "THE DEEMSTER."

The list of state rights buyers who are interested in "The Deemster" and who have called at the offices of The Arrow Film Corporation in the Times Building, New York, during the past few days includes nearly every prominent operator in that branch of the industry.

Principals who now control "The Deemster" for their respective states include, Lewis J. Selznick, New York; Louis B. Mayer, New England; Stanley V. Mastbaum and Harry Schwalbe, Eastern Pennsylvania; F. E. Backer, Mammoth Film Co. of 729 Seventh Ave., New York City, New Jersey, and B. Amersterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, Po., Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virgina.

Several other important deals are pending and it is reported that other valuable blocks of territory on "The Deemster" will be snapped ere long.

AT LAST A NOTE-BOOKLESS SCREEN REPORTER!

It is usual to see reporters in screen dramas pull out a healthy sized note-book and jot down in detail the heroine's story of what happened on the night of the murder.

When Gladden James was called upon to play the part of a cub reporter in Pathe's serial, "Mystery of the Double Cross," the director, William Parke, was very much perturbed because Mr. James was not equipped with note book and pencil.

But Mr. James, in the days before he won fame as a screen artist, had been a reporter on the Columbus Dispatch, and he knew that, authors and playwrights to the contrary, only reel reporters use note-books. Mr. Parke was in doubt, but was finally convinced, and there is no note-book in evidence in the sixth episode.

NAVY OFFERS FREE RECRUITING SLIDES.

The United States Naval Publicity Bureau is calling on motion picture exhibitors to help in recruiting for the Navy by displaying on their screen a set of twleve slides prepared by the Novelty Slide Company of New York. These slides may be had absolutely free of charge from any local Navy Recruiting Station or direct from the Headquarters of the U. S. Naval Publicity Bureau at 318 West 39th Street, New York.

NINTH "DOUBLE CROSS" EPISODE.

The ninth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," Pathe's big serial in which Mollie King is the star, is entitled "When Jail Birds Fly." It is announced for release the week of May 13. Miss King is supported by Leon Bary, formerly Sarah Bernhardt's leading man; Gladden James and Ralph Stuart. The picture was produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke and photodramatized by Bertram Millhauser.

Strange happenings in this episode leave Peter Hale completely at sea in his search for the girl branded with the mark of the Double Cross. A jail sentence, an eventful interview at the district attorney's office, a signed confession of Bentley's guilt and a mysterious escape from jail, are among the interest-compelling incidents.

The advertising matter includes 1, 3 and 6 sheets, lobby display, herald, stock 24-shet, banner, Pathe art portrait of Mollie King in ten colors, and novelties.

FOUR COMEDIES IN MAY FOR METRO.

Four one-act comedies will be released by Metro Pictures Corporation during May. These will comprise two Metro-Drew comedies, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew as stars, and two Metro-Rolma playets, starring Ralph Herz.

The May 7 comedy release is "The Regeneration of Reginald," by G. H. Plympton, with Ralph Herz as star. "Her Lesson," to be released May 14, starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, was suggested by Beatrice Boucher and written by Mr. and Mrs. Drew. The May 17 Drew comedy is called "Nothing to Wear." Suggested by Berty Badger Moyers, it was written by Mr. and Mrs. Drew. The fourth comedy release of the month is "The Black Hand" by T. J. Carrigan, with Ralph Herz as star.

"FILLING HIS OWN SHOES," WASHBURN'S NEXT.

Bryant Washburn's next Essanay feature will be entitled "Filling His Own Shoes." The story was written by Henry B. Rowland, one of the most popular of the present-day light fiction writers. In novel form it proved one of the six best sellers. The film version was adapted by Harry Beaumont, who also is directing the production. The preliminary scenes have already been taken.

In "Filling His Own Shoes," Mr. Washburn appears as an American shoe clerk out of a job in Paris, France. Hazel Daly and an ample supporting company has been provided. The picture will have a screen time approximately of 1 hour, 15 minutes. Its release date will be announced shortly.

HILLER & WILK RESCUE OLD KAY BEE'S.

Re-issues of motion pictures are infallible signs of popularity and excellence in this form of art. As it is been pointed out over and over again, really good pictures are like books which achieve a great vogue: they can be issued again at frequent intervals. Thomas H. Ince, the producer, is one of the few whose pictures have reached a second edition. "The Battle of Gettysburg" and "The Wrath of the Gods" two of his best known and most successful efforts are being brought to the attention of State Right buyers by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre building, New York. "The Battle of Gettsburg" is of course timely: "The Wrath of the Gods" is one of the best Japanese dramas Ince ever made.

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY CLAIMS BEATS.

The beats have been scored during the past week by the Universal Animated Weekly.

When the British Foreign Minister, Mr. Balfour, arrived in Washington on Sunday, April 22, he was photographed by two of the Animated Weekly's cameramen, and on the Monday afternoon following a motion picture record of the event was displayed for the patrons of the Rialto theater, New York. On Monday morning, April 23, the superdreadnought New Mexico was launched at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Pictures of this event also were shown to the Rialto's patrons on Monday evening. Such enterprise has continuously marked the Animated Weekly's activities in this field.

"GOD'S MAN" IN FAVOR.

In attestation to the vogue which the Frohman Amusement Corporation's latest master photoplay production, "God's Man," starring H. B. Warner, is enjoying, there is on record at the Frohman offices a number of 161 applications for booking of this subject which have been received during the last six days. These applications have in practically the entire number of instances come from theaters which have explained in their letters that they are legitimate houses desiring to book promineat photoplay attractions.

SOL LESSER BUYS "THE BARRIER."

Sol L. Lesser of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has just leased from the General Film Company the Oakland rights to Rex Beach's "The Barrier." Mr. Lesser consummated the deal in conjunction with F. A. Giesea. The picture will be presented in Oakland in a manner befitting the character of the production, with an augmented orchestra, at the Macdonough theater, one of the houses controlled by Mr. Giesea.

"DEVIL'S WORK" NEXT "JIMMIE DALE" EPISODE.

Jimmie Dale has too keen a sense of justice to see someone taking advantage of a man when he is down, without interfering. This championship leads him to commit another robbery in the story entitled "Devil's Work," the seventh of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Gray Seal," series.

Moyne is an ex-convict who is living straight and trying to atone for his one misstep, but Thomas Carling, the cashier of the bank for which Moyne is working, takes advantage of his former reputation. Carling steals $100,000 from the bank, and in order to put the blame on Moyne hides $10,000 of it and a steamship ticket in the mattress of the baby's bed in Moyne's house.

But the Tocsin, Jimmie Dale's guide in all his philanthropic work, learns of the treachery. This time the Tocsin comes to Jimmie at the theater and a note falls from his program as he unfolds it.

Jimmie Dale, as the Gray Seal, not only secures the money which is hidden in Moyne's house, but does it in such a manner that Moyne knows knothing about the danger in which he has been. Jimmie forces Carling to sign a confession of his guilt so there will be no further danger of the good name of Moyne being besmirched by trickery.

VIOLA DANA IN "ALADDIN'S OTHER LAMP."

Viola Dana has begun work at the Metro-Rolfe-Columbia studios on her next feature production, "Aladdin's Other Lamp." This is an elaboration of Willard Mack's playlet, "The Dream Girl," which has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis. It is being produced under the direction of John H. Collins. It will be a five-act Metro-Columbia production, John Arnold handling the photography.

"Aladdin's Other Lamp" is a different sort of story than any in which its dainty little star has ever appeared on the screen. Miss Dana has the part of Patsy, a drudge in a boarding house in a seacoast village.

A capable cast has been chosen to surround Miss Dana in "Aladdin's Other Lamp." Augustus Philips, a favorite Metro player, is given opportunity in this role for the skill at "make-up" in which he excels. Robert Walker plays Harry Hardy, the grocer's boy. Henry Hallam, will be seen as Capt. Barnaby. Ricca Allen has the part of Mrs. Duff, the landlady whom magic turns into a rag doll.

Exteriors for "Aladdin's Other Lamp" will be taken on the Maine coast.

M. H. HOFFMAN ANNOUNCES POLICY.

M. H. Hoffman, who recently organized a company of his own after serving five years with the Universal, is to treat the exhibitors who remain on contract with his firm in much the same way that Ford does his employees—in other words, he is going to Fordmatize his company.

He started the other day on a three weeks' trip to California for the purpose of organizing exchanges throughout the country, and in addition to dispose of some of the state rights for his first production, "The Sin Woman," for which he has bought the world's rights from the George Backer Film Corporation. Before he left, Mr. Hoffman said of his policy:

"My policy will be big attractions, plus comedies that people want, plus a serial, screen magazine and weekly. I intend to work a co-operative plan with exhibitors, reserving for the company certain profits in the investments and dividing the remainder in form of dividends among the exhibitors who stay on contract with the firm. In other words, I intend to put through the Ford automobile plan, which, as you know, has worked out very satisfactorily, and I am going to make an effort to prove that it will work out effectively."

"UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS" DUE MAY 14.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will launch a new animated screen weekly on May 14, to be known as "Universal Current Events," and which is being planned with a special view of outstripping the standing record for completeness, efficiency and speed. The tremendous increase in patriotism, national and international news has been met by a corresponding increase by the Universal news picture gathering staff. "Universal Current Events" will be the most complete and up-to-the-minute screen news giver the film industry has yet produced.

The Universal Animated Weekly will be continued in all completeness as heretofore, maintaining the prestige it has earned with exhibitors and audiences all over the world, and "Universal Current Events" will be an immediate bidder for the same popularity now enjoyed by its kindred issue. The Universal Film Mfg. Co. plans immediate co-operation with the Government at Washington in the passing of news items pertaining to the present world conflict and are planning to make "Universal Current Events" an historic film document.

"CIVILIZATION" RE-TITLED.

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Civilization Feature Company, announces that since the outbreak of the American-German war, "Civilization" has been rearranged with new titles and inserts of the American flag, etc., as well as President Wilson's great message to Congress. Mr. Hirsh also reports that they have had new paper printed; also window cards for the picture.

EQUINE ACTORS SELECTED WITH CARE.

Jacques Jaccard directed the last four episodes of "Patria," the International's photoplay serial supreme, spent more than two weeks in selecting the three hundred horses which take part in the battle and border scenes of this remarkable picture. Mr. Jaccard used the same care and discrimination in choosing the proper horses as he did in selecting the human actors for these thrilling episodes.

Mr. Jaccard was assisted in selecting the horses for "Patria" by Joe Flores, who is corral boss for one of the big Wild West shows, and Pete Morrison, the famous cow-puncher of the Southwest. It is Pete Morrison's horse, "Brownie," that does the most spectacular of the falls in the battle scenes.

Imposes 60 Cents a Seat Tax

Fredericton Proposes Picture Show Tax of $1.20 a Seat a Year, but Reduces It to Half That Amount—Wheeler Report Used as Argument in Favor of Higher Rate—Tax Is All Business Will Stand.

From F. F. Sully, the La Tour, St. John, N. B.

FREDERICTON, N. B.—Following stubborn opposition offered by the motion picture exhibitors of this city against the recent ruling of the common council that the yearly seat tax would be raised to $1.20 per chair, the council has rescinded its former vote and reduced the tax to sixty cents, or double what it was previous to the original vote. The hearing of the exhibitors, who were represented by Attorney P. J. Hughes, was one of the most interesting ever held in the Capital of New Brunswick.

In the absence of Mayor Mitchell, Alderman Walker presided, and after a discussion that lasted more than two hours the remaining eight members of the board were equally divided, with four against and four for the reduction of the tax. Alderman Walker cast the controlling vote in favor of the sixty-cent tax.

Quotes Wheeler Report.

Upon opening the argument for the exhibitors, Mr. Hughes said that the council evidently did not have full information concerning the moving picture situation in Fredericton, or the vote would never have been passed. It was a general opinion that the proprietors of the theaters were getting rich, and that it might be a surprise for the aldermen to learn that the local picture houses, during a portion of the year, were operating at a loss. It was true, Mr. Hughes said, that money had been made in the picture business but it was by the producers and not by the exhibitors.

He quoted from the report of the Wheeler commission, which investigated the moving picture business in the State of New York, showing that the proprietors of moving picture houses there were making little or no profit. Conditions in New York state, Mr. Hughes said, were similar to those in New Brunswick. He did not believe that the council desired to put the moving picture men out of business, but if the proposed tax were imposed, prices of admission would have to be increased or the houses closed. There was also the question of the power of a city council to place unlimited taxation on a business. Power to license, he said, did not mean power to tax out of existence.

License as High as Business Will Stand.

Mr. Hughes then quoted the license fees charged annually in other towns and cities in New Brunswick and nearby provinces, as follows:

Chatham, $100; Newcastle, $60; Truro, $200; St. John, $100; Moncton, $150 to $200; Amherst, $150; New Glasgow, $100 to $150; Sydney, $150; Dartmouth, nothing.

Fredericton, under the original resolution, would be charging $480 per year. Mr. Hughes concluded by stating that he believed enough had been placed before the committee to warrant a re-consideration of the resolution. Alderman Lemont asked Mr. Hughes whether he could say that a fifteen-cent admission fee would be charged. The attorney for the exhibitors said he could not state what they intended to do, and he did not see why the picture theaters should be made an agency for collecting taxes.

To Alderman Reid, Mr. Hughes said the proprietors were of the opinion that the old license fee was as high as the business would stand. He also quoted figures of the receipts and expenses of one of the houses.

David Richards of the Gem theater also made a statement explaining the heavy expenses under which the picture business was operated.

Alderman Shea said that he had been of the opinion that the moving picture houses were making money, but had come to the view that the taxation should remain as it was.

Alderman Lemont said that he had proposed to increase the taxation on moving picture houses because money must be provided to meet the demands of civic government. If money were raised from the picture shows it would not have to be raised from some other source. The consumer was the ultimate source of the money paid in taxation. The proprietors of the picture shows should increase admission fees and spread the increase over as many people as possible. Luxuries everywhere are recognized as the most ready source of taxation, and moving pictures could be taxed for that reason. He had no desire to remove moving pictures. They were excellent as an amusement. Taxation on them, however, would be indirect and voluntary. He could not see why those operating picture houses should think that the admission fee could be kept at the ante-bellum figure of ten cents. Fifteen cents was the price in other towns.

Alderman Barker believed that the picture business could not stand heavy taxation. He personally would be unwilling to pay a fifteen-cent admission fee.

Alderman McLellan was of the opinion that increased taxation would prevent the erection of the modern picture house which was contemplated. He did not think that the council should discourage development in the city, and said that a license fee should be fixed for a term of years.

Alderman Burnett, seconded by Alderman Baxter, moved that the original motion increasing the license fee for moving pictures to ten cents per seat per month, be amended by making the license fee five cents per seat per month. This was carried by a five to four vote.

Before the vote was taken, however, Alderman McLellan said it had been shown there was not sufficient surplus in the picture business to warrant an increase in license fees. An increase in admission fees would not be justified, and he could not agree that moving pictures were luxuries. Public opinion, he added, was opposed to increasing the fee.

Exhibitor Elected Alderman.

St. George, N. B.—Fellow townsmen of George B. Frauley, proprietor and manager of the Imperial theater, have seen fit to honor him to the extent of electing him to the board of aldermen in the common council. At a closely contested election held in St. George last week he was elected from Ward 1 by a gratifying majority. Mr. Frauley has been a prominent exhibitor in this section for several years.

New Theater Building in Trenton.

Trenton, N. S.—Work is already well under way for the new motion picture house being erected by N. W. Mason of the Roseland theater, New Glasgow, and W. Woods of this city.

Kentville's New House Coming On.

Kentville, N. S.—Klark & Hiltz are now hurrying forward operations on their new $25,000 picture house, which it is expected will be ready for the summer's business. It will surpass their former structure and equipment in every respect, and will be one of the best in the section.

W. H. Wheaton to Manage Pictou House.

Pictou, N. B.—Bert Graystock, who has been manager of the opera house here for several years, has resigned, and is succeeded by W. H. Wheaton, who was formerly a photographer here, and at one time connected with the business in St. John. Mr. Wheaton has a host of friends who wish him success in his new position.

Want Factory Inspector Kenney Retained.

St. John, N. B.—Exchangemen in and about the city are working for the retention of John Kenney as factory inspector. Mr. Kenney, who has filled the post of inspector for the province of New Brunswick for the past six years, is a Conservative. The new government is Liberal, and it is possible that he may be among those who will be succeeded by Liberals. Mr. Kenney has been fair and just in his dealings with the exchangemen and exhibitors, and while he has always insisted on proper protection of workers and public, constantly alive to the interests of the government, he has not demanded too much of the industry. He has made many friends in the motion picture fraternity, and it is understood that a petition signed by all the exchanges doing business in the province is to be presented to the government asking that he be retained as inspector during the present administration.

Newark News Letter

(By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.)

Moon Producing Company at Work.

NEWARK, N. J.—The recently-organized Moon Producing Company, which maintains offices at 207 Market street, in the Ordway building, has completed two comedies, and the concern is now busily engaged on the third production. The names of the two completed comedies are "Professor Phaces Phancy," and "Officer Oscar." The third offering is entitled "A Baseball Tryout." The pictures feature Oscar Johnson, "the man with a thousand faces." The comedies are each one-reel in length.

The pictures that have been thus far produced have been taken in a local studio. Plans have already been completed for the erection of a new studio at Toms River, N. J. Upon its completion, the succeeding releases will be taken at this new studio.

Pictures Aid Boy Scouts.

Maplewood, N. J.—A moving picture entertainment was given in the Maplewood School auditorium in aid of the Boy Scouts last week.

Frank Hall Productions, Inc.

Newark, N. J.—The Frank Hall Productions, Inc., with Frank G. Hall, of 118 Market street, as registered agent, has been incorporated here with a capital of $125,000. The new concern was chartered April 14. The purpose given in the incorporation papers is to operate a moving picture exchange. The incorporators are Frank G. Hall, John B. McNally, and George A. Enright. The newest addition to Newark's film exchanges will handle only the best in big features. Mr. Hall is known among Jersey exhibitors as a man who does big things on a big scale.

Edward Bazar Opens U. S. Strand.

Passaic, N. J.—The U. S. Strand was reopened by Edward Bazar on Saturday, April 21, with a patriotic flag raising by soldiers and sailors from a nearby recruiting station. This theater is in one of the best localities in the city, situated as it is on Main avenue, not far from the Erie station. There is competition in the neighborhood and it will need showmanship to get the attractive theater into the leading place, but Mr. Bazar is a man of experience, who has made good in the past, and will get his share of patronage in this new location.

At the close of the program, which included "The Kick In," a Pathe offering, the Stars and Stripes were shaken out from a line strung across the house in front of the screen while the National Anthem was well sung by a hidden singer. Th ceremony immediately followed the showing of Edison two reel film "The Star Spangled Banner." The whole audience rose with the first strains of the bugle and stood while the stirring song was rendered. If the audience had been invited to take a part in the singing, the moment might have been even more impressive, sweetly as the song was sung.

Mr. Bazar has had experience from more than one angle of the film business, and is also a jeweler, owning two stores in Paterson, N. J. Five years ago he was manager of the Congress Square theater in New Haven, Conn., the first ten cent house, it is claimed, in New England. He has also been branch manager in Harrisburg, Pa., and Wilkes Barre, Pa., for Mutual, and has also filled the same capacity in other cities for the General Film. He goes back to the exhibiting end of the business with a consciousness that a new era is beginning and with the expectation of making a mark for himself. His present prices are for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, 5 cents, both matinee and evening performances. The rest of the week he asks 10 cents for choice seats at evening performances.

Maryland Censors Recall Certain War Films

By Order of Governor of the State Censor Board Acts to Stop All Films With Scenes That Might Discourage Enlisting—Has Ample Power.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Wednesday, April 18, Governor Harrington of Maryland held a conference with the members of the Moving Picture Censor Board: Charles E. Harper, Wm. F. Stone and Mrs. T. B. Harrison, and it was decided by him that the censors should eliminate all the war horrors from the films which had been passed by this Board to be shown in Maryland. This action was taken owing to the complaints which have come in to the governor from various sources, stating in the first instance that the horrible battle, death and carnage scenes depicted in these realistic war films had discouraged recruiting to a great extent. In the second instance it is understood that many theatergoers have been shocked and offended by the terribly grim scenes in these films.

Attorney General Albert C. Ritchie gave the Censor Board an opinion in which it is stated that they have the authority to eliminate parts of film. It reads in part:

"The act of 1916, chapter 209, gives your board the power to reject such views as are sacrilegious, obscene and indecent, and if any of the pictures in questions are, in the opinion of your board, of this character you can prohibit their exhibition.

"Your board is also given the power to reject such views as are immoral or such as tend, in the judgment of the board, to debase or corrupt morals. What is within the meaning of this language depends, in my opinion, upon circumstances. I think that in the present crisis anything which discourages and prevents recruiting, which is absolutely essential to the national safety and defense is contrary to the good morals of the community, and that your board may regard motion-pictures which, in your judgment, have this result as immoral within the meaning of the law.

"I, therefore, advise you that whenever your Board, in the exercise of its judgment decides that any motion-picture discourages and prevents recruiting, you have the power to prevent its exhibition as immoral."

Governor Eliminates Horrors.

Therefore it was decided by the Censor Board that all films of this nature would be recalled and reviewed again to eliminate the offending features.

The resurvey of the films has been taken with good grace by the Baltimore exhibitors and they do not consider it in any but a patriotic way and being of fine American fibre, all have acquiesced in a speedy manner to the order of the Board to re-submit these films for censoring.

Chairman Harper stated in part: "The exhibitors of Baltimore are co-operating with us in the resurvey of all the war films and we are censoring them under the new code. We feel sure that no trouble will arise between us in this matter and this second survey will not interfere with the programs of any of the theaters."

The Evening Sun of Baltimore writes the following editorial on the matter:

No Treason on the Films.

A few of the moving-picture films that have been shown recently in Baltimore seem to have been designed to abuse the President, to discredit the Government, and by maudlin pacifist and exaggerated pictures of war to discourage enlisting. Whether this is done by pro-German influences or by sentimental pacifism the result is the same, and the Maryland Board of Censors are doing a patriotic duty in deciding to bar all such disloyal stuff. Any attempts to undermine and discredit the Government now are far more harmful than the sight of some lady with too abbreviated drapery capering on the screen.

C. E. Shirtleff in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—S. E. Shirtleff, traveling representative for Pathe visited Baltimore during the week of April 16, and was introduced to many of the exhibitors of this city by Frank B. Spurrier, Pathe representative here. Mr. Shirtleff, it is understood, is making a tour of the Pathe exchanges in the East, with the idea of installing a new system of handling their output.

C. C. Hubert Speaks Well of Mutual.

Baltimore, Md.—While in the Mutual exchange last week, this writer was shown a letter to that office from C. C. Hubert, owner and manager of the Opera House in Newark, Del., which speaks very highly for the Mutual series. The letter read in part: "I want to congratulate you for producing such excellent pictures as "A Pearl of Paradise" and "Miss Jackie of the Navy." I think the two above mentioned features are among the best features ever shown in our theater. I hope you will produce another Margarite Fischer series."

New Pilot for Red Mill.

Baltimore, Md.—The Red Mill theater, 1510 West Lafayette avenue, is now under the management of William Loos, a man well known in the film circles of this city. Mr. Loos, prior to his present location, acted as manager of the Patterson theater, 1202 Laurens street.

Visitor from Salisbury, Md.

Baltimore, Md.—I. Ulman, owner of the Ulman opera house in Salisbury, accompanied by his daughter, Helen, visited Baltimore last week in a big auto. He is taking quite a tirp.

Society Sees "Joan the Woman."

Baltimore, Md.—At the opening performance, on Monday night, April 23, of Cecil B. De Mille's super masterpiece, "Joan the Woman," many of the most prominent people on Baltimore's society roster sat in the boxes at the Auditorium theater. Louis Maurice, who directed the music for this picture during its long run at the 44th Street theater in New York, is leading the augmented orchestra of 20 pieces in Baltimore.

Something New in Contests.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. Thropp, manager of Nixon's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, has been running a series of new style contests which seem to have made a hit with his patrons. The contests have been for singers and dancers. The first is arranged in such a way that the singers can be judged by the voice alone, so each is placed behind a screen on the stage and not until the prize is awarded can the singer be seen. The arrangement for the dancing is that each contestant must wear a pair of colored hose. While the dancing is taking place on the stage, and the winners are being judged, the curtain is lowered to the waist line and the audience awards the prizes by the steps and the color of the hoisery.

Red Cross Pictures Shown.

Baltimore, Md.—On the last three days of the week beginning April 16, motion pictures entitled "War As It Really Is," were exhibited at the Lyric theater under the auspices of the Maryland Red Cross and for their benefit. These films were made by Captain Donald C. Thompson under the direction of General Joffre. A special school children's matinee was given on Saturday afternoon.

"20,000 Leagues" Begins Long Run at the Pitt

Jules Verne Story Heralded by Extensive Advertising Opened for a Four-Weeks' Run at Pittsburgh—Big Electric Sign Used.

From Pittsburg News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, on May 30, opens a four weeks engagement of the big film spectacle "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," from the story of Jules Verne. An extensive advertising campaign is under way and the seat sale has been phenomenal. William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt, announces that at the conclusion of this run a new policy will be inaugurated and that the house will remain open with pictures during the Summer months.

Mr. Patch is now laying plans for a big warm weather business at the Pitt. The interior of the house is to be draped in white and the extensive iced air cooling system placed in operation. A twenty-piece orchestra will be used and novel features in connection with the various attractions will be introduced from time to time. The prices will be 25, 50 and 75 cents. Mr. Patch is now visiting in New York to arrange for the film to be shown under the new policy, which will be put into effect about June 1.

A mammoth electric sign advertising "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" has been erected at a conspicuous point at the entrance to the Union Station, and will be maintained throughout the run of that film at the Pitt theatre. The sign measures 132 feet long by 12 feet high and is attracting much attention. It was erected under the direction of L. Newman, manager of the A. G. Fontana Productions, which is handling the big subsea picture in this territory.

Spring Moving with the Exchanges.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The spring moving season will be marked by a number of important changes in location of Pittsburgh film exchanges. The Mutual Film, now at 420 Penn avenue, has leased the fourth and fifth floors of the Sauer building, at 804 Penn avenue, and will occupy the new quarters about May 15. Manager Walter Kinson states that the space will be more adequate for the needs of the Mutual business and the location a more central one. The trend of the film district continues away from the old Ferry street and Fourth avenue centre of the trade, as indicated by the fact that the Hudson Feature Film Co. and the Supreme Feature Film Service are also negotiating for space in the Sauer building and will likely occupy the third floor. These firms are now at 212 Fourth avenue. The National Film Booking Service, now occupying the front of the fifth floor of the Sauer building, has leased the entire second floor. The Poster Company, now on the fifth floor, will have space with the Mutual on the fourth floor. The changes will all take place this month.

Bill to License and Control Billboards

Pennsylvania Legislature Considering Measure That May Give Great Powers to Municipal Authorities Over Outdoor Advertising.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The moving picture trade and other amusement interests have voiced their protest against a bill just introduced into the Legislature at Harrisburg by the Civic Club of Pittsburgh, providing for municipal regulation, licensing and taxing of billboards and other forms of outdoor advertising. The measure gives municipal authorities complete power to "regulate and control the construction of signs, bill boards and other forms of outdoor advertising," and "in so doing may charge a license fee for the privilege of erecting the same and an annual charge for the privilege of maintaining same."

Theater Changes and Local Film Notes.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The management of the Orpheum theatre, Chambersburg, Pa., has been taken over by Mr. Weber, who has made some extensive improvements in the house. First-class feature pictures will be shown exclusively. Among other attractions, Mr. Weber has booked "Patria," the great Pathe serial.

Two picture theaters in the Pittsburgh district closed permanently during the past week, the Cameraphone, in Homewood, operated by Mr. Huhn, and the Princess, in Brushton, operated by Mr. Young. What disposition the owners will make of the houses has not yet been decided upon.

Manager Schwerin, of the Pittsburgh Selznick exchange, states that the Olympic theatre Fifth avenue, has contracted for all the Clara Kimball Young and Robert Warwick subjects, with a week's run for each release.

The Strand theater, Indiana, Pa., has been sold by A. Biltz to the Carris Brothers, well-known exhibitors. The new owners are contemplating a number of alterations in the Strand, to be made about July 1.

Leon D. Netter, general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, has just returned to this city after spending several weeks in Ohio looking after the demand for the company's subject in that state.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Protest on Proposed 10 Per Cent. Tax on Gross Receipts.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Assemblyman Leonard W. H. Gibbs of Buffalo has just been receiving in Albany a telegram from almost every theater manager in Buffalo, protesting against the proposed tax of ten per cent. on the gross receipts of moving picture theaters. Local managers are up in arms over the measure, alleging that it is "unfair, discriminatory and unjust." When it is remembered that the proposed tax is in addition to the present war tax, which film houses have been paying for the past two years, it can be seen that managers have just cause for complaint. According to Buffalo exhibitors, if this tax goes through, many neighborhood houses will of necessity be forced to close, not being able to stand any addition to the already discouraging expense at the operating end of the present day moving picture theater. Among the leading film men in Albany who is opposing the tax and who has large interests in Buffalo is Mitchell H. Mark, president of the Strand Theater company, New York, and owner of several theaters throughout the state.

Big Features Doing Well at High Prices.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Buffalo's leading legitimate houses are being turned into film theaters for the present and doing much to eliminate the idea that Buffalo will not pay high prices for moving pictures. As a refutation of this argument, the Teck is presenting for the second week "A Daughter of the Gods" with the top price at one dollar and capacity audiences have been the rule ever since the opening. At the Strand, commencing Monday, Geraldine Farrar will be presented in "Joan the Woman," with the top price at 50 cents. At the Family theater, Manager Harry Marsey is offering for the third week to capacity business "Enlighten Thy Daughter," at admission price of 25 cents, and the first three days of this week has as a special attraction Zena Keefe. This popular little star is appearing in person and addressing the audience from the stage. Miss Keefe is one of the stars in "Enlighten Thy Daughter." Next week Manager Marsey will bring "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" to the Family at high prices.

M. W. Comstock Is Local F. I. L. M. Club Manager.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo F. I. L. M. club has appointed M. W. Comstock as local manager. J. E. Kimberly, manager of the Buffalo World Film exchange, is president of the organization. According to Charles A. Taylor, Metro manager, the club is proving a great benefit in straightening out the differences over accounts between exchanges and exhibitors and adds that at present 90 per cent. of the exchange men are lending their active support to the club. Meetings are held at the Statler hotel every Monday evening.

Interesting Local Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Edward Hyman of the Victoria theater is dividing his time between booking pictures and learning how the "insides" of his new touring car works. Eddie's favorite sport is seeking the open road and "letting it out."

Beginning Sunday, April 29, the Strand theater announces that it will change its policy of two changes a week, and will offer three new features during the week, changing the program on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday. George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," at regular Strand prices, is attracting large houses all this week.

Harold Edel, manager of the New York Strand, is expected to visit "his folks" in Buffalo for a few days next week. Mr. Edel has many friends in Buffalo who will be glad to welcome him back to the old town for a few days. Mr. Edel guided the policies of the Strand theater here for several years.

Buffalo moving picture theaters are cooperating with old Uncle Sam in getting recruits for the army and navy. Almost every theater is displaying slides appealing to the boys to sign up with the local militia regiments, the heavy artillery or Troop I, First New York cavalry.

Manager Franklin's Novelty Wins Applause.

Manager Harold Franklin continues to stage unusual stunts during the orchestral numbers at Shea's Hippodrome. The latest innovation was the representation of Uncle Sam's fleet entering New York harbor. Small models of the various ships were used. The little vessels were placed on a moving belt and drawn across the stage, and with the harbor scene in the background and a small flag flying from the watch tower of each ship, the effect was most realistic. And to add to the patriotic idea, the 26-piece orchestra, under the direction of Herman E. Schultz played Sousa's stirring march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever." The house literally shook with applause at the conclusion of the selection.

Adding Vaudeville to Sunday Shows.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Local houses are beginning to add vaudeville to the Sunday film concerts. Shea's vaudeville house started the movement and now the Academy, Lyric and Olympic have followed suit. The move is being inaugurated as an experiment, but few believe that vaudeville is required to attract patrons to the moving picture shows on Sunday, at least it has not been required for the past few years. The best evidence of this fact is that the Strand theater and Shea's Hippodrome are doing capacity business on Sunday, with films alone, as are several other big neighborhood houses.

MORE NEW JERSEY NOTES.

Myer Tarshis Improving Palace.

Irvington, N. J.—Myer Tarshis, who is managing the Palace theater, 1059 Clinton avenue, is improving and renovating his showhouse. Mr. Tarshis is introducing some "stunts" at his house that are making the people of Irvington sit up and take notice.

Herbert Amusement Company Incorporated.

Camden, N. J.—The Herbert Amusement Company has been chartered here with an authorized capital of $2,000 to conduct a general amusement business. The New Jersey Corporation & Trust Company is named as agent, and 419 Market street is given as the registered office. The incorporators are H. Effinger, F. G. Nixon and William Feihoffer.

H. B. Smith Film Corporation.

Camden, N. J.—The Henry B. Smith Film Corporation has been organized here with an authorized capital of $100,000 to deal in moving picture films. The registered agent is R. S. Ayres, with offices at 428 Market street. The incorporators are H. B. Smith, G. W. Fortune and M. J. Hopper.

A Very Diversified Program.

Toronto, Ont.—Something entirely new in the way of a program policy has been adopted by the York theater, Yonge and Bloor streets, Toronto. This house now has a complete change of program every day in the week, with almost a different brand of feature for each of the six days in the week. During the first week after the adoption of the new schedule the different films used were Triangle, Fox, Metro, Pathe and Vitagraph, with the Triangle booking features for two of the days.

The York does not serve a transient trade, and the idea of the new policy is to get the people to come every night if possible. Then, again, if they do not like an attraction they need not wait half a week for a new show.

Canadian Vitagraph Notes.

Toronto, Ont.—H. Macdonald, formerly advance man for "Peg o' My Heart," has joined the Vitagraph's Toronto branch to become a film roadman in Northern Ontario.

Incidentally, Jack Droy, formerly booker of the local Vitagraph office, has become assistant manager under Manager Barrett. Droy reports that the "Secret Kingdom" has made a record in Toronto for a serial, no less than thirty-two local theaters having booked this continued picture.

It is interesting to note that a Vitagraph feature, "The Glory of Yolanda," was recalled by the Ontario authorities after it had been passed by the Board of Censors for the Province and had been exhibited for six weeks. Objection was raised to this picture because of its references to Russia, an ally of Great Britain.

Toronto's New Allen Theater Incorporates

B. Allen Is Chosen President of Company—House Will Be Like Detroit's Majestic Theater With No Balcony—Will Cost $250,000.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—Public announcement has been made that it has been decided to call the latest Toronto downtown theater "The Allen," instead of "The Temple," as formerly reported. Announcement has also been made that the owners of the new house have incorporated with the following company officers: President, B. Allen; vice-president, J. J. Allen, and secretary-treasurer, Jule Allen.

The Allen theater is being modelled after the Majestic in Detroit, the designer of both theaters being Mr. C. Howard Crane of Detroit. The new structure will have neither balcony nor gallery, the tiers of seats rising in ampitheater or stadium style in one long incline. Another feature is that there will be no stairways extending from the main foyer to the auditorium, access to the house being obtained by inclined runways, which will be graded with a rise of two inches per foot. The walls will be built of hollow tile with an exterior facing of rug brick and stone trim. The interior decorative scheme will follow the Adams style, the colors being rose and gold. The house will be ventilated with washed air and there will be double the number of required exits on three sides of the building. The theater will have every known facility for the comfort of patrons.

When ready for operation, the Allen theater will have cost $250,000, it is declared. One of the features will be a great pipe organ. The seating arrangement will provide for the accommodation of 2,000 persons.

The main entrance will be on Richmond street, along which frontage there will be a number of small but attractive stores.

Harry Low Opens Midland Theater.

Midland, Ont.—Harry Low, formerly manager of St. George's Hall, Ottawa, has opened the Midland opera house, Midland, Ontario. Low has spent $6,000 in reconstructing and improving the theater building at Midland, but this center is going ahead so rapidly that he anticipates big business.

Armaby Improving Theater at Windsor.

Windsor, Ont.—Because increased patronage has been taxing the facilities of his theater at Windsor, M. D. Armaby, 152 Wyandotte street east, Windsor, has decided to add to and alter his house to the extent of $5,000. When reconstructed, the Armaby theater will be one of the most attractive in this thriving Ontario city.

Hotel at Welland Becomes a Theater.

Welland, Ont.—P. Whalley, 92 Main street, Welland, Ontario, has started work on the conversion of the Arlington hotel, Welland, into a moving picture theater, at a cost of $11,000. The theater will have a seating capacity of 700 when ready for business. The hotel building will have an entirely new pressed brick front. A number of hotels around the Province of Ontario have been converted into picture theaters since prohibition came into effect on September 16th last.

Manager Garner Wants to Start Screen Club.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Garner, of the Toronto Mutual branch, formerly prominent in film affairs in Cleveland, is feeling out the members of the Toronto picture circle, with regard to the organization of a screen club here similar to the one in Cleveland. Garner says that the local film folks would be better off with some sort of a social organization, although there is already a very friendly feeling among Toronto exhibitors and exchange managers he has noticed.

Manager Garner announces that arrangements have been made whereby the Canadian Mutual will increase by a considerable amount the number of films to be imported into the Dominion. Heretofore all Mutual releases have not been handled by the Canadian offices.

P. F. Brown Becomes a Perkins Branch Manager.

Toronto, Ont.—P. F. Brown, formerly with Charles Potter, Toronto, has become Winnipeg branch manager of the Perkins Electric Company and the Independent Film and Theatre Supply Company. The latter concern has been organized to handle the distribution of Art Dramas in the Dominion, while the Perkins company sells various models of projection machines and supplies.

Films and Dances at Arena.

Toronto, Ont.—The interesting announcement has been made that the Toronto Arena, where hockey matches are staged during the winter months, will have moving pictures and dancing on special nights during the coming summer season. The pictures will alternate with the dancing numbers. The promoters have already booked L-Ko Comedies.

W. Reddy Becomes Manager.

Toronto, Ont.—W. Reddy, acting manager of the Toronto branch of the General Film, has been appointed permanently to the position of Toronto manager of the company. He has succeeded W. A. Sault, who has become Toronto sales manager of the Triangle.

Heard at Regal Films Office.

Toronto, Ont.—Sid. Taube, of the Regal Films, World distributors in Canada, has returned to the Toronto headquarters after a two months' stay in Vancouver, where he opened a branch of the company.

N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Regal Films, is now on a tour of inspection of the Canadian West. This company has arranged to handle the Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies in the Dominion.

All-Features, Ltd., Sold to Arthur Cohen

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has been made that Arthur Cohen, proprietor of the Globe theater, Toronto, and president of the Ontario Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association, has purchased the exchange known as All-Features, Limited, 56 King street west, from Manager Clarence Robson, of the Strand theater, Toronto. Mr. Cohen has arranged to release Ivan productions, and has secured the services of M. Fischer, formerly of United Photo-Plays, Limited, 37 Yonge street, an independent exchange.

Toronto, Ont.—Charles Pearson, special representative of Adolph Zukor, recently visited Toronto to investigate local conditions.

Toronto, Ont.—James A. Davidson, brother of Manager W. N. Davidson, of the Toronto Pathe exchange, has returned from Chicago, where he was associated with C. B. Price, of Superpictures, Inc.

Toronto, Ont.—Mr. Raver, brother of Harry Raver, New York, and a well-known Toronto film man, has left for New York City to become associated with the Apollo Film Company.

Lansing Lifts Ban from "Patria"

Secretary of State Lansing and Pennsylvania State Attorney Brown Decide to Permit Pathe Serial to Be Shown—Scenes Reflecting on Japanese Are Ordered to Be Eliminated—Film Is Patriotic.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The ban on the preparedness film, "Patria," included among the photoplays charged with affecting recruiting unfavorably, was lifted last week by Secretary of State Lansing and State Attorney General Francis Shunk Brown. The film was written and staged with the purpose of producing exactly the opposite effect of what the censors thought it might have on young men of military age. It illustrates this country's unpreparedness for war and aims to arouse the country's interest in matters of military preparedness.

In censoring films depicting the horrors of war, Secretary Lansing and Attorney General Brown included "Patria," because it showed Japanese conspiring with Mexico against the United States. On account of this country's new diplomatic relations with Japan, as an ally in the war against Germany, Secretary Lansing asked that any feature reflecting on Japanese officials be eliminated from the film.

After conference in Washington, J. A. Berst, general manager of Pathe, it was agreed to eliminate all subtitles reflecting on the Japanese as imaginary enemies of the country. All these titles were taken out and others substituted to emphasize the fact that the film told an imaginary story. When Secretary Lansing approved the changes the State Attorney General wired from Harisburg: "Withdraw present objections to 'Patria,' assuming Secretary Lansing's eliminations will be made."

The changed films was then hurried out again from the exchanges and appeared on the screens of the Arcadia and B. F. Keith's.

"It is the policy of the house of Pathe, under the direction of J. A. Berst, to cooperate with all departments of the Government and to aid recruiting through patriotic productions and Pathe News," announced the local Pathe exchange when the news arrived that the ban on "Patria" had been lifted.

Philadelphia Operators Hold Annual Ball

Local No. 307 Gives Another Successful Dance at Eagles' Temple—Lew Krouse and His Bride Lead in Grand March—Many Attend.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The annual Motion Picture Operators' Ball, held on April 19, at Eagles' Temple, was attended by an immense throng and is reported to have been a financial success. Local No. 307, affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., was responsible for the affair and supplied all the requisites for an evening of pleasure. Dancing, refreshments, vaudeville and several clever electrical effects all helped to make the evening thoroughly agreeable. The grand march was led by Lew Krouse and his bride, and the couple were the center of attraction all evening.

Many exchangemen and exhibitors were present, among them Herbert Given of the Triangle, J. Wilder of the Selznick, Mark Swaab, C. P. Bennett, George Pierce of Pathe, and Allen May of the World.

W. F. Seymour Here—Is Optimistic.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. F. Seymour, of the Triangle corporation, arrived at the local exchange last week and spent several days developing his special efficiency plan for the benefit of exhibitors. Mr. Seymour is making a tour of the Eastern offices of the company and came here from Washington. He is collecting valuable data as to the results of the new Triangle releasing plans, which include the abolishment of the deposit system and have already shown fine results, and created general satisfaction among the exhibitors. He is extremely optimistic about the future, and perhaps justly so, since Triangle is the first corporation to lift a heavy load from the exhibitors' shoulders and the fact seems to be widely appreciated.

READING, PA.—Carr & Shad threw open the doors of their new Colonial theater, situated at 7th and Pine streets, on Monday, April 16th. The Colonial was built at a cost of $250,000 and is the largest and handsomest theater in the city. It is of entire fireproof construction, has a handsome exterior and a beautiful decorated interior in old rose and gold. The house has 1,100 seats on the main floor, 800 in the balcony and 100 in the boxes, all of which are upholstered. A $12,000 Kimball organ is being installed while an 18 piece orchestra furnishes music at present. The prices of admission are 10, 15 and 25 cents.

A large and beautiful mezzanine gallery leads to the lobby, which is finished in marble, and rich carpets are laid throughout the house.

The opening attraction was Pauline Frederick in "Sleeping Fires," which will be followed by Mary Pickford in "The Poor Little Rich Girl." Messrs. Carr & Shad are the pioneer exhibitors here, with 12 years' experience in the picture game. They own in addition to the new house the Victor, the New Victor, the Empire, Princess and Arcadia. Lessy will have complete charge of film inspection, shipping and care of films, thereby insuring every customer of getting his films and advertising matter in proper shape, at the proper time and in good condition. Want Exhibitors to Help Guard Cars Parked Near Theater.

Washington, D. C.—Managers of motion picture theaters and other places of amusement have been asked to aid the American Automobile Association, District of Columbia branch, in protecting automobile owners from joy riders and thieves. A letter has been sent to the managers by Judge Martin A. Knapp, president of the advisory board, wherein he suggests the importance of supplying adequate protection for the cars of their patrons, and pointing out the benefits that should accrue to both manager and patron.

It is the idea of Judge Knapp to appoint a committee from his advisory board to confer with the various theater managers in an endeavor to organize a protective system immediately he ascertains how many of the managers will co-operate He has expressed the belief that a system for guarding cars parked by theater patrons can be efficiently organized at a moderate expense, and that such a system would do much to ease the minds of theater patrons and add immeasurably to box office receipts.

Immediate replies were received by Judge Knapp from Harry M. Crandall, who operates a string of theaters in this city, and L. Stoddard Taylor, of the Belasco theater. Both of these gentlemen expressed a willingness to co-operate with the club's officials and sought suggestions as to how they could be of value in the work of preventing theft and damage to the cars of their patrons. It is expected that a large number of other managers will also proffer their aid.

War Taxes and Picture Theaters

Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World Is Assured by Member of Ways and Means Committee of Congress That Picture Shows Will Not Be Overlooked—Will Not Be Discriminated Against Either.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Washington office of the Moving Picture World has received a number of telephone and verbal inquiries as to what Congress intended doing in the matter of taxing motion picture exhibitions. There have been all sorts of wild rumors floating around this territory —Congress intended to place an enormous tax on positive films, then negatives were added to the list, now additional discussion has to do with a one-cent tax on theater tickets.

At the request of these inquirers, the World correspondent has in turn inquired of members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, upon which committee devolves the duty of devising methods of raising revenue for the usual and the unusual expenses of the Government. This committee has appointed a sub-committee to thresh the whole question out, but in the meantime there are none among the members who will divulge what is going on at their executive meetings.

On April 26 the subcommittee had gotten no further in its deliberations, as far as could be learned, other than to agree that there should be a tax upon all amusements—just how great a tax this will prove to be cannot as yet be ascertained, but one member of the committee stated "Tell your moving picture theater friends that they will not be overlooked in the general scheme of taxation, that they will not feel lonesome, for pretty nearly everybody in the whole United States will be permitted to become patriotic and pay a few taxes toward taking care of the heavy war expenditures, and they need not fear discrimination, for other forms of amusement are also to be taxed. The rate of moving picture theater or other amusement taxes have not yet been arrived at."

Other taxes in which the motion picture men will be interested will be the stamp tax placed on all freight and express bills of lading and receipts, and the probable increase in first class postage rates from two to three cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

The subcommittee hopes to complete its rough draft of the bill at an early date and to submit it for the action of the full committee, which in turn will present it to the House of Representatives for enactment. Another week will probably be required in getting the provisions of the measure into shape. It is not expected that there will be any hearings on the bill—at least not before it reaches the Senate—and but little opposition will be made to it as a general proposition.

On the basis of a one-cent tax on each motion picture theater ticket sold, a number of protests have already been made. The Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local No. 224, of this city, has presented a resolution to the Central Labor Union protesting against action of Congress on any bill providing for a tax of one cent on tickets of admission sold at all theaters and other places of amusement. The operators see in such a tax so heavy a drain on the exhibitors as to make the motion picture business unprofitable, compelling the exhibitors either to raise the price of admission to their theaters or suspend a number of their operators. It is also charged in the resolution that if the theater men pass the tax along to the people it would be found to be a burden on many of those who patronize this cheap form of amusement.

Patriotic Films Do a Valuable Service

Free Shows to Help Recruiting Take Some Patrons from Theaters, But They Aid the Government and Help Exhibitors in the End.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Local exchange managers have been more or less embarrassed of late by certain criticism on the part of a few motion picture exhibitors who would take them to task because they furnish films for free shows intended to stimulate recruiting. Washington, the National capital, the center, practically, of all the war activity, is doing its best to hold up its end in the matter of furnishing its quota of troops for the defence of the honor of the nation. To that end every possible means is being taken advantage of with which to stir up patriotism and enthusiasm.

A number of the exchanges have had calls made upon them by various organizations patriotically bent, and, it is said, even by Government officials, to furnish films that have a war atmosphere to them and are of a nature to warm up those who view them. One of the downtown newspapers secured a number of such films which they used by throwing them on a screen on the side of their building, to be viewed by huge crowds who congregated in the vicinity. This took a considerable amount of business away from the theaters in certain sections and, it is said, gave rise to the indictment that the exchange managers were exceeding the limits of business in furnishing the films for such a purpose.

It is an open question, but in times like these should the exchange managers be criticised for their action in loaning pictures that will make soldiers to protect the country? It makes it very hard for the exchange managers and the worry over a loss of a few cents will sour the disposition of the worrying theater man.

New Activities Laid Out for Association

Washington Exchange Managers' Association May Form Baltimore Branch—Committee Chosen to Draw Up Constitution and By-Laws.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Baltimore representatives of the Washington exchanges were the guests of the members of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association at the regular banquet meeting last week. Those present from Baltimore were: O. D. Weems, of the Mutual; Ed Price, of the Triangle; Mr. West, of the Paramount; Frank B. Spurrier, Pathe; John J. Payette, General Film, and W. A. Bush, K-E-S-E.

These gentlemen discussed with the managers general conditions in the Baltimore territory and following a very lively session Messrs. Price, Spurrier and Bush were selected as a committee to draw up a report, making specific recommendations for the Washington offices to carry out. These three will also make suggestions looking to the formation of a Baltimore branch association. They are to keep the Washington association informed of legislative action in Maryland and such other matters wherein exchange managers and exhibitors are equally interested.

The Washington association has been a success from its inception and it is now being planned to make it of far more value to the membership. To this end a committee consisting of Messrs. Butner, Evans and Mann was appointed to draw up a constitution and by-laws for governing the activities of the association.

Other visitors at the meeting included Messrs. Costello, who contemplates the erection of a film building, and A. C. Mather, with two representatives of a local real estate concern, who had a similar proposition to make. Costello Bros. told the exchange managers that they were being delayed in the work of construction of the film building. Mr. Mather, who comes from Chicago, stated that on or about June 1 work would commence on a ten-story office building on G street, near Ninth street, northwest, on the land now occupied by the National Rifles Armory. This is in a most excellent location as far as the local exhibitors are concerned.

Victor L. Abbey Back at His Desk.

Washington, D. C.—Victor L. Abbey, who is in charge of the serial department of the Mutual exchange in this city, has returned to his desk after an absence of eight weeks or more. Mr. Abbey has been confined to his home during that period, suffering from a bad case of blood poisoning, resulting from his having stepped upon a nail, his foot becoming infected with the poison. Manager Evans, who is in charge of this territory, welcomed him back with open arms, for during Mr. Abbey's absence he found it necessary to assume a considerable part of Mr. Abbey's work.

J. A. Cunningham Stops Over.

Washington, D. C.—Among the visitors in Washington last week was J. A. Cunningham, formerly manager of the Baltimore branch of the Mutual, and Baltimore representative of the Triangle. Mr. Cunningham came over from Baltimore to say good-bye to relatives and friends prior to journeying to Atlanta, Ga., where it is understood he is to take charge for the Wells interests for that immediate locality. Mr. Cunningham is the brother of B. C. Cunningham, who has just gone to Seattle, Wash., for the Artcraft Film Corporation.

Louisville Has a Regular 15 Cent Theater

Majestic Theater Put Admission Up—Has Long Maintained the 10-Cent Rate—Other Houses It Is Hoped Will Follow Suit.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—It was with considerable surprise that exhibitors and moving picture fans read the announcement made by the Majestic Theater Amusement company that, starting Monday, April 23, the greater Paramount program would be shown and admission raised to 15 cents for adults. The 5-cent admission for children will stand.

This house is managed by Louis J. Dittmar, and is one of the oldest companies in Louisville, having operated the second real theater of the city and been in business at 544 South Fourth street for more than ten years. It is now the largest and finest exclusive picture theater in the city or district, and has a seating capacity of about 1,200 or better. In the years that the company has been in business it has followed the same policy of showing all films at 10 cents, no advances being made regardless of the quality or cost of a production. During this time the company has shown the films produced by the Paramount company and its main predecessors who were merged in that organization.

There has been no doubt for some time that the company could easily get fifteen or twenty cents for two-thirds of its shows, and it is generally considered that the new move will prove a good one and pave the way for a general advance in prices, something that has long been needed in Louisville.

This will be Louisville's first experience with a regular 15-cent house, charging standard prices the year around. A few theaters have advanced prices at times for special productions, and one or two trials have been given 25 and 50-cent shows where a number of films were shown, but this is the first time that a theater has undertaken to advance prices and still stay inside of the popular price limit. It is beginning to look as though the old-time 5 and 10-cents theater will make way for a greater and better industry.

Shawnee Theater to Be Auctioned Off.

Louisville, Ky.—George H. Fisher company, auctioneers, have announced that the Shawnee motion picture theater will be sold at public auction at an early date. The theater is of supposed fireproof construction, but was badly damaged by fire a few weeks ago and has just been placed in condition for operating. It seats 550 persons, has the latest equipment, including two machines, and is in a rapidly building residence community of the better type. The building has only been up a short time.

"Womanhood" at Louisville's Strand.

Louisville, Ky.—"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the big preparedness film, drew well at the Strand theater during a week's showing. The show ran for an hour and forty-five minutes, seven shows being given daily, and prices advanced to 25 cents on the lower floor and 15 cents on the balcony, the mezzanine being reserved at 50 cents. Special music by Natiello's orchestra and Miss Flora Marguerite Bertelle, Kentucky soprano, aided greatly in putting the show over.

Time to Be Up and Doing.

Louisville, Ky.—The Patriotic movement is being pushed by the Louisville moving picture theaters, which are showing slides urging men to enlist, film showing army and navy life, etc., and between shows recruiting officers have been making talks from the stages. Regimental bands have also played in front of the theaters, and entered the interior of the theaters, playing marital and other airs. J. Johnson Mussellman has been running some dissolving pictures in which two machines were used, the one machine throwing battle scenes over the peace and quiet reigning in American homes at the present time, and showing Americans that it is time to be up and doing.

Judge Wilson Will Run Fontaine Ferry Park.

Kentucky Film News Notes.

Falmouth, Ky.—Elmer Woodhead has announced that he has signed a contract, and in the future will show the Art Craft productions, including Pickford's and Fairbanks'.

Louisville, Ky.—For a week prior to the first showing of the film, Pearl White in "Pearl of the Navy," the Highland theater distributed tickets which with 5 cents in cash would admit aduts to see the first showing.

Louisville, Ky.—The Keith interests extended an invitation to the ballplayers on the Columbus and Louisville teams to attend a show at the Strand theater on the opening day of the season in Louisville. The invitation was accepted and the boxes filled with husky athletes.

Cincinnati News Letter

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

"Nation" Film Closes Its Run.

CINCINNATI, O.—It has been decided finally the great run of "The Birth of a Nation" in Cincinnati, at the Grand opera house, will be terminated at the end of seven weeks, in order to make room for other attractions booked. There has been no diminution in attendance, in spite of the long run and the fact that prices have been maintained at the high figures announced at the beginning of the engagement, and the consequence is that the run has established revenue and attendance records which will probably stand for a long time. In the first five weeks of the engagement 60 performances were given, with twenty-four in the final two weeks, making a total of 84 performances, which in itself stands as a Cincinnati record for a first-class performance of any kind. It is estimated that for the total run close to 100,000 persons will have seen the picture.

Pirates and Reds See "Daughter of Gods."

Cincinnati, O.—During the closing week of "A Daughter of the Gods" at the Lyric the management on one occasion entertained a distinguished group, consisting of Manager "Jimmy" Callahan, of the Pittsburgh baseball team, and his Pirate crew, this aggregation being in the city engaged in a series with the renowned Reds. Manager C. Hubert Heuck, of the Lyric, and Manager Ben Stern, in charge of the picture, are both dyed-in-the-wool fans, and the invitation was extended by them with the same eagerness with which it was accepted by the players. Some of the Reds accompanied their diamond opponents, and made the affair a real occasion. Herbert Brenon, producer of the picture, was in the city for the final performance, after which the engagement of "The Crisis," a film dramatization of the famous Winston Churchill novel, began.

Libson Reports Success of "Easiest Way."

Cincinnati, O.—A week's engagement of "The Easiest Way," the Selznick film production of the Belasco play, in which Clara Kimball Young is the star, proved highly successful at the Walnut theater, the drama lending itself peculiarly well to film requirements. Manager Libson reported uniformly large houses.

Wilmington Theater to Be Built Larger.

Wilmington, O.—Charles W. Murphy, once prominent as a baseball magnate, but now busy making money as a moving-picture exhibitor, has arranged with local architects to improve his theater at Wilmington, Ohio. As originally designed the house was to contain 750 seats; but Mr. Murphy has arranged to take title to additional property adjoining the theater, and will thus be able to make the theater considerably larger than he had at first planned. Dittoe, Fahnestock & Ferber are the architects handling the work. The foundations have just been completed.

Film Shows How Banks Are Swindled.

Cincinnati, O.—Nearly a hundred bankers and bank employees attended a private exhibition at the Hotel Sinton of "A Modern Black Art," a film showing the methods used by forgers and check raisers. The film is one of the most striking combinations of interest and practicality seen in moving pictures here for some time, and illustrates to an unusual extent the value of the screen as a means of instruction. R. C. Smith, of the Citizens' National Bank, Cincinnati, had charge of the exhibition, and handled it nicely. It is understood that the film was produced under the supervision of a national organization of bankers, for the purpose of forewarning and thus arming bank employees.

Clarence Runey Makes Denial.

Cincinnati, O.—Clarence Runey, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., has been approached by many persons who heard a report, based on a story in the picture journals, to the effect that he had sold out, and desires to state that his company is still in his hands, and that he has no intention of selling it. The story in question stated that a Lima concern had indicated its intention of purchasing some Cincinnati company engaged in animated cartoon work, but there are no details available as to what company is meant. The general knowledge that the Runey company is the only one in Cincinnati actually producing cartoons and other moving pictures led to the misunderstanding.

Cincinnati News.

Cincinnati, O.—The Fox production of "She," the great Rider Haggard novel, in which Valeska Suratt is the star, has had a splendid run at the Star theater, the popularity of the book years ago bringing many persons to the theater. Bookings of the production are reported at the Fox branch to be good.

Hamilton, O.—The Jewel theater has been equipped with a new Gold Fiber, much to the advantage of pictures shown.

DETROIT ITEMS.

Will M. Elliott Boosting Big Film.

Detroit, Mich.—Will M. Elliott is manager and special representative for the Barnett Film attractions in Michigan, making headquarters at 307 Peter Smith building, Detroit. Mr. Elliott is now on a tour of the upper peninsula for the company, devoting all his time and energy to "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Later he will arrange for bookings on "Joan the Woman," which his company also controls for Michigan as well as Ohio.

Will M. Elliott.

Before connecting with the Barnett Film, Mr. Elliott was in charge of publicity, as well as doing sales work for the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., in Michigan. Prior to that time he handled "Neptune's Daughter" in Michigan, for which he now controls the Michigan rights, although he does not plan to take bookings on this picture for many months to come. He believes it will be a better attraction in two years than at the present time. For several years he was road manager for Cohan & Harris attractions, and he has also handled the publicity as well as the management of many other dramatic and musical road attractions.

Everybody in Michigan knows him as "Bill."

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Praised.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky, who controls "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for Michigan, gave a private screening of this film last week to newspapermen, clubwomen and clergy. After the screening he asked those present for an expression. It was the consensus of opinion that subjects of this kind, handled along dignified lines, are a benefit to the public.

Spring Is Here—It's Time to Spruce Up.

Detroit, Mich.—Spruce up! This is the time of the year when every exhibitor should "spruce up" to some extent. It's time for the use of a little paint to make your place look like new. And it's surprising what a little paint will do to a place. The theater should always look its best, because it should always aim to leave a good impression on its patrons. Take some of the winter profits and invest them right back in paint, and see how much better your theater will look. Also fix up the outside—show the people of your community that you are progressive. Spruce up!

George Weeks Announces Changes at U. Offices.

Detroit, Mich.—George Weeks, general manager of the Universal in Michigan and northern Ohio, with headquarters in Detroit, announces the appointment of S. O. Mills as manager of the Bluebird department and Sam H. Barrett as manager of the Universal, both at Detroit. Ira H. Cohen will be special representative for the Universal serials, special productions, etc.

Julius Singer, field man for the Universal, has been spending a week or so at the Detroit Universal office for the express purpose of interviewing exhibitors, large and small, to find out just the kind of productions they prefer. The result of this investigation, which will take in other sections of the country, may be that Universal will change its method of production. As Mr. Singer puts it, "We want to put out only the class of pictures that exhibitors want."

Detroit Exhibitors Will Pay War Tax Gladly

See Prosperity Notwithstanding the War and Look for Good Times to Follow—Prices for Seats Will Go Up Though.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The motion picture exhibitors do not seem to be inclined to give the least worry to the effect on their business of the war. They take a most optimistic view of the situation, believing that business will be better than ever during the war and better still after the war. As for a tax on their business, they are prepared to do their share willingly, and if it becomes necessary to put a tax on all tickets sold, well and good, they will do it.

"The tax will be borne by the consumer as it is in every other line," said one exhibitor. "When sugar goes up in price, the grocer raises his price accordingly. When shoes cost more, the retailer charges more. No other business in the world gives the consumer as much for his money as the motion picture exhibitor; think of what the public or the consumer, as you wish to call it, gets for his ten, fifteen, twenty-five or fifty cents as compared to any other product. What difference will a few cents make to the consumer who enjoys pictures? If necessary, he will smoke one less cigar or economize in some other direction. The economy in attending the motion picture theater will be his last step. I don't see the least cause for worry on the part of the exhibitor. Whatever the new condition may be the successful exhibitor will be ready to face it, and face it willingly."

Longer Runs Beginning in Suburbs.

We are watching with a great deal of interest the method or policy of longer runs in the outskirts. It's surprising at that the number of the extras who are running pictures two days where they used to run them only one day. And now comes the announcement by Frederick Ingersoon, president and general manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit—located three miles from the center of town—that he will run "A Daughter of the Gods" featuring Annette Kellermann (produced by William Fox) for an entire week starting Sunday, May 6th. There will be shows afternoon and evening at prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents. This is a distinct innovation in the booking policy of the Knickerbocker and the first time in the history of the city that any outskirt house (excluding the big new Regent theater) that has dared book a picture seven consecutive days. So as we said before, the success of this particular engagement will be keenly watched. Should the engagement prove highly successful, we would not be at all surprised to see the Knickerbocker playing all of the big attractions a full week.

More recently Mr. Montgomery has been special representative for the World in Michigan.

To Spread on "Mormon Maid" Advertising.

Detroit, Mich.—The State Film Co., Detroit, will soon start a big advertising campaign in Michigan on "A Mormon Maid," which they control. It will involve thousands of dollars, and according to Manager Harry S. Lorch will be the biggest advertising campaign of its kind ever waged in one state.

New Detroit Theaters Coming.

Detroit, Mich.—From good authority we know of a number of big new theaters to be erected in Detroit this year which will be exclusively for motion pictures.

There will be a new house at Jacob and Joseph Campau avenues to be leased by the Schram amusement company.

Another big house is due for erection at Forest avenue, near Chene street—in the heart of the Polish district.

Another big house is due for Hastings street, near Erskine, in the heart of the Jewish street.

Still another big house is under consideration for West Fort street, near Junction.

(Yes, the WORLD always gives the news FIRST.)

"In Again, Out Again" at the Washington.

Detroit, Mich.—The Washington theater, Detroit, will adopt a summer policy starting the first of May. It will mean that all pictures will be shown continuously from noon until 11 P. M. There will also be a new scale of prices that will be of the popular variety. "In Again, Out Again" is due for a two weeks engagement at the Washington theater starting the first of May—longer if the business holds up. Douglas Fairbanks has such a big following in Detroit that we predict a very successful engagement for his first Artcraft production.

New Theater Building in Monroe.

Monroe, Mich.—Contracts were let April 19th for the new theater at Monroe, Mich., for J. R. Denniston. The building alone will cost $50,000 and the furnishings $25,000. It will open in the fall. Mr. Denniston now has the Family theater in Monroe.

May 14th is the date definitely set for the picture policy at the Detroit Opera House for the summer. "Intolerance" is the opening attraction.

Memphis Forbids Sunday Shows

City Attorney Bases Action on Chattanooga Sunday Closing Case Decided by Supreme Court in 1916—Theaters Are Open as Usual on Sunday and Managers Are Arrested—Association Will Fight.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—As a result of the efforts put forth by the Protestant Pastors' Association, City Attorney H. J. Livingston has handed down an opinion which forces every theater in Memphis to close on Sundays in the future, and Mayor Ashcroft has instructed Police Commissioner Douglass to stringently enforce this order. There is no specific state law against running theaters on Sunday in Tennessee, Attorney Livingston's opinion having been based on a decision of the Supreme Court in 1916, in the Howell Graham case, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, in which the court held that the operation of a picture show on Sunday was a common nuisance. In that case Howell Graham, Chattanooga theater owner, was arraigned before the Circuit Court of Hamilton County, and convicted on a charge of illegally operating his shows on Sunday, July 4, 1915. He acknowledged the facts, and carried his case to the Supreme Court, where the decision of the lower court was upheld on the grounds that any act which is not a necessity or a deed of charity is a common nuisance, subject to legal suppression.

City Attorney Renders Opinion.

At a meeting in the mayor's office, attended by all members of the City Commission, the city attorney read his opinion, a part of which follows:

"For this decision it might be questioned whether inquiry should not be made into the manner in which the shows are operated, with a view of determining whether they are, in fact, disorderly or otherwise objectionable, and whether the innocent recreation and entertainment furnished by them does not partake of the character of a necessity, along the line suggested in the case of State vs. Lorry, 66 Tenn., 95, in which (before the passage of the Act expressly prohibiting barbering on Sunday) a defendant was indicted for carrying on that business upon successive Sundays. In that case, our Supreme Court said:

"The legal definition of a nuisance is 'that which incommodes or annoys, something which produces inconvenience or damage.' It cannot be said that a barber's shop is something which incommodes or annoys, or which produces inconvenience or damage to others. On the contrary, the business of barbering is so essential to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants of a town or city that it may be regarded as a necessary occupation. To hold that it becomes a nuisance when carried on on Sunday is a perversion of the term nuisance. All that can be said of it is that when prosecuted on Sunday it is a violation of the statute (Shannon's Code, Sec. 3029) and subject to the penalty prescribed by law, but not subject to be indicted as a nuisance. It might shock the moral sense of a portion of the community to see a barber carrying on his business with open doors on Sundays, but it produces no inconvenience or damage to others, and therefore cannot be regarded in legal contemplation as a nuisance.

"But the decision in State vs. Graham, supra, being a later decision of our Supreme Court, and bearing directly upon the question of picture shows, in my opinion must be regarded as controlling, with the result above stated.

"H. J. LIVINGSTON,
"City Attorney."

Theaters Open and Managers Arrested.

Nothwithstanding the instructions issued, the theaters proceeded to open as usual on Sunday morning, April 22d, resulting in the arrest of sixteen managers, as follows: Arthur Lane, manager, Orpheum; Fred G. Weis, manager, Loew's Lyceum; Mrs. Guerene, manager, Queen; J. F. Duthie, manager, Princess; A. R. Richards, manager, Colonial; J. W. Ruth, manager, Empire No. 1; Joe Maceri, 327 Beale avenue; J. B. Amis, manager, Majestic No. 2; Sam Zerilla, 324 Beale avenue; G. N. Currier, manager, New Majestic No. 1; E. P. Moore, manager, Empire No. 2; C. M. McElravy, manager, Old Majestic No. 1; C. F. Bridges, owner of Majestic theaters; M. Frank, 268 E. McLemore avenue; M. J. Vossee, 2075 Union avenue; and A. Barasso, 336 Beale avenue. Bonds in the amount of $250 each were executed by the theater men arrested, and Attorney Ralph Davis secured as counsel for the defendants.

Arthur Lane, president of the Memphis Association of Theatrical Managers, recently organized, had the following to say: "We are proceeding cautiously in the matter. Of course we feel that we are being discriminated against, but the situation as it now presents itself is one that will naturally have to be threshed out in the courts. The Theatrical Managers' association has retained counsel to carry the test cases to the Supreme Court, if necessary, and the matter is now in our attorney's hands."

All the shows in the city continued business throughout the day on Sunday, the 22d, when police action was taken. During the process of the expected litigation, it is the intention of the theater owners to continue their shows on Sunday. The theatrical interests are going to put up a fight that will undoubtedly take the energy out of the would-be reformers, and have strong hopes of retaining the Sunday shows indefinitely.

Kaufman Specials Succeeds United.

Effective April 18th the United Film Service went out of existence, and the interests of this exchange will be known in the future as Kaufman Specials. Abe H. Kaufman, former manager of United, is president and general manager under the reorganization, being surrounded by a capable force of experts in film distribution. In addition to handling features and regular programs, this company will handle a large number of specials, cartoons and short-length comedies. The business under Mr. Kaufman's supervision has been thriving, until now it ranks in the front lines with the leading film exchanges of the South. Congratulations, and best wishes for continued success.

Mutual Film Exchange Moves.

Within a couple of weeks the Mutual will move the offices of its local branch to a new location at 230 Union avenue, in the heart of "film row." All the Memphis exchanges will then be located within a stone's throw of each other, which is a good thing for the moving picture industry in any city.

Kansas City Censorship Down to Business

F. F. McClure Completes Arrangements to Have All Film in City Passed Upon by the Board—Holds Broad Views on Censorship.

From Kansas City News Service, 503 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—F. F. McClure, in charge of the censorship of moving pictures in Kansas City, has completed arrangements for inspecting all the films shown in the city. Pictures now on exhibition that have not been inspected were ordered brought in before further booking.

This is the result of a period last summer when several pictures that might be called questionable were widely exploited in newspaper and lobby advertising as sensational. There was demand for a stricter censorship at that time, but it has taken several months for the red tape of the city to be unrolled, and the facilities provided for the thorough censorship.

It so happens that few of the exchange men or exhibitors are disturbed over the developments. Mr. McClure is an exceptionally well informed man on the picture business, and on censorship; he takes the position that the public is the final judge of the moral quality of a film, and outside of flagrant appeals to sensuality or criminal tendencies, the judgment of the exhibitor is good. There is no charge for censorship, and little trouble for the exchanges to send their films for review.

The necessity of avoiding showing of pictures that have any tinge of pacifism, or might offend with reference to the war, is one factor in the expediting of the complete film censorship.

New Vim in World Film Office.

Kansas City, Mo.—The World Film Corporation is going more aggressively into the Kansas City territory, with its definite policy of maintaining prices and holding the service to a high notch of efficiency.

This policy is welcome to some of the exchanges, and to many exhibitors who have seen danger to the business, in the craze for cutting expenses at the cost of quality and eventually of patronage. For several months there has been such a tendency. But the World office finds that exhibitors are responding to the quality appeal—it has increased its list of patrons very largely in the past few weeks.

E. C. Jensen, Western division manager of the World, with offices in San Francisco, has been in Kansas City three weeks putting the office in shape for the new deal. He has installed W. E. Troug, as manager, bringing him from the New York and Philadelphia offices where he has been doing special work. W. G. Carter has been brought from the Omaha office, and N. Moray from Philadelphia territory to travel the Kansas City field. Nat Barach is also here, and will do special work for five weeks. The Kansas City office retains Dale B. Hill, traveling from this city.

To raise the spirits and the standards of the entire force, the bookings, the films, even the walls and the rugs have been cleaned—and everybody is working with vim and enthusiasm.

Mr. Jensen goes to Omaha from Kansas City.

Getting Children Interested in Special Shows.

Topeka, Kan.—The children's hour shows at the Orpheum are meeting with the greatest success, not only receiving encouragement from the parents and teachers, but from the children themselves. Therefore, Mr. Heine, manager, is putting on a contest by which he hopes to get the children's opinions in black and white. The subject is "Why do you think that the children's hour shows are good shows for children?" The answers, which are to be in the form of letters, will be judged carefully, and the winners will receive their prizes at the following Saturday matinee. Sixteen one-dollar prizes will be given.

Theater Helps in City Beautiful Idea.

Topeka, Kan.—The Palace theater is being used by the City Beautiful Committee for showing films which boost gardening. Views of the vacant lots before flowers are planted are being followed by pictures showing the effect after the flowers have come up. The pictures also show the growth of the flowers.

National Anthem Sung Heartily.

Kansas City, Mo.—When war was declared the management of the Apollo theater, 31st and Troost, requested at each performance the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner." At first, the result was not gratifying, patrons either not singing at all or else in very weak and timid voices. With time, however, they have gained wonderfully and now, much to the enjoyment of everyone, a rousing chorus is heard every night.

H. B. Phelps' Original Letterheads.

Meade, Kan.—The most unique stationery received at the Kansas City exchanges from an exhibitor was that of the local picture show at Meade, Kan. On it was the photograph of a small boy, apparently about four, who was labelled "The Boss of the House," H. B. Phelps, manager.

Ad. Man Wasn't Afraid of Noise.

Kansas City, Kan.—An advertising scheme that made good was used at the Jean Gauntier theater for the "Old Fiddlers' Contest." The day of the contest an automobile, from which dragged three large cowbells, was driven through the streets. The racket was almost deafening and was the means of attracting the attention of all to the signs on the car.

Wants Needless Censor Board in Dodge City

Frank G. Wilcox Would Have All Theater Managers Compelled to Report on Shows Every Monday Morning Like Probationers—No Call for It.

By C. L. Jacoby.

DODGE CITY, KAS.—A campaign is being launched here by the national public welfare league to establish a local board of censors to pass on all amusements. Frank G. Wilcox, field secretary of the organization, has been making a campaign of the county this week, starting with a series of meetings here Sunday.

The avowed purpose of the movement is to "throw light on many questions pertaining to the proper care and training of growing children." The real purpose seems to be to obtain the appointment by the city commission of a local board of censors to be composed of five persons, nominations being made by local churches, clubs and other organizations.

It is proposed that the board have absolute authority over all theatrical performances, moving pictures and pool halls. One of the duties of the board, as proposed, will be to call a meeting of all theater managers each Monday morning at which the managers will submit a list of the films booked for that week. The censorship board will go over the list to see that each picture has been passed by the state board of censorship, and the local board will advise the theater managers of what changes have been ordered. If the theater managers refuse to obey the ruling of the board, it will have full authority to close up their places of business, according to the plan.

The pool hall provision is more or less of a joker, as there is now a city ordinance providing that no minors shall patronize the halls or frequent them.

Aside from the fact that every town has a few "reformers," there is no need of any organization of this sort, looking at it even from the standpoint of the "reformed." The moving picture show managers here already are showing films passed by the state board of censors and each paying betwen $150 and $180 for the privilege. There is no attempt on the part of any of them to exhibit sensational and sex features that meet with some objection at times. Each has regular program releases with the exception of booking special productions for which there is a demand from patrons. One such is the showing of "Snow White" by the Beeson theater this week at which Manager Beeson gave free matinees to all school children of the county. "The Life of Our Savior," Pathe, is another outside-of-program picture the Beeson showed last week. Mr. Beeson uses Triangle two days, Greater Vitagraph two days, Metro and Fox one day each. The Rath uses the Mutual program and the Dreamland General Film company. All these companies have Kansas City exchanges which submit their releases to the state board of censorship.

It is doubtful if the city commission will grant the authority asked for the proposed board, though one may be appointed. Should such a board as is proposed be inaugurated here with supreme authority, the future of the picture business here is in danger of being ruined. Even now there is no profit in operating a high-class house, and if a local board makes a few slashes in addition to those already made by the state board, patrons will become so disgusted with the play as presented they will stay away altogether. This is noticeable even with the state censorship, many film stories as presented having lack of detail at some points that hinders a clear understanding of a play that would otherwise be at least entertaining.

Film Storage Bill Is Demanded

Indianapolis' Tragic Fire in Apartment House Where Much Film was Stored Brings Demand for New Laws Governing Handling of Film—Both State and County Authorities Are Actively Interested.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 816 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Some kind of legislation—either city or state, and probably both—for more stringent regulations governing the storage, handling and transportation of motion picture films throughout Indiana is being considered by city, county and state officials in Indianapolis just now as a result of facts disclosed in their investigation of a fire last week in the Colfax building, a large brick rooming house, in which six persons lost their lives. A large quantity of motion picture films, kept in the basement of the building by a film renovating concern, is believed by officials to have been the cause of the fire.

Fire Marshal Will Urge Passage of a Bill.

H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, has intimated that he will urge the enactment of some kind of a law regarding the storage of motion picture films, at the 1919 session of the State Legislature, and Edward McGuff, a member of the City Council of Indianapolis, is conferring with attorneys and city and county officals preparatory to drafting a city ordinance containing stringent provisions for the handling of all highly inflammable materials, including motion picture films, etc. Mr. McGuff says he will introduce the ordinance as soon as it is completed.

Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of buildings, said the fire has proved the immediate necessity for an ordinance that would require the storing of films in fireproof structures so situated as not to endanger other property. He intimated that if Councilman McGuff's proposed ordinance did not contain such regulations, he would recommend the passage of such a measure in the near future.

The passage of provisions in the city building code has been prompted from time to time by fire insurance interests, but as far as is known, the companies have never asked for stricter regulations for the storage and handling of motion picture films. It is possible, Mr. Hilkene said, that as a result of the Colfax fire, the insurance companies may demand regulation in handling films in all the larger cities of the country.

Talk of a Large Fireproof Film Building

Although no definite information on the subject could be obtained, there is said to be some talk among the film men of the city regarding the erection of a large fireproof building to be used exclusively for the motion picture industry. It is probable, however, that no such action would be taken unless the proposed regulations regarding the handing of films would work too much hardship on the film men.

Louis R. Sereinsky, who owned the films stored in the basement, and who says he is at the head of the Oxon Chemical company, was arrested Saturday on a charge of manslaughter as a result of an indictment returned by the Marion county grand jury, which is assisting Coroner Poole and city and state officials in the investigation of the fire. Sereinsky was later released on a bond of $2,500.

Mr. Sereinsky, in a statement to the coroner and the police, said the Oxon Chemical company was formed for the purpose of obtaining silver nitrate from old motion picture films and that this was done in a room, used as a storage room, in the basement of the Colfax building. He said the silver nitrate was removed by the use of hot water and not by any chemicals.

The investigation conducted by the officials showed that a large quantity of used films were in the basement directly under the apartments where lives were lost; that a fireproof vault was constructed in the basement under the order of the city building inspector with instructions given to the men handling the films to keep them in this vault, but that the vault was practically empty, only a half barrel of films being in it at the time the fire started, and that Sereinsky admitted that eight barrels of used films were not in the vault, and when told that there were at least twenty-five barrels there said he meant only eight full barrels.

While there is little question in the minds of the authorities that the piles of films were the cause of the bursts of flame that made the fire spread so rapidly and trapped the occupants before they could escape, no evidence has yet been collected to show the original source of the fire which caused the film material to ignite.

Men familiar with the film business who viewed the basement following the fire said that some of the barrels must have been left open and that the fire thus got to the films. They scouted the idea that spontaneous combustion could have ignited the films.

"It requires an intense heat to ignite films," they said. "Proof of that is shown in the fact that the films stop about one-sixteenth of a second before an intense white heat when they are on the reel. If the tops had been on all of the barrels, it is not likely that the films could have ignited."

The films men, when asked what effect the ignition of a barrel of films would be, explained that once the films were ignited they would burn very rapidly and throw off a terrific heat. They said films were never known to explode and they advanced the theory that when the immense quantity of films began to burn a great volume of flame was created which broke out the windows in the basement and shot upward.

Mr. Hilkene, the building inspector, said he accidentally learned what business Sereinsky was in shortly after he moved into the basement of the rooming house, about a year ago

"I told Sereinsky and officials of the Indiana National Life Insurance company, which owns the building," Hilkene said, "that if I had any law to act upon such a business could not be operated under an apartment house. The only thing I could do, and I did that, was to demand that Sereinsky put in a fireproof vault, in which I ordered him to keep the films. He promised that he would have outside the vault only the films that he was cleaning.

"There is no satisfactory law or ordinance giving the city the proper control of such a situation," said Mr. Hilkene. "There are a number of other places in which films are stored and some of them we don't know anything about because we get no track of them. I am going to urge that a stringent ordinance be passed at once to remedy this situation, and to prohibit the use of any building, in which people live, for such purposes."

Investigating All Stored Film.

H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, has sent letters to the chief of the fire department in every city in the state with a population of over 5,000, directing them to make an immediate investigation of the storage of motion picture films in their cities. Each chief was directed to ascertain whether any films are kept in places in his city where they might be dangerous to life or property, and in case any such condition is found to report it at once to the state fire marshal's office.

Mr. McGuff, who is drafting an ordinance that he will introduce in the City Council, said his action in the matter was prompted, not only by the Colfax disaster, but by information he had received that large quantities of the celluloid films are now being kept in some of the large downtown office buildings. He said he believed some kind of a law should be passed at once to prevent further catastrophes of the kind that occurred at the Colfax.

Minneapolis Film Row Gets Out Glad Rags

Exchanges Are Beginning to Prepare for Company—There Will Be Several Good Times During Convention Week for Visiting Exhibitors.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Minneapolis' film row is getting "all fussed up" this week preparatory to the holding of the annual convention of Northwest exhibitors here on May 1, 2 and 3, and efforts are being made to have a majority of the roadmen into home offices during the gathering so that if there is aything exhibitors desire to know there will be plenty of "informers" in the exchanges.

Several of the exchanges have begun decorating their offices for the convention, not having an opportunity to decorate booths at an exposition this year, and in all probability when the exhibitors come in from the country they will find the most polite, most genial and most polished crowd of exchangemen it has ever been their good fortune to meet. Also, the exchangemen have brushed up their full dress suits and stuck away a few superfluous dollars in the corner so that visitors can be properly entertained as well as signed up to booking sheets and contracts.

President W. K. Howard, of the F.I.L.M. club has stated his organization will fill up a good portion of the receiving line and many new managers will make their debut before exhibitors who can get to Minneapolis only at convention times.

Special showings of films for the benefit of exhibitors numbering over a score have been arranged at various local theaters for the three days of the convention.

Campbell and Mustard Did Some Sweating.

St. Paul, Minn.—Barnum & Bailey advertise one of their most voluptuous hippopotami as "a blood sweating," etc. Flashing back to this old B. & B. press dope it must be said that this old blood perspiring hip. has nothing on Managers Campbell and Mustard, of the Blue Mouse theater here Thursday, April 18. The Blue Mouse just redecorated in beautiful pastel colors, also equaled the old hippo's rep. The American Furniture Company, located a foot on the other side of the wall from the Blue Mouse, caught fire, and rugs, furniture, papers and flooring to the extent of $30,000 worth burnt up while Campbell and Mustard were showing a Fox picture to a capacity house. Learning of the fire when the fire department arrived, Campbell and Mustard, assisted by Miss Becker, at the organ, got the theater cleared in a few minutes in an orderly but hurried fashion. Campbell and Mustard then enjoyed the sight of seeing their brand new pastel decorations jostled about by the fire on one side and firemen on the other. Following the completion of $1,000 damage the theater was left along and two days of strenuous labor made it possible for the theater to reopen with smiling managers and all. J. Warren Kerrigan appears at the Blue Mouse in person Friday and Saturday, April 27 and 28. Mr. Mustard's son is named after Mr. Kerrigan, and at one time appeared in a feature with the former Universal star.

Both Twins See Vitagraph Feature.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Womanhood," the Greater Vitagraph's latest super-feature, began week runs at the Strand, St. Paul, and the Lyric, Minneapolis, Sunday, April 22, to a good business. In both cities a lavish advertising campaign preceded the feature, and in Minneapolis a special parade of young ladies in armor and more young ladies who are assisting in recruiting for the navy, was a feature.

Manager Keough's Patriotic Benefit.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager James A. Keough has donated the use of the Strand theater here for a benefit midnight show for Colonel Schall's volunteer regiment Friday, April 27. "The Battle of Gettysburg," an Ince feature, has been selected as the feature picture for the show by courtesy of E. Oddy Freedman. G. C. and J. L. Johnson are in charge of the entertainment.

Big New Organ Goes Into the Unique.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The New Unique on Hennepin avenue will install a new $25,000 pipe organ as soon as it arrives from an Eastern factory. The New Unique's second week began with Dorthy Gish in "Her Official Fathers," and to date capacity business has been the rule at the theater.

New Minnesota State License Law.

St. Paul, Minn.—A bill requiring moving picture theaters to secure a state license through the fire marshal's offices and to be inspected by the fire marshal, has been passed by the Minnesota Legislature and signed by Governor Burnquist. The state license fee is to be $65 per annum, but will not interfere with licenses and regulations now controlled by cities.

Giving Film Rialto the Up and Down.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Fred S. Meyer, he with musical temperament and Chaplin mustache, was host to a few film men and Tom Hamlin and wife at his domicile Saturday evening and Sunday morning last. Fred has not said much about the gathering, but according to reports coming indirectly from Mons. Hamlin, F. S. M, is just as good a host as he is a film magget.

Mannie Gotlieb, manager of the Favorite exchange, came to work last Thursday afternoon with a new hat. Not that there is anything startling about his buying a new hat, for film men are liable to do most anything, but the millinery was what Mannie pointed to when we inquired, "What's new?" Later we found from other sources that he had booked "The Libertine" in the New Garden, Minneapolis, for a showing beginning Sunday, April 29.

Manager R. C. Fox, of the Artcraft, has booked Doug Fairbanks' first Artcraft release in the new Garrick for a week's run, and George M. Cohan's "Broadway Jones" in the Garrick's next door rival, the Strand, for a week.

Since warm weather has been threatened, Myron T. Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange (thank you), has reduced his avoirdupois sixteen full fledged ounces. Mike has threatened to train down to 250 this summer.

Manager Lee A. Horn, of the Selznick exchange, has secured the services of Joe Gardner, road salesman, and Lyle Losie, shipper and booker, also bowler and baseball player. Lee has also kept an extra stenographer busy getting out his correspondence.

Manager Edward A. Westcott, of the Westcott Film corporation, opened the Shubert Minneapolis theater as a film house Sunday, April 22, with "The Masque of Life," his own state rights feature. The light opera company which has held the boards at the Shubert for several months, proved too light, and silent drama has replaced it.

Manager Otto N. Davies, of the Merto exchange, was still in Gotham, making it necessary for us to endure the suspense another week.

Manager C. L. Peavey has booked Fatty Arbuckle's first Paramount comedy in five different cities for two first runs. In Minneapolis, the Strand, and a Ruben & Finkelstein theater will show "The Butcher Boy" simultaneously, and in St. Paul, the Strand and the Blue Mouse will do likewise.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Harry Graham, of the K-E-S-E exchange, has received word from George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay company, that he will be in Minneapolis May 3 for the exhibitors' grand ball.

Dallas, Texas.—The Jefferson theater, Dallas has given its noon hour, during which time no shows are in progress, over to Rev. George W. Truett, for twenty years pastor of the First Baptist Church. The house is filled to its capacity each day. In this way the amusement people are showing a broad-minded spirit of co-operation with the different parts of the public. It is probable that nowhere in Texas are there more public-spirited individuals in the business than in Dallas.

W. D. Nevills, proprietor of the Washington theater, has made a change in policy. He now books leading features and runs them for a week.

This theater has had a varied experience during the past three or four years, being used at various times for musical comedy and moving pictures under many different managements.

Star in Person Attracts Crowds.

Oakland, Cal.—Mary Miles Minter, the diminutive Mutual star, who has been working for several weeks in the vicinity of San Francisco, appeared in person at the new Oakland T. & D. theater on April 19. More than four thousand people were in the theater when she appeared upon the stage, the lobby, inclines and rest rooms being crowded, with fully two thousand persons on the outside vainly seeking admission. A week before she appeared at the Tivoli opera house in San Francisco and the manner in which people turned out to see her there induced the management to attempt to have her appear at the Oakland house.

Public Policy Film Resolution

Senate and Assembly in California Pass Concurrent Resolution to Suppress Film Tending to Foster Ill Feeling Between This Country and Friendly Nations—Calls on Local Authorities to Act.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—The agitation against the exhibition of films of an alleged unpatriotic character that has broken out in certain quarters has led the State Assembly to pass a concurrent resolution introduced by Assemblyman Clarence Morris, of San Francisco, as follows:

"Resolved by the Assemby, the Senate concurring, than any motion picture or other public exhibition which tends in any manner to promote race hatred or to foster ill-feeling or animosity between the people of the United States and any friendly foreign nation is against public policy, particularly when this country is engaged in war, and that all such exhibitions or pictures should be suppressed; and be it further

"Resolved, that this Legislature urges the duly qualified authorities in every part of California to exercise the utmost vigilance to prevent such exhibitions to the end that our international relationships may not be complicated by selfish or vicious appeals to prejudice."

The State Assembly has also passed a measure prohibiting cruelty to animals for the purpose of making moving pictures, and another making it a misdemeanor to sell theater tickets after the seats in a house are all occupied. These will now be considered by the Senate.

Prominent Exhibitor Marries.

San Francisco, Cal.—Aaron Goldberg, the popular manager of the Peerless theater on Third street, was married on April 17th to Miss Rita Salomon of this city. The couple originally planned to go to Honolulu on their honeymoon, but the reports of German submarines lurking outside the Heads, and the general air of uncertainty connected with ocean travel, caused them to change their minds, and instead they are to be found "somewhere" in the Grand Canyon.

Theater Exchange Quite Busy.

Mr. Luntz is planning to make a trip shortly through the San Joaquin Valley.

Equips Traveling Show.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Atlas Educational Film Company recently shipped a complete traveling outfit to Guatemala. The shipment not only included projection machines, lighting equipment and a screen, but a 100-ft. tent, and five hundred chairs as well. The owners plan to travel over Central and South America. This concern has also furnished a Universal camera, with a large amount of extra equipment, to the department of entomology of the University of California at Berkeley.

New Booster for Paramount.

San Francisco, Cal.—A lusty booster for Paramount service has been added to the household of C. M. Hill, who has charge of the San Francisco branch of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, in the form of a seven and a half pound boy. He made a careful inspection of the local exchange, and complimented manager William Citron on its arrangement and on the excellent showing being made by this branch. Harry Leonhardt, western division manager, has also been here, and will leave for New York after a few days stay at Los Angeles.

Full Pathe Show at Strand.

San Francisco, Cal.—A full Pathe show has been booked by the Strand theater for an early presentation, this consisting of a feature, a comedy and a Pathe news. Fred Rodrigues, for several years with the local Pathe exchange, is back with this concern after having been with the Mutual for a time, and will cover the territory from San Francisco south.

K-E-S-E Manager Resigns.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. O. Edmonds, who has charge of the Pacific Coast interests of George Kleine and the K-E-S-E Service for the past year, has tendered his resignation, to take effect at as early a date as possible. He plans to take a much needed rest and may then enter some branch of the film business on his own account. Harry Scott, the personal representative of Mr. Kleine, is now here and will select a successor to Mr. Edmonds.

Eastern Oregon Is Prospering

Moving Picture Exhibitors in Oregon's Wheat Belt Are Rejoicing in Good Times —New Theater for Weiser, Idaho—Several Changes in the Territory—General News Notes of the Film Business.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—News from the territory east of the Cascade Mountains indicates that exhibitors there are not suffering any war-time depression such as is reported elsewhere. This is accounted for by the fact that this district is one of the big wheat belts of the West, where unsowed grain has already been contracted for.

At Prinville, Ore., Van D. Brink, operating the Lyric theater, is reported to be doing excellent business. At La Grande, Myers & Leiter are running the Arcade and Colonial with fine success. At Baker, Joe Cotter is reported as about to open one of the houses that has been closed.

At Weiser, Idaho, A. C. Gordon is building a new theater that will be modern throughout. Mr. Gordon now conducts a picture theater in Weiser.

A. Bettingen, who owns the Grand and Pastime theaters at The Dalles, Ore., and who recently suffered a loss by fire, is again doing business. D. E. Flory has taken over the theater at Fossil, Ore.

Some War Scenes Censored.

Portland, Ore.—The municipal censor board has ruled that war scenes that are horrible or gruesome shall be eliminated. The purpose of this order is to expurgate from films scenes that might deter recruiting. Information came to the censors indirectly that the local recruiting office was in accord with a ruling of this kind.

J. P. Cotter at the Helm.

Baker, Ore.—J. P. Cotter, of the firm of Haish & Cotter, has taken over the entire management of the Majestic Amusement Enterprises, which controls the theatrical situation here. The company operates the Grand and Orpheum theaters.

M. B. Haish, the retiring member of the firm, will move to Spokane. Mr. Haish is a vice president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon.

War and Weather Hurt.

Portland, Ore.—Some of the Portland exchanges are complaining that business has been at a standstill during the past few weeks. They blame the war and the bad weather which has prevailed in the Pacific Northwest. One exchange says that five small town theaters among its customers have closed, temporarily at least.

A. S. Kirkpatrick Goes East.

Portland, Ore.—A. S. Kirkpatrick, manager for Mutual, made a hurried trip to Omaha upon receipt of the news that his mother had died there. George E. Jackson, traveling representative, served as acting manager in his absence. T. C. Malcolm, supervisor of exchanges, was a recent visitor from Los Angeles.

Congratulations in Order.

Portland, Ore.—C. H. Johnston, of the Reliable Film Service, became the happy father of a baby girl April 20. Of course, he bet it would be a boy, says W. A. Stone, his partner, so Stone gets the cigars.

Long Runs Popular in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—The popularity of features in Portland and of the big theaters that run them is indicated by the schedule of releases that have and will be shown at the People's. "The Poor Little Rich Girl" ran 10 days; "Broadway Jones," 8 days; Clara Kimball Young, 7 days; the first new Fairbanks picture is booked for 10 days: "Mothers of France," 10 days; "Romance of the Redwoods," 10 days. Twenty-four days' second run is scheduled for the Star, the other People's Amusement company's downtown house.

Oregon Briefs.

Portland, Ore.—Herbert Griffin, representing the Nicholas Power Company, was a recent visitor, calling on the supply men.

L. J. Schlaiffer was in Portland with "Idle Wives" and "The Unborn." The last-named picture was passed after a reviewing by the censors and will show at the Globe theater.

Frank Steffy, the new manager for K-E-S-E in Seattle, made his first business trip to Portland April 20.

On account of the war the demand for news pictures has increased and the local Pathe office is arranging to put an extra print of its news film in the territory.

George Hunt, who conducts the Page theater, Medford, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland.

Pendleton, Ore.—The Temple theater has closed.

Stayton, Ore.—Francis X. Hoereth has acquired the lease on the Stayton theater from Frank Taylor.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

A Formidable Line-Up of Pictures.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater, the Spokane home of Fine Arts pictures since the first was released, has lined up a series of attractions that on paper at least is the most formidable any Spokane theater has offered.

Mary Pickford is to transfer her Spokane home from the Clemmer theater to the Liberty with the contracting by Manager Ruffner for the entire Artcraft program. Her first picture at the Liberty will be "A Poor Little Rich Girl," and this will be followed by "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Her original Artcraft pictures, "Less Than the Dust" and "The Pride of the Clan," were shown at the Clemmer.

Douglas Fairbanks is now an Artcraft player and will continue to entertain exclusively at the Liberty, as in the past. His first picture made by his own company, "In Again—Out Again," is due for early presentation locally. This will be followed by his second Artcraft picture, "A Regular Guy."

George M. Cohan makes his first and only screen appearance, so he says, in the Artcraft pictures, in "Broadway Jones," also due for early showing. He is said to receive $150,000 for this production alone, which means, as in the case of all Artcraft pictures, 25-cent admission.

The Liberty also will show the first-run offering of the Selznick studios, several of which already have been presented here. Next week Alla Nazimova will be shown in "War Brides." Others to follow are Clara Kimball Young in "The Price She Paid" and "The Easiest Way," and Helen Ware in "The Garden of Allah." Then, of course, there is the Fox special release, "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annetta Kellermann.

In addition to these more or less special offerings the Liberty retains control of the Mack Sennett Keystone comedies, the entire Triangle programs and the Hearst-Pathe News. To establish undoubted proof that he has the strongest lineup of big attractions announced at one time by one theater in local history, Manager Ruffner concludes his list with a return engagement of "Intolerance" and the first showings in Spokane of "The Crisis" by Winston Churchill, and "The Barrier," by Rex Beach, all of which Manager Ruffner says will be seen at the Liberty between now and then.

Frank Monroe, organist at the Liberty theater, has established himself in prime favor with Liberty theater patrons. He presides over the big Wurtlitzer Hope-Jones orchestra and has demonstrated a happy "knack" in "playing pictures," which is no easy task. He has been in this line of musical endeavor for ten years and has evolved an unusually effective method of correctly interpreting the action on the screen on the instrument.

No Sunday Shows in Pullman.

Pullman, Wash.—The fate of the proposed Sunday moving pictures was definitely sealed, April 4, when the city Council, after a canvass of the signatures on the petitions and remonstrances, voted unanimously to refuse the petition of the moving picture managers for permission to open their establishments Sunday afternoons. A check of the petitions and remonstrations with the registration books showed that 295 of the petitioners are registered voters, while 435 of the remonstrators are eligible to vote.

8109 Is Record for a Sunday's Business.

Spokane, Wash.—The submarine pictures at the Liberty theater, based on Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," promises to establish a new house record both as to attendance and admission receipts. Sunday's business was the greatest in the history of the theater, 8,109 admissions.

This is more than capacity at every show from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m., the fact being explained by the large number of purchasers of standing room. Throughout the day people stood four deep at the back of the theater to witness the pictures. Monday's business was heavier than the usual Saturday, and Tuesday saw no noticeable dropping off.

MORE IOWA NOTES.

A. H. Blank Tells of New Omaha House

Des Moines, Ia.—A. H. Blank, of this city, stockholder and officer in the Triangle, associated with the Selznick enterprises, and owner of a string of houses over Iowa and in Omaha, is announcing the building of a new theater in Omaha, by the Strand Amusement Company, of which he is the president. This new theater will seat 3,000 and will be one of the best theaters in the country. It will be located on the northeast corner of Fifteenth and Douglas. The Strand Amusement Company will continue to operate the Strand theater. Owing to this business venture, Blank will be in Omaha most of the time for the next three months.

L. A. Todd Is Manager of General Office.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Frank L. Hudson, for the past year manager of the Seattle General office, left this week for the East, where he will make other connections in the film field. Mr. Hudson's exhibitor and exchange friends in this territory are hoping that he will eventually decide that the Seattle climate is better for his health than that of the East. L. A. Todd, recently manager of the Portland General office, which has just been closed, has taken charge of the Seattle office. Mr. Todd is acquainted with the Washington section of his territory as well as the Oregon section, for he spent about six years in Spokane, first with the Independent Western film exchange and then with General.

Arbuckle in "The Butcher Boy" at Coliseum.

Seattle, Wash.—The Coliseum theater will open Sunday, April 22, with "The Butcher Boy," advertising the comedy as the feature of the program. E. D. Tate, the manager, has also announced that he will present statuettes of the starring comedian, Fatty Arbuckle, to the first six who buy tickets after the box office is opened at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Tate is constantly busy inventing pleasant surprises for his audiences. Last week, on the evening of the Coliseum's weekly fashion show, when the house was full, as is usual on that night, a very pretty young girl came out on the stage and sang in a beautiful soprano voice a selection from "Madame Butterfly." In answer to the applause, which followed, she returned to the stage and doffed her wig, revealing the fact that "she" was a boy. This 17-year-old "he-soprano" continued singing for several days at the Coliseum, and has been the talk of the town ever since.

H. G. Rosebaum Goes to Philadelphia Artcraft.

Seattle, Wash.—The many friends which H. G. Rosebaum has made during the year he has spent as an exchange manager in Seattle are sorry for themselves, but glad for Mr. Rosebaum, on account of his promotion this week to the managership of the larger territory of the Philadelphia office. Mr. Rosebaum came from the East a year ago to open up Triangle's office in this city, and when Artcraft opened its Seattle office last November, they paid his price to get him. The work of opening new offices and establishing a new service in the territory has been well done by Mr. Rosebaum, but he has had to go at it hard, and everybody in the picture business in Seattle feels that he deserves this concrete acknowledgment of his efforts.

Mr. Kane says that great strides have been made in the Western territory since the formation of the Artcraft corporation, and that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan are gaining in popularity all the time. At the People's theater in Portland, he stated, Mary Pickford played to 58,000 people in ten days. He gives C. W. Meighan, the manager of that theater, the credit of being one of the livest exhibitors on the entire Pacific coast, saying that he is creating a stir by the very unusual way he is putting pictures over.

Other Seattle Exchange Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—The Paramount exchange has added to its office force Miss Sue Graves, formerly with Mutual. F. L. Fountain announces that the bookings on the new Arbuckle comedies are being made so fast that it taxes the force to take care of them. They have been booked by the Greater Theaters company for the Coliseum, Seattle, the Columbia, Portland, and for their Spokane and Butte houses.

H. B. Perry, formerly cashier in the Seattle "World" office, has been made salesman for the Washington territory, and C. Hultren, formerly with Paramount in Seattle for two and one-half years, is now cashier.

"Mothers of France" was given its premier showing in the People's theater at Portland recently.

C. S. Alderman and John S. Nelson are new salesmen out of the Seattle Mutual office. Mr. Alderman was formerly salesman for General in the Portland territory. He will have the territory west of the Cascade mountains, while Mr. Nelson will work that east of the mountains. The latter was formerly salesman for Universal out of Spokane.

Fred C. Quimby, Coast supervisor for Pathe, left Seattle this week on a tour of his entire territory.

Dan Donnelan has been transferred from the Seattle territory by Triangle to handle the sales of the McClure pictures in Denver.

Waring & Frank announce the arrival of a carload of new Motiograph machines, and that orders are already coming in for them.

British Columbia Notes on the Film Trade

In Vancouver There Is a Noticeable Slackening in the Popular Appeal of War Films—Only Men Like Them Still—Some Big Films Coming.

VANCOUVER, WASH.—War film and battle pictures are losing their large drawing power in this city as proved by a comparison with the attendance at the "Battle of the Somme," "Fighting With the Allies," "Advance of the Turks" and Captain Thompson's "War as it Really Is."

Each picture in the order of its showing showed a decrease in pulling power out of proportion to the advertising and quality of the pictures.

The explanation as outlined by the different local exhibitors would make it appear that this is due to the expectations aroused in the minds of the public that they would see actual fighting in each case or that the public have lost interest in this kind of picture and prefer subjects that supply entertainment and amusement only.

"War as it Really Is," as photographed by Captain Leslie Thompson, was shown at the Rex theater here recently. The original picture was seven reels, but it was cut down to five for this showing and one of the noticeable features of the audiences that saw this picture was the fact that it was mostly men who composed them. This picture is controlled in this territory by the Regal films.

Lieutenant Dwyer gave a private showing of the second instalment of "Canada's Fighting Forces" at one of the local theaters a few days ago, and this picture, which is part educational, will no doubt be booked here shortly. He is now in Victoria arranging bookings.

"Mothers of France" Coming.

Vancouver, Wash.—Mr. Milligan, of Edmonton, is here to book the Sarah Bernhardt picture, "Mothers of France," and the film will arrive in a couple of weeks from Edmonton, as rights to this territory are owned by an Edmonton concern. (This is a wonderful picture and has awakened the highest kind of appreciation in New York.)

Films and Film Men Hereabouts.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Triangle feature, "Not My Sister," starring Bessie Barriscale, and the Famous Players' play, "Sapho," starring Pauline Frederick, have been rejected by the censor for British Columbia.

The Commercial Travelers' big War Dance carnival, which will be held here shortly, and which every Vancouverite is boosting, has given A. D. Kean, of Kean's Canada films, an opportunity to photograph the parades arranged to show the contestants for the Queen of the Carnival. Hector Quagliotti, of the Colonial, is showing these pictures at his theater, with a Bluebird feature.

Charlie Chaplin, in "The Cure," is drawing huge crowds at the Rex theater, in spite of the fact that the weather conditions are bad.

W. P. Dewees, manager of the Rex theater, and general manager of the National Film Service, Ltd., has left for an extended trip through Western Canada and the East. He announced before leaving that Clara Kimball Young, in "The Price She Paid," and Mary Pickford, in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," were booked to show at the Rex during the next few weeks.

"The Battlecry of Peace" is coming to Vancouver for a return engagement shortly. This picture is now showing through Alberta and Saskatchewan with much success.

KALEM.

THE TRAPPING OF TWO-BIT TUTTLE (An Episode of "The American Girl").—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); "Two-Bit" Tuttle (P. E. Bradbury); Andreas (Edward Clisbee); Andreas' wife (Mrs. Saunders); The Sheriff (Hart Hoxie).

Roger King, the millionaire owner of San Remo Ranch, his daughter Madge, and their superintendent, Larry Kerwin, are surprised to see a bedraggled man rush into their house and cry frantically: "I didn't do it. I tell you, I didn't do it!" When they have quieted him down, he says he is Andreas, a homesteader, who peddles milk, and that when he went to the cabin of old Curtis, the hermit, he found him murdered. In his fright he spilt the can of milk, and tracing him by means of this clue, the sheriff and his deputy were now on his track. Madge promises to investigate, and after Andreas is placed in custody by the sheriff she leaves for Panther Hollow, where the old hermit lives, with Larry Kerwin.

In the hermit's cabin Madge finds a hammer with blood-stained finger prints on it, and ascertains that the man who killed Curtis was left handed. She also finds a quantity of rice split on the floor, and, missing the rice sack, deduces that the murderer carried away in the rice sack what he stole.

After locking Andreas in the jail, the sheriff drops in the saloon for a drink. He sits at a table with "Two-Bit" Tuttle, a former cowpuncher. While drinking, he notices that Tuttle, in playing cards, deals with his left hand, and that he puts his winnings into a rice sack. Later, when Madge telephones her discoveries to the sheriff, he recalls the scene in the saloon and tells Madge and Larry to come to town immediately.

A trap is set for Tuttle. While Madge watches at the window, Larry and the sheriff enter the saloon and engage Tuttle in a card game. Larry mentions the murder at Panther Hollow and Tuttle gradually breaks down as the sheriff describes his idea of how the crime was committed. When the sheriff places the blood-stained hammer at Tuttle's elbow, Tuttle dashes out of the saloon.

Madge, Larry and the sheriff pursue him, and trap "Two-Bit" Tuttle at the cabin of Andreas, where he confesses how he committed the crime. Andreas, released from jail and reunited to his wife and children, thanks Madge King for her clever work.

BANDITS, BEWARE (Ham & Bud).—Ham and Bud run bang into romance of the most "hair-raising" type. They get into all sorts of trouble and Ham makes a hit with the wealthy man's daughter. The father and his daughter are enjoying a spin in their motor and are held up by a "bad man." Ham and Bud come to the rescue. They recompense themselves by confiscating the wealthy one's baggage and are inspecting the contents when the "bad-man" appears and relieves them of it all.

They in turn take the bandits outfit as he is making a change leaving him to navigate a la Adam. Ham goes to the nearest house to notify the occupants of the wealthy man's injury. He meets with a "dream" who turns out to be the wealthy man's daughter. While making love to the "new find," the vacuum sweeper, left by the maid, devours the "fair one's" jewelry which she has been polishing. When the loss is discovered, great excitement prevails. During the height of the agony, the "bad man" appears and shoots up the place. He is finally locked in the refrigerator, the vacuum cleaner gives up the jewels, the wealthy one returns, "Bud" shows up and all is serene and peaceful.

FLAMES OF TREACHERY (May 10).—The cast: James Ford (Clyde Benson); Ruth Chalmers (Lois Wilson); M. Hatton (Lee Hill). Written by Crawley and Maude. Produced by Donald McDonald.

James Ford, the Western representative of a big concern, receives word that M. Hatton, a clerk is coming and that he shall be given a desk. Ford, who has been carrying on some crooked work, treats the new clerk with scant courtesy.

Working in the office is Ruth Chalmers, and Ford makes love to her. One day she notices Ford pouring some liquid over the papers in the waste basket. He then sends them all from the room. Ruth, returning, notices smoke coming from the keyhole and sends in an alarm. When the men rush into the place it is found that some of the books have been destroyed.

Ruth tells Hatton about the liquid. That night Ford asks Ruth to work; she dares not refuse. Hatton comes back to the office to find Ruth fighting for her honor. Ford is angry, and discharges Ruth, telling Hatton that the head office will take care of him. Taking some marked bills from the safe, he places them in Hatton's desk and then brings the officers to arrest him. Hatton then causes the arrest of Ford, for Hatton is the head of the concern and has found the evidence of fraud that they sought.

THE GIRL IN THE GARRET (Two Parts—May 11).—The cast: Cynthia (Molly Malone); Harvey (Jack Nelson); Stephen (George Berrell); Grace (Annette De Foe); Mrs. Dunning (Nanine Wright); Norah (Anna Dodge); Mrs. Loring (Countess Du Cello). Scenario by Douglas Bronson. Produced by Geo. Cochrane.

Stephen is determined that his daughter, Cynthia, shall have a good education, and so sends her to the city to a relative of his, Mrs. Loring. The Lorings are in financial difficulties, and are trying especially hard to make a good showing in the hope that the daughter, Grace, will capture the wealthy Harvey Dunning. Cynthia takes up her abode with the Lorings, and they engage a broken-down tutor for the girl. Norah, the cook, takes an interest in Cynthia.

One day Cynthia takes Harvey's picture from the sitting-room mantel to her room. She admires it and playfully inscribes one of her pictures to Harvey. As he is leaving the house that day she drops it from the attic window. He is interested and inquires from Grace who it might be. As gracefully as she can in her anger, Grace tells him. She and her mother rush into Cynthia's room, where they find her looking at Harvey's picture. Here is a new danger, and they determine to send her to a cheap boarding house.

Cynthia receives a letter from her father stating that the wheat crop has been poor, but that he has sent her aunt the additional money she demanded. Cynthia realizes that her father is being swindled, and determines to win her own way. She answers an advertisement for a companion to Mrs. Dunning, Harvey's invalid mother.

Norah meantime has written Stephen of the treatment Cynthia is receiving, and he comes on to investigate. Cynthia is gone, and Mrs. Loring and Grace do not know where she is. Norah takes Stephen to Cynthia and Mrs. Dunning persuades him to leave the girl with her for a while.

A few days later Harvey returns from a trip, and the two young people are surprised at finding each other. The friendship ripens into love, and they spend their honeymoon at Stephen's farm, where Norah is now installed as housekeeper.

ONE WILD NIGHT (Two Parts—May 12).—The cast: "Happy" ("Kewpie" Moran); "Swifty" (Ray Hanford); "Shorty" (Sam Appel); "Bogs" (Charley Perley); "Babe" (Billy Human); Rose (Gipsy Hart); Reggie (Kingsley Benedict); Maid (Yvette Mitchell). Written by W. B. Pearson. Produced by Henry McRae.

Five cowboys—"Happy," "Swifty," "Bogs," "Babe" and "Shorty"—come to the city with a train load of war horses. Having seen the town, they retire to a park bench, where a vision of the open ranch rises before them. They take up a collection in "Happy's" hat, which proves to be but a collection of junk.

Rose Seeley is a young woman whose one aim in life is entertaining. One day Reginald Bleak, a suitor with more money than brains, disappoints her by being unable to secure the entertainers for the party Rose is to give, which he had promised. Rose, put out, refuses to talk to Reggie and goes for a drive in the park. She discovers the five gloomy cowboys on the bench and decides to find out if they are real. She lashes her spirited horses, then throws down the lines and yells for help. "Happy" lines up his men beside the road, then runs beside the team where the road turns in a circle. As the horses turn, the other four boys rush out and stop them. "Happy" asks Rose if she is hurt and she tells the boys that she let the horses run just for excitement. She invites them to ride with her, and they all climb in.

Reggie is horrified at the sight of the boys, and they in turn are amused at him. He speaks to Rose, who tells him that she intends to have the boys remain to entertain her guests. The cowboys object to staying, but Rose promises them tickets home, and they agree to see the thing through. She takes their guns away from them and has them wait in the library until the guests arrive.

"Happy" sees two crooks on the lawn. He sends "Bogs" out the back way to see what they are doing. "Bogs" sees them crawling up a pillar of the porch. He reports to the boys. "Bogs" goes up the back stairs and sees the crooks taking jewels from the dresser. He starts a fight and the other boys come to his aid. They all come tumbling down the stairs. "Happy" turns the jewels over to Rose, and tells "Bogs" to phone for a cop. Rose explains that the incident was a novel entertainment to surprise her friends, because she was a daughter of Arizona and is going back home.

CAPTAIN MARJORIE'S ADVENTURE (Two Parts—May 13).—Little Marjorie is the darling of the regiment, and her playmates are the men of the fort. The fort is at the outpost of civilization, and the Indians in the neighborhood are restless. Indian rustlers are reported to be stealing cattle, and a detachment of cavalry leaves the fort to recover the stolen animals. In an encounter with the redmen, the chief's son is slain. He is carried home to the camp by the braves, and the chief swears vengeance on the soldiers.

The men at the fort are preparing to entertain the men of Ward's Cavalry who are coming to visit them. Marjorie begs one of the men to take her for a ride on his horse, and he does so. The waiting Indians attack the man, who is riding with only one comrade, from ambush, and kidnap the child. She is carried off to the camp, and the chief orders that she be held for ransom. She determines to try to escape, and while the tribe is celebrating their declaration of war she makes her way to the horse of the dead trooper and tries to climb into the saddle. She cannot manage it, and is recaptured by the Indians. They condemn her to be scalped.

In the meantime the trooper who was riding with Marjorie and the other soldier, though badly wounded, manages to make his way to the high-road. The visiting cavalry arrives, and the men find him lying in the road. They take him back to the fort, where he tells his story. The preparations for entertaining the visitors are abandoned, and the men are ordered out to rescue the little girl.

A fight between the Indians and the Americans takes place. The white troops are hard pressed, but are relieved in time by the arrival of reinforcements. Marjorie is restored to her parents, to the joy of the whole regiment.

TOM'S TRAMPING TROUPE (Two Parts—May 9).—The cast: The Boarding House Lady (Merta Sterling); Her Husband (Phil Dunham); Little Eva (Lucille Hutton); Uncle Tom (Harry Lorraine); Simon Legree (Charles Insley). Directed by J. G. Howe, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone.

The tramping troupers arrive at Punkville Centre, and put up at the boarding house, which is run by the strong-minded landlady and her henpecked husband, Phil. He is maid-of-all-work, and she takes the money. He is much attracted by the actress who plays Little Eva, and Merta is jealous.

That night they are to give a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Phil is head cook and bottle-washer at the theater too, and has to be property man, curtain man, stage manager, ticket taker and everything else but actor. It is he who brings on the soap boxes which do duty as cakes of ice in the river. It is he who barks like hounds on the trail, and who has to shove on the cardboard dogs which pursue Eliza. He has to hurry aloft to drop snow on the sad scene.

Little Eva appears fascinatingly gowned in a short fluffy frock and a big hair ribbon. Phil can't resist her, and neglects his manifold duties to talk to her. She begins to play tag with him, and chases him into the midst of Uncle Tom's most touching scene. Merta gets wild. She leaves the audience and is about to jump over the footlights to get after Phil.

It is time for Eva to die, but she is 'way up above the stage, eating candy with Phil. Merta jumps on the stage, and hunts for Phil. She interferes considerably with the action, but when Eva cannot be found, the actor who played Eliza grabs Merta, puts a nightgown over her head, and tells her to go on and die. Legree tries to give her the words, but she is struck with stage fright. She is yanked up into heaven, where she promptly discovers Eva and Phil. In their surprise the men let her fall, and she clutches Phil. They land on the stage together, while Eva laughs at them. This is too much. The audience gives chase and the Tramping Troupe is run out of town.

ETERNAL LOVE. (Five Parts—May 7).—The cast: Paul Dachette (Douglas Gerrard); Cou-Cou (George Gebhart); Francois Gautier (Edward Clark); M. Blanc (Dan Duffy); Mignon (Ruth Clifford); Madame Blanc (Miss Marvin); Mimi (Myrtle Reeves). Story and scenario by E. M. Ingleton. Produced by Douglas Gerrard.

Paul, with his boon companions of the Latin Quarter, is celebrating the announcement of the subject for the Gautier Art Student Prize Competition. It is to be "A Message of Spring."

He goes to Brittany seeking inspiration and finds it in the person of Mignon, an orphan, who consents to pose for him. They fall in love, and when he leaves with his picture completed, he gives her a ring, and says that he will always be true to her.

Paul's picture wins the prize, and he forgets all about Mignon. One day, Cou-Cou, who is disappointed at not winning the prize, is knocked over in the street by an auto and injured. A reporter, in the confusion, takes the name of Paul, and a notice of his accident is published in the papers. Far away in Brittany, Mignon reads it, and determines to make her way to Paris to find her lover. She has not money enough for the journey, but sets out bravely to walk it.

Arriving in Paris, she falls from weakness and hunger, on the doorstep of Monsieur Blanc, a kind-hearted baker, who has his shop not far from Paul's studio. Monsieur Blanc and his wife are good to the girl, who tells them her story. They try to discourage her going to Paul, as they have heard of his reputation for wildness, but she insists upon seeking him out.

At his studio a supper party is in progress. Paul is seated with Mimi, a pretty model, on one side and Fifi on the other. Mignon opens the door and stands transfixed at the sight she sees. She runs from the room and never stops until she faints at the baker shop. Paul has seen her, and rushes out to search for her, but in vain.

The baker and his wife wish to keep Mignon, but she leaves the ring and a note for Paul in her wooden shoes, and goes out to throw herself in the river. She is about to cast herself into the water, when Francois Gautier, the famous painter and donator of the prize, passes. He restrains her, and listens to her sad story. When she has told it, he offers to take her into his house and give her shelter. She accepts, and becomes almost a daughter to him. He dies suddenly, and she finds herself his heiress. She devotes her life to the saving of outcast women.

Paul hears of her inheritance and goes to the Gautier mansion, begging her to see him. At first she will not receive him, but at last she does, only to tell him that her love for him is dead. In despair he wanders all night in a blinding rainstorm, and is found the next morning more dead than alive on a park bench. He is ill and Cou-Cou determines to send for Mignon. She consents, and at his bedside she forgives him and their troth is plighted.

GOLD SEAL.

THE GRIP OF LOVE (Three Parts—May 8).—The cast: Lester Jordon (Allen Holubar); Ruth Overholt (Louise Lovely); Dad Burbidge (Alfred Allen); Clem Babbit (Ed Brady); Anna Lou (Maud Emery); Asa Larkin (H. B. Edmondson); Bud Larkin ("Buster" Emmons).

Lester Jordon, having lived for pleasure, is now under the care of Dr. Spencer, who insists that he go back to nature for a while and spend a few months in Tennessee, where the doctor has an old shack. Lester decides to go.

The school trustees employ a teacher for the Sumach Cross Roads School. While Ruth Overholt is putting a letter, written by one of the men, in her suitcase, she accidentally drops some articles, among them being a man's picture. The trustee recognizes the man as Andy Crandall, the most hated man in Tennessee. Ruth and Lester arrive together, but miss the daily stage. They hire an auto to take them to the small town.

Dad Burbidge, postmaster, school trustee and sage of the Cross Roads, is impressed by Ruth and guides her to her little cabin. The women instinctively hate her, remarking that it doesn't look well for a girl to arrive with a strange man. Among the crowd are Clem Babbit and Anna Lou Dawley, his sweetheart. Clem is smitten with Ruth, and Anna Lou senses coming trouble, while Asa Larkin, infatuated with Anna Lou, secretly rejoices.

The men suspect that Lester is a Revenue Officer and want to get rid of him, but Dad persuades them to investigate before going to any extreme. Two small boys are sent to spy on Lester. They watch him unpack his suitcase and see a badge which he accidentally drops. In reality it is a marksmanship medal. The boys quickly report and the men are convinced. Clem steals the badge and shows it to Ruth; she assents when he asks if Lester might be an officer. The men are gathered together in Dad's store when Lester enters for his mail. Clem blocks his way, and a fight ensues. Lester easily thrashing Clem.

While walking in the woods, Anna Lou and Asa find Clem unconscious and conclude that Lester has shot him. The news spreads, Clem is carried to the town, and Lester, with a rope about his neck, is to be lynched. The evidence to these ignorant folks seems conclusive, for one shot in Lester's gun has been fired. Ruth is frantic, but helpless. The mountain people are now against her, for they have seen the picture of Andy Crandall and have been told by her that it is her grandfather.

Anna Lou tenderly bends over Clem, begging him to speak to her; soon he opens his eyes and, seeing her, murmurs that he must have shot himself while trying to kill a snake. She realizes the mistake that is being made, and rushes to the tree where Lester is about to be hanged. Lester is released, much to Asa's sorrow. With Ruth, he returns to civilization.

THE VOICE ON THE WIRE (Episode Nine, "A Stern Chase"—Two Parts—May 7).—The cast: Shirley (Ben Wilson); Polly (Neva Gerber); Cronin (Howard Crampton); Dr. Renolds (Jos. Girard); "Red" Warren (Francis MacDonald); Wayne (Willard Wayne); Dorian (Chas. Dorian). Produced by Stuart Paton.

When Shirley enters the crooks' apartment several crooks spring on him and a fight starts. Renolds, sneaking through the bushes with his gun in hand, hears Polly scream and runs in the direction from which came the cry. Outside the underground passageway he meets "Red" Warren, Taylor, Polly, four diplomats and Cummings. Polly is struggling and as Renolds comes toward them they knock him unconscious. Polly, apparently unconscious, is placed in an auto.

As Shirley fights with the crooks one of the revolvers is accidentally discharged and, hearing the report, a number of his men rush toward the house. A secret panel is swung open and Cummings with four other crooks enters, while Wayne and Dorian make their getaway.

Polly, having been feigning unconsciousness, sees that no one is watching her, and starts slowly to climb toward the driver's seat. As two of the diplomats dash off after Short she springs quickly to the seat, and when the Jap valet jumps on the running board, she throws him off. She then drives quickly away.

The policemen bring the crooks before Shirley that he may question them. Behind the panel, Wayne and Dorian listen to all that is said. When Cummings is about to tell who "The Voice on the Wire" is, being offered five thousand dollars by Shirley if he will do so, he is suddenly shot dead, and no one can discover from where came the shot. Wayne and Dorian, after firing the shot, make their escape through the secret passageway.

Bert Law whispers to Shirley that he will take the five thousand. He shows them the secret panel, and, leaving the other crooks under a guard, Shirley and Cronin are led through the underground passageway and arrive back in the upper room in time for Shirley to answer the phone and hear a voice tell him that Renolds knows too much; they have got him. James Walsh will die on the 26th, and they taunt Shirley, asking why doesn't he save Walsh? Law tells Shirley that none of the crooks knows who "The Voice on the Wire" is except "Red." Warren and his gang are headed for Washington.

Meantime, the crooks have taken Renolds in an auto and have left the place. Another auto, run by "Red," has followed Polly, and it is pursued by Short and a traffic policeman on a motorcycle. The remaining machine belonging to the policeman has been fixed by Dorian and Wayne so that it won't run. Polly is caught, and she and Renolds are carried onto a special train.

Short arrives just after the train has pulled out. Wayne and Dorian board the train as it leaves and the stationmaster tells Short it was a train for Washington, and hands him a note addressed to Shirley. Short phones Shirley, who tells him to read the note. It is a warning to them not to stop the train or to follow them; that Polly and Renolds are with them on the train. Instructing Short to order a special and to wait for them at the station, Shirley and his men jump into a car held up by a detective and rush to the station. As the train rushes along, Shirley receives a telegram signed by Laschlas which says this is the last warning.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 27 (May 8).—When Mutual releases this issue of Gaumont's "Tours Around the World" three interesting places will reach the screen. These are Pompeii as it looks after nineteen centuries under ground; Zurich, the leading city of Switzerland; and Mourom, an old Russian village.

There is such romance about the ruins of Pompeii that even the pictures recall the wonderful life of the first century A. D., which was covered under the lava and ashes of Vesuvius. The spectator enters through the Gate of Stabia, passing the ruins of many mansions, and comes at last to the ruins of the arena. On a wall still remain posters of a politician, and a notice of a contractor. Pictures of the home of Pompeii's wealthiest resident give a good understanding of the luxury of the period.

Zurich is noted for its picturesque Gothic architecture. The pictures show the newer portion of the city, which stretches up the slope of the Zurichberg. In the business section are many fine shops and stately public buildings. As the city is built upon both banks of the River Limmat, where it issues from Lake Zurich, the water life is notable. The boats which ply upon river and lake afford many remarkable views.

The village of Mourom, on the Oka River, was built in the reign of Ivan the Terrible. It gives spectators an excellent idea of the old Russia.

REEL LIFE NO. 54 (May 10).—This release of "Reel Life" has an interesting contribution to pictures of a city's care of its dependents. "Proteges of a Big City" takes the spectator for a visit to the home for feeble minded children, which is maintained by New York. It is interesting to note how advantage is taken of every opportunity for development. The power of the great cranes in our large locomotive works is shown by the ease with which a one hundred ton engine is picked up and carried about the shop. The picture shows the ease of operation of this monster appliance.

"Sleeping Bags for Soldiers" is a section which is extremely timely. It has been adopted for army use. Two together may be shaped into the form of a tent. It is also an excellent piece of baggage for the camper and automobile tourist.

Now that the great navies of the world are depending more and more upon oil for fuel, even the bed of the ocean is not free from the prospector's drill. This issue has pictures of the oil wells along the coast of California. These are situated well below the low water mark at some distance from the shore. The oil is pumped to large storage tanks ashore. There are also pictures of soldiers guarding the tanks.

Grape juice is such a refreshing drink that it is hard for one to believe it is only within the last twenty-five years it has been on the market. In less than a quarter of a century, however, it has developed into a big industry. Pictures of its manufacture form an interesting section of this reel.

JERRY'S PICNIC (May 10).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (George George); Bossie (Claire Alexander); Flossie (Ruby Hearst); Officer of the Law (Harry Archer). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry and his sweetheart, Bossie, a-picnicking go. With them go Hank and Flossie. Hank is the husband of Flossie, and naturally Hank feels aggrieved when Jerry attempts a flirtation with his (Hank's) wife. But not to be outdone, Hank opens his own battery of allurement on Bossie, which pleases Jerry not a bit. Jerry tells Hank that Bossie is to be his wife and that Hank must restrain himself. As they eat, Jerry's eyes light on the tabasco bottle. The tabasco goes into Hank's wine and thus into Hank. Whereupon Hank loses all control of himself and dashes in search of water to heal the "anguish" in his interior.

Hank believes he is on fire and the first spring he comes to invites him to seek "solace." Hank splashes and spouts like a whale. Bossie feels sorry for Hank and goes to him. Jerry breaks into tears. Flossie joins him, for her husband has been injured. The two mingle their tears as Bossie helps Hank in his suffering. The two are joined by Jerry and Flossie, and Jerry is kicked out of the way by Hank. Flossie and Hank leave and Bossie is left alone. But Flossie is without a coat and night is falling fast.

Thinking Bossie has gone home with Jerry and left her coat behind, Flossie puts it on. It effectually disguises her. Hank is all contrition now for having flirted with Bossie and takes Flossie in his arms, seeking forgiveness. Jerry sees and thinks it is Bossie who is receiving all the affection—for he sees Bossie's coat. He trails the pair—determined upon vengeance—into Hank's bungalow. He sees them in silhouette on the window shade and prepares to break into the house with crowbar and axe.

Meanwhile Bossie, waiting patiently for Jerry to come to her, has fallen asleep at the picnic grounds. She is found by a policeman, who proceeds to take her to Flossie's house. In the meantime Flossie has gone to sleep on the couch in her house. Thinking his sweetheart is Flossie, Jerry breaks into the house, takes her in his arms and is astounded when his dear burden screams. Hank dashes to his wife's rescue, but Flossie intervenes before serious harm can be done. At the critical moment Bossie and the officer arrive at the house, where all is explained.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS (Episode No. 4, "A Race for a Fortune"—Two parts—April 30). The cast: Helen Holmes (Helen Holmes); Morton Webb (Thomas G. Lingham); Wallace Burke (Leo D. Maloney); Steve Arnold (Paul C. Hurst); Homer Frost (William Buhler); Roy Wilson (William Brunton); Sam Lowenstein (Will Chapman); Lord Montrose (G. H. Wischussen); Lady Montrose (Florence Holmes); "Buck" Masters (F. L. Hemphill); Officer Tommy Marshall (W. A. Behrens).

Helen is reinstated in the good graces of General Superintendent Frost with "power to act." The young woman at once proceeds to put into effect her own ideas of how a secret service department ought to be run, but owing to the misgivings of Superintendent Frost that she may fail, he so complicates matters as to render the young sleuth's plans unavailing.

Frost is seized by the raiders as he starts out to aid Helen when he has intercepted fake information sent for the purpose of entrapping him. The old man is held prisoner until rescued later by Helen and Roy Wilson, private secretary to the superintendent.

The raiders seize Helen and in trying to escape with her on a tug to the open sea are pursued by a harbor patrol, whereupon they tie the young woman to a fifty-pound anchor and toss her overboard.

Helen sinks like a stone, but is able to loosen the knot and rise to the surface where she floats until discovered by the searchlight of a patrol boat and rescued.

The "Railroad Raiders" narrowly escape capture in the ending of the chapter, but they get away after a fight, leaving Helen in possession of information that seems certain to lead to their early arrest.

SIGNAL FILM CORP.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS (Chapter Five—"A Woman's Wit"—Two Parts—May 7).—Superintendent Frost, angered because Webb did not obey orders to watch the suspected freight car, discharges him and puts Burke in his place. When the heads of a railroad syndicate endeavoring to purchase the K. & W. arrive, Burke, in an effort to show worthiness of the new position, plans a fake robbery of their private car, and then later captures the men with the loot, betraying his co-conspirators.

The heads of the syndicate are left on the inspection car with the paymaster to inspect construction. Meanwhile Burke sends Helen Holmes on the train with money to pay some of the men. Burke notifies Buck Masters of the money sent and the time of its arrival. The raiders attack the paymaster and secure the money. Helen, seeing them, puts their automobile out of commission. They jump on a passenger train, overpower the engineer and, unhitching the engine, race away at top speed.

Helen, jumping into the inspection car, follows. She passes the engine and, reaching the switch, she sets it so the fleeing engine runs on a spur and crashes into a warehouse, demolishing it. The railroad employees who have followed Helen in another engine arrive in time to capture the thieves, and the money is turned over to Helen.

HEDDA GABLER (Powell—Five Parts—May 7).—The cast: Hedda Gabler (Nance O'Neil); George Tesman (Aubrey Beattie); Aunt Julia (Lillian Paige); Eilert Lovborg (Einar Linden); Mrs. Thea Elvsted (Ruth Byron); Judge Brack (Alfred Hickman); Mlle. Diana (Edith Campbell Walker).

George Tesman and his wife, "Hedda Gabler," have just returned from their honeymoon. Left alone, Hedda fondles her pistols, for which she has an uncanny affection.

Married to Tesman, Hedda still lives in jealous watchfulness over Eldert Lovberg, her former lover, and in her imagination she pictures Lovberg in Tesman's place.

Lovberg, a dissipated genius, has fallen under the good influence of Thea Elvsted and has written a valuable book. Hedda discovers Mrs. Elvsted's influence of Lovberg and at once sets out to resume her sway over the man, with the result that Lovberg drinks, loses his manuscript in the course of his revels, and is cast into despair, not knowing that Hedda Gabler has the manuscript concealed. Lovberg breaks with Thea Elvsted and shoots himself with one of Hedda's pistols. Hedda, after burning the manuscript of Lovberg's book, shoots herself.

THE FRAME-UP (American—Five Parts—May 7).—The cast: Jeffrey Claiborne (William Russell); Avery Claiborne (Harvey Clark); Mother Moir (Lucille Ward); Janie Anne (Francelia Billington); Bud Yeager (Alfred Ferguson); Jim Vance (Charles Newton); Michael Broderick (Clarence Burton).

Jeffrey Claiborne, son of Avery Claiborne, a wealthy manufacturer, decides to abandon his life of ease and go to work in earnest. Rejecting an inside position in his father's office, he starts out to hunt a job with a "kick" in it, and undertakes to drive his father to the latter's office en route.

They overtake a taxi driver who is annoying a girl. She appeals to young Claiborne for help. He rescues the girl and throws out the driver of the taxi, leaving his father, who knows nothing about a car, to handle the racer. All he can do is keep the racer in the road until the gas gives out and it "dies."

Meanwhile Jeffrey accepts a job with Mrs. Moir, mother of Jane Anne, the girl he rescued, who is the owner of a taxi line. It develops that Mother Moir at one time had underworld connections but forsook them in order that she might bring up her daughter respectably. Some of the woman's old friends, well known crooks, take refuge in her house and she is powerless to prevent this, fearing exposure.

Jeffrey's love for Jane Anne leads him to de-

WARREN PRODUCTIONS.

THE WARFARE OF THE FLESH (Five Parts—April).—The cast in the prologue: Adam (Fred Radcliffe); Eve (Mary Moore); Satan (Theodore Friebus); Sin (Marie Shotwell); Magdalene (Mary Elizabeth Forbes); Good Samaritan (Walter Hampden).

The cast in the modern drama: Frank Gregory (Harry Benham); Mrs. Frank Gregory (Charlotte Ives); George Harmon (Sheldon Lewis); Henry Goode (Walter Hampden); John Evil (Theodore Friebus); Agnes Sinn (Marie Shotwell). Scenario written by Lawrence Marston. Directed by Edward Warren.

"The Warfare of the Flesh" does not mean a battle nor a struggle of flesh in the material sense. It means the eternal conflict our spirit and soul wage against the desires of the flesh. The warfare is between forces of good and those of evil.

Thus the theme is developed by first showing the warfare of the flesh in the beginning, when the first transgressors were expelled from Heaven for their wrongdoing. We see the fallen angels in Hell and on Earth intent on spreading the scourge of evil. We seen Satan and Sin in the Garden of Eden, and Sin tempts Eve, who is not strong enough to engage in a warfare with the desires of the flesh and win. We then pass on to the later civilization, and see the Magdalene about to be stoned because she was vanquished in the warfare of mind with matter. The Good Samaritan comes to her rescue, and the machinations of Satan and Sin are thus frustrated in a conflict with Good. Then there is a quick transition to the present era, and again we see Satan and Sin casting their ominous shadows over the affairs of mankind and accelerating evil, in the guise of a lady and gentleman of the leisure class. They temporarily befog the vision of weak men and women thrown into the maelstrom of life where the warfare of the flesh is perpetual. In the stress of circumstances the heroine is about to give up her fight with matter, but the eternal spirit of good again comes to the relief of the distressed and the unfortunate. Thus Satan and Sin lose out in a clash with the forces of Good.

AMERICAN METHODS (Five Parts—April 30).—The cast: William Armstrong (William Farnum); Gaston, Duc de Bligney (Bertram Grassby); M. Moulinet (Willard Louis); Marie (Lillian West); Marquise de Beaulieu (Genevieve Blinn); Octave (Alan Forrest); Claire (Jewel Carmen); Betty Armstrong (Florence Vidor); Henri Gaudet (Marc Robbins); Baron de Prefont (Joseph Swickard); Jimmy (Mortimer Jaffe). Directed by Frank Lloyd.

The action of "American Methods" takes place in France. William Armstrong is an American of French descent and is a successful business man. He is left an estate consisting of an iron mine in France and with his sister sail for the French village and on his arrival takes charge of the business.

In the French town live the Marquise de Beaulieu, her daughter, Claire, and her son Octave. During a reception Armstrong meets Claire and falls in love with her. She, though, is betrothed to Gaston, Duc de Bligny, who, in turn is loved by Marie Moulinet, a rich manufacturer's daughter.

Finding that Claire has lost her fortune, Gaston jilts her and marries Marie. Claire then accepts Armstrong, although she tells him she does not love him. Octave meantime falls in love with Armstrong's sister, Betty.

Shortly after the marriage, Gaston finds that he stills loves Claire. He gets her into a compromising position and is soundly thrashed by Armstrong. Stung by the beating, Gaston attempts to shoot Armstrong and in a struggle Gaston is mortally mounded.

Claire, now in love with her husband, begs his forgiveness, which is freely given.

AN AERIAL JOY RIDE (Two Parts—Foxfilm Comedy—April 30).—The cast: The Inventor (Joe Swickard); His Daughter (Annette De Foe); Her Beau (George Uttal); Government Official (Jack Abbott); Master Crook (H. Moody); Boob Crook (Ray Griffith). Directed by Walter Reed.

At the start we have an inventor, and a foreign spy who is disguised as a janitor. The inventor has completed an aerial torpedo which is controlled by wireless. The janitor-spy is trying to steal it. He blows up the workshop several times but the inventor is not worried. He doesn't even stop inventing.

Finally the janitor accidentally discovers the wireless waves that controls the torpedo. He turns on the "juice" and the torpedo starts its cruise, ultimately destroying the workshop, the inventor, the spy and everybody else.

Then another inventor appears with a new torpedo. He is surrounded by foreign spies and the things that happen in his workship bear a strong resemblance to the mental disturbances that mark a long standing case of delirium tremens.

A SMALL TOWN GIRL (Five Parts—May 7).—A country girl, June, comes to New York to take care of her aunt's child. In a squalid First avenue tenement she meets Frank, her old sweetheart back home, who had come to the city to make good.

Jane, the child, finds the slipper and in a playful tussle over it with Frank pulls off the heel. The gem falls to the floor. Frank recognizes the stolen gem and hurries off to get the police.

Meantime the crooks discover the loss of the slipper. Mame quizzes Jane and learns June has it. With her men confederates she attacks June just as Frank returns with the police. The crooks are arrested, and June and Frank go back home for a honeymoon.

But Neal happens to drop in on Alice, and she tells him about the old fellow who suspects his prospective son-in-law of being a gay boy. She shows him the card with the appointment thereon. Neal, by a liberal tip, induces Alice to reverse the plot on father, and takes the card. Neal calls that evening and confides in Betty. Father proposes to Neal a little party on the quiet, and, after some protest, Neal consents. He leaves the card with Betty, and he and father meet the girls. Betty lets mother find the card, and they go to the cafe. On a signal from Betty, Neal slips out and comes in just behind her and mother. They descend on father and the two girls, who support Neal in SOWERS AND REAPERS (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five parts—May 7).—The cast: Annie Leigh (Emmy Wehlen); Earle Courtney (George Stuart Christie); Major James Courtney (Frank Currier); Sadie Jones (Peggy Parr); Henry Ainsworth (Grace Sammis); Ella Burt (Claire McCormack); Paul Roubais (Emmanuel Turner). Written and directed by George D. Baker.

Earle Courtney is in love with Annie Leigh, a factory girl. Major Courtney, his wealthy father, is determined that Earle shall marry Ethel Ainsworth, a rich girl. Earle and Annie marry secretly. Len Peters, a rejected suitor, follows and watches the ceremony.

Later Major Courtney cruises south and learns of his son's marriage. Feigning illness, he sends for Earle, and gives orders for the yacht to leave the harbor. Earle discovers he has been tricked, and jumps overboard, but is recaptured. He tries to send a message to Annie by wireless, but his father has one sent that the marriage is a mistake and he wishes his release.

Major Courtney, with the aid of Len Peters, secures the page from the court record containing the marriage license. The minister dies, and Annie is without proof of her marriage.

She goes to the city, hoping to find her husband. There her child is born, and while being cared for in a hospital she sees an announcement of the marriage of Earle Courtney and Ethel Ainsworth. Earle, believing her dead, has submitted to his father's wishes. Ethel, however, is in love with Paul Roubais, an artist. Annie finally obtains employment in a motion picture studio and soon, under the screen name of Annie Laurie, she is earning a large salary.

Mexican investments result disastrously for the Courtneys. Annie takes over the mortgage on their estate. She meets Earle, but denies she was even known as Annie Leigh, and when he tries to embrace her child says she does not permit "studio familiarities."

Earle tells her their story and she says it would make a good plot for a picture. It is presented under the title "Sowers and Reapers" and Annie insists that the Courtneys attend the first showing. Earle learns for the first time of the false message sent by his father.

Major Courtney, who also is present, recognizes his message and, overcome with remorse, goes to Annie and begs forgiveness. She tells him repentance cannot undo the harm he has done. Meantime Ethel's interest in Roubais increases. At last she elopes with him and Earle seeks Annie. An annulment of Ethel's marriage is obtained and Annie and Earle take up their life together.

THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter 18—Two Parts—May 7).—Several days after The Great Master has been "brought back to life" Zulph calls a meeting of the Secret Seven to announce his election as leader. The East Indian servant in the headquarters enters and announces that The Great Master has called. To Zulph's horror, the man he believed dead appears. He orders Zulph to be seated, pointing to an arm chair. Zulph obeys and the arms of the chair swing together, holding him a prisoner. Then Strong and Detective Sears enter, followed by Beverly Clarke and Jane Warren. Strong, believing The Great Master to be a criminal of the worst type, attacks him, but Jane Warren interferes, saying:

"Stop. That man is your father. The time has come at last for you to know all and I am the one to tell it." Then she relates "The Great Secret." Many years ago, in Alaska, she says, she and Zulph knew old Thomas Clarke, who was an unprincipled character of the Klondike.

Jane loved Zulph and was completely in his power. Living in the Klondike was the man who afterward became The Great Master. He occupied a cabin with his young wife and their two-year-old son. He had located a valuable mining claim. One day he left the map of the claim with his wife. Clarke offered Zulph $10,000 if he would get hold of the man. To do so he administered poison to the young wife and she died.

Zulph then fled from the Klondike with Jane Warren, who took the child with her. Afterward Zulph and Clarke met in New York and formed The Secret Seven. Jane Warren sent the lad to school and then through college, giving him the name of William Montgomery Strong. Entering business, Strong was remarkably successful.

The Great Master told the rest of the story. Returning to his Klondike cabin, finding his wife dead and his boy gone, he vowed to trail Zulph and Clarke. Part of his plan of revenge was to let Clarke hold the claim to the mine until such time as The Great Master was ready to spring his trap. He learned of The Secret Seven, conferred with the Government Secret Service, obtained authority to watch the band, joined it, became The Great Master, and thus spied on the men he loathed. Clarke died and he centered his energies on Zulph.

The Great Master then goes to an assembly room where The Secret Seven and its henchmen are gathered. Instantly scores of secret panels in the room swing open and scores of policemen appear. The whole band of crooks is rounded up and taken to prison, Zulph along with them. Strong embraces his father and Jane Warren, and Beverly, overjoyed at his having discovered the great secret—the secret of his parentage and the wealth Thomas Clarke left her—tells him the fortune really belongs to his father.

Strong tells Beverly he wants her to reveal another "great secret"—to name the day for their wedding. In due time a wedding takes place, and the faithful Wee See is the guest of honor.

Raymond); "Bull" Dorgan (John Mackin); Joe Gaskell (James O'Neill); Doctor Morley (Willis Baker); Billy Hamilton (Robert Clugston). Scenario by John C. Brownell. Harry F. Millard.

In Joe Gaskell's "Half Way House" Bonnie, an urchin, is employed as maid of all work. "Bull" Dorgan, boss of the lumber camp, a tyrannical bully, has been waiting for Bonnie to become fully grown that he might marry her.

Arthur Wharton is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Grenville at their hunting lodge in the North Woods near Gaskell's road house. Wharton has secretly loved Mrs. Grenville, who married for money, and she has not been blind to his admiration. Strolling into the "Half Way House" one afternoon, Wharton is in time to defend Bonnie from an attack by "Bull" Dorgan.

Wharton finds himself deeply interested in the little waif and subsequently he is one of an automobile party, which also includes Mrs. Grenville, who come to the "Half Way House" for luncheon. There he again meets Bonnie. Wharton's sister also takes an interest in the girl, but Mrs. Grenville declines to be concerned in Bonnie's welfare.

Grenville gains knowledge of the love affair between his wife and Wharton. Wharton and his sister return at once to New York. Awake to the evil of his conduct with Mrs. Grenville, Wharton goes to the North Woods and rents a "shack," dooming himself to solitude as a penance for his reprehensible conduct.

The news of Wharton's presence reaches the lumbermen who congregate at Gaskell's and Bonnie gains the information by overhearing others tell that Wharton is now alone and ill. Bonnie goes to him and nurses him back to health.

"Bull" Dorgan learns of Bonnie's kindness to Wharton, and in a jealous rage he goes to Wharton's cabin. Among the "gang" he has taken with him is a justice of the peace whom Dorgan now decrees shall marry him and Bonnie. But Wharton enters in time to save the girl from her fate, marries her himself, the justice then and there performing the ceremony.

In the interest of his health Wharton is ordered to spend a year abroad. He is advised to leave his wife in the care of his sister, the time to be utilized in educating the girl and preparing her for a place in society. Mrs. Grenville, now a widow, has heard of Wharton's marriage and plans vengeance. She waits until Wharton returns from abroad to begin operations, and then invites all concerned to a winter party at Grenville lodge in the North Woods.

Mrs. Grenville stoops to lying to Bonnie's husband, telling him his wife is in love with another one of her guests, Billy Hamilton. Mrs. Grenville has, in fact, brought Hamilton along, under pay, to compromise Bonnie. When her plans go wrong Bonnie and her husband are more than ever in love and are re-united and happy.

EDUCATIONAL FILM CORP.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—Monkey Capers).—No animals are so immensely amusing and interesting as the monkeys, and here we have them doing their best to entertain. The antics involved in striking up an acquaintance, thence proceeding as sworn friends to investigate things, form a series of laughable scenes. Their grimaces entreat a human observer to join the party. With the entrance of the new arrival, bringing interesting things for examination and play, the fun goes on. From an educational point of view the picture is valuable in the portrayal of rare types, such as the Celebes black ape and the long-armed baboon of West Africa.

JOSEPH R. MILES.

THE TEST OF WOMANHOOD (5 parts—April).—Akkadia is a country overrun by its militant neighbor, Turania. Marie, a young Akkadian governess, and Carl, an officer of the Turanian army, love each other in spite of loyalty to their respective countries.

Marie is a martyr to the ideals of womanhood and even faces an ignominious end to protect her gallant lover and enemy.

After being attacked by a stranger, Marie comes to her senses to find her brother-in-law dead at her feet. Her sweetheart, a brother of the murdered man, turns against her and she is denounced and discredited. To save her good name, Carl marries her. This brings trouble to Carl, who is court-martialed, and to Marie, who faces death for murder. However, everything ends satisfactorily.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

HER SECRET (Five Parts—April 30).—The cast: Clara Weston (Alice Joyce); Rex Fenton (Harry Morey); Dr. Howard (Robert Kelley); Mrs. Marvin (Mary Maurice); Charley (George Cooper); Dazy (Patsy DeForrest); Alice (Kittens Reichert). Directed by Perry N. Vekroff.

Clara Weston is a country school teacher and daughter of a minister. She receives a call to New York to become secretary to the manager of a philanthropic society. She takes the stage coach to the railroad town, but misses the overland train and is compelled to remain over night at the only hotel. A party of Eastern civil engineers come in from an extended stay in the mountains—dusty, unkempt bearded young fellows—who plunge into the diversions of the hotel's dance hall. Rex Fenton of the party pays attentions to Dazy, a dancer. However, when it is late, to get rid of him, she gives him a number at random as that of her room. Befuddled with drink, Fenton afterward looks for the dancer, and as the story works out Clara Weston becomes an accidental victim of circumstances. Next morning she goes on her way with a broken heart, while Fenton awakes in his room with only a dim idea of what occurred the night before.

After several months at her position in the East, Clara Weston is compelled to resign and retire to a remote country town, where her secret is protected by Dr. Howard, who sympathizes with her misfortune. A year after she has been East, Dr. Howard secures for her a position with a business man as stenographer, she leaving her child behind in a nurse's care.

After a time her employer falls in love with her, unaware that she has a child. Her love for him makes her too timid, and she accepts him without revealing her past. Separation from her little one makes Clara melancholy. Dr. Howard, whose advice that she be perfectly frank with her husband has been neglected, sees a chance to improve her spirits by inducing the husband to adopt this child, and happiness reigns.

Several years pass before the husband discovers correspondence from Dr. Howard that discloses Clara's motherhood. Leaping at the idea that Dr. Howard is the man to blame, the husband has a violent scene with him, but the doctor relates the circumstances under which the girl was wronged. The husband, who is none other than Fenton, realizes that he is the father of her child. He now begs forgiveness of the disaster he brought upon her, and the story ends in her complete vindication and final peace of mind.

K-E-S-E, INC.

THE SAINT'S ADVENTURE (Essanay—Five Parts—May 7).—The cast: Rev. Paul Manson (Henry B. Walthall); Mary Farley (Mary Charleson); Mrs. Sewell Wright (Frankie Raymond); Steve Martin (Bert Weston); Wilks (Patrick Calhoun); Sid Farley (Ellis Paul). Directed by Arthur Berthelet.

Rev. Paul Manson, pastor of St. Mark's Church, is ordered to the country for his health. While he is sojourning in a lumber camp with Wilks, his guide, he reads of his "sudden death" in his home-town newspaper. Rev. Manson has longed to clean up the slums of his city, and decides to return incognito and do so.

Upon his return he is met by a street urchin, Sid Farley, who recognizes him as his missing father, Joe Farley. Rev. Manson is recognized by the boy's mother, Mary, also, as her husband, and he does not deny it. Under the guise of Joe Farley, Rev. Manson begins the work of uplifting the slum district. Though he does not live at Mary's home—declaring he is tired of her—Manson gradually recognizes her good impulses and falls in love with her. Manson has just triumphed over an evil political ring in the slums when he is recognized by Mrs. Sewell Wright as the supposedly dead Rev. Manson. But having attained his ambition in the slums he remains there, marrying Mary.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

INVITED OUT (Klever Komedy—May 7).—Vic is a clerk and never since he left home has he had a taste of a good home cooked dinner. He has had to eat in restaurants. He expresses himself one day before his fellow clerks that he is getting tired of restaurant cooking and Charlie Elliott, who is enjoying the advantages of a happy home, invites Vic to drop in any time for dinner. Bob Jones does likewise. Vic agrees.

The boss' daughter drops in about this time, and being rather "smitten" with Vic wants him to go to lunch with her and her father. Her father is about to go with them when he is interrupted by an urgent business matter and the engagement is called off. The boss' daughter, however, invites Vic to the house to dinner any time, telling him they dine at five-thirty.

Vic goes home that night from the office and begins planning to accept the boss' daughter's invitation home to dinner. He works up a fine appetite. He passes a haberdasher shop and sees a dress coat. He feels that it is necessary to him in order to be properly dressed when dining with the boss and his daughter.

Vic begins to figure out how he can get a dress suit and it flashed across his mind that the easiest way to do under the circumstances is to make one. This he proceeds to do, and when it is finished he starts for the boss' house. On arrival the boss' daughter and the boss greet him and the boss takes him into the dining room, which is in a very upset state on account of painters, etc. The boss explains to Vic that he is sorry, but that they will soon be settled and then he must come and dine with them. Vic's disappointment is overwhelming and he staggers out of the house nearly starved. He remembers Charlie Elliott's invitation and decides to go there. He meets Charlie and his wife going out and Charlie explains that he is sorry that he did not come in time for dinner, as they had a fine roast duck.

Vic by this time is ready to drop with hunger. He does not give up, however, for he remembers Bob's invitation and as a last resort goes there. He arrives at Bob's and is greeted with open arms. Mrs. Bob informs Vic that she is delighted to have him for dinner, as they are to have Irish stew. Bob introduces Vic to his family of children while Mrs. Bob is doing the cooking.

Mrs. Bob accidentally breaks a water pipe in the kitchen and every one is called to help—Bob and the children and Vic. Vic in trying to stop the water gets drenched and drenches the whole family, and the worst of it all is that the water ruins the Irish stew and leaves everybody wet and hungry. Vic rushes to a restaurant to get something to eat.

Mr. Chapin's Press Agent Has Lost His Job

There was nothing more for him to say—after Mr. Chapin received the following letters during the two days following his trade showing.

With the exception of five—these letters are from people not personally known by Mr. Chapin.

Excellent in every detail; intensely interesting. As fine a production as I have ever witnessed. Would like to have my own country men see this masterpiece in its own city.
(Signed) Hon FRANK L. COHEN, R.H.S.,
Former Mayor of Glasgow, Scotland
Hotel Ansonia, N. Y.

It was a rare treat to witness the result of brains and culture. And what a result! Many big motion objects dazzle with magnitude, lavish expenditure of money, and time; but here is a moving photo Cycle that reaches the soul. Here is a picture with the universal appeal—mother and son. Here is that heart interest "Thing" that we all strive for in its smallest, purest form. Griffith, Brenon, etc., all have done big things, but not one of them has ever reached the height in the moving picture art that Chapin stands upon alone—the master of heart interest appeal. If the mothers of men count for anything in this world, they will see to it that their sons see the Lincoln Cycle.
(Signed) JAMES R. GAREY,
Long Time Stage Director and Dramatist

I consider it the most perfect film, in conception, in direction of acting, in discrimination, in selection of incidents, in absence of the theatric and presence of human qualities and in cumulative effect that has been seen. As a document to stir the noblest in man and patriotism in the country it deserves government support.
(Signed) MISS ADA STERLING,
Author, Editor, Playwright and Critic.
747 Madison Ave., N. Y.

I am a constant attendant at the screen theatres, and these Lincoln features are easily the most touchingly beautiful pictures I have ever seen. The funerals who assist you in the action have been wonderfully selected. Your Cycle, like the master composers' works, will live for future generations to enjoy.
(Signed) CHAS. A. DEAN,
Imperial Hotel. Real Estate Developer.

I regard the "Lincoln Cycle," without exception, the most absorbingly interesting film exhibition I have ever seen. Its historical value to the young and old is noteworthy; and its lesson of patriotic devotion fitting the spirit of the hour.
(Signed) FLOYD B. WILSON,
Singer Bldg., N. Y. Lawyer.

All art is a form of self-expression. You expressed the character of Mr. Lincoln through your own thought and feeling, hence the great success of your plays. Your pictures are wonderful. They will live.
(Signed) EDMUND J. MYERS,
703 Carnegie Hall. Musician.

Delightfully interesting and instructive. Patriotic in the full sense of the word. A feature that will crowd all playhouses and have a big and continuous run.
(Signed) FLORENCE GERNDT,
Public School Teacher.
1144 Putnam Ave., Brooklyn.

I consider it a wonderful picture and think it would be of great benefit to the public if it would serve as a great example or type for other pictures.
(Signed) MRS. ALEX. LUMLEY,
Resident of Paris, France.
American address, Hotel Ansonia.

Mrs. Burns and my daughter attended and they were loud in their praises of the pictures and stated they were the best they have ever seen. I consider this a great compliment, in view of the fact that they are both movie fans." Indeed, they were effusive in their praises of the wonderful pictures, and I hope to have the pleasure of seeing them myself, as soon as you release them.
(Signed) W. J. BURNS,
Burns Detective Agency.
Woolworth Bldg.

Admirable! You have simply done wonders. Please accept my hearty congratulations. I am much pleased to see good notices in the Tribune and the Brooklyn Eagle. I feel certain that the Lincoln Cycle is going to be a great success. You are rendering a great service, especially to the rising generation, particularly at this critical period of our national life.
(Signed) A. EMERSON PALMER,
Secy. Board of Education, City of New York.
Park Ave. and 59th St.

More educational than the "Lives" of Lincoln I have read and as inspirational as Lincoln's life. I hope every American may see these pictures. My wife says the pictures are as natural as Mr. Chapin in his impersonation.
(Signed) SAMUEL B. LELAND,
901 Ogden Ave., N. Y. Minister.

The best I ever saw!
(Signed) GEORGE GORDON NEEDHAM,
218 E. 19th St., N. Y. Physician.

The very best moving picture I have ever seen. Beautifully arranged, splendidly acted, educational, interesting and a sublime mixture of pathos and comedy.
(Signed) FRANK FERGUSON,
253 W. 42d St., N. Y. Playwright

It is a real high class entertainment, worthy to [illegible] great man is delineated. Every [illegible] in America should go to see it and after it has gone the rounds of the [illegible] it should be presented throughout England and [illegible] Ireland.
(Signed) JAS. KATE STEVENS BATES,
Social Worker.
[illegible] St. and Riverside Rd.

Your feature play of Abraham Lincoln was a great inspiration to me. I think it ranks with "The Birth of a Nation." I will do my best to advertise it in my home section.
(Signed) MRS. JOSEPH H. WALLACH,
Vice-Pres. Mothers' Club.
26 Post Ave., N. Y.

I have been in the habit of going to the "movies" for some years. This comes near to being the best. A great argument for preparedness.
(Signed) EDWARD SIMMONS,
16 Gramercy Park, N. Y. Painter.

The strongest, tenderest, most inspiring thing I have seen presented in this form. A work of immense potential value in building personal character and high patriotism, carried out in a way to hold young and old equally interested and equally charmed. It should be taken up by educational bodies for its instructive value and by the nation for its patriotic appeal.
(Signed) CHAS. B. GOING,
Editor, Salmagundi Club, 140 Nassau St., N. Y.
14 W. 12th St., N. Y.

Ideal for entertainment and instruction. Put out at a timely moment. I judge this as an exhibitor and a teacher of history.
(Signed) S. LESSELBAUM,
Miller and Vermont Theatres; also Secy. Brooklyn Exhibitors' League.
747 Sutter Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

It was the finest film I have ever seen! I remember President Lincoln, and Tad was my playmate in Washington. Every American should see it. Hope you will take it to every city in the United States.
(Signed) MRS. CATHERINE CHENOWETH.
54 E. 32d St., N. Y.

Compared with the usual run of film exhibits, yours of yesterday seemed to please everybody and was a refreshing chance. A good, healthful drama, an historical education which should be at this time a welcome entertainment to the jaded veterans of vitascope shows. Above all, the idea is patriotic and stimulating. I wish you success.
(Signed) WM. NELSON LITTLE,
Rear Admiral U. S. Navy (Retired).
235 W. 76th St., N. Y.

Your Lincoln photoplay is an epic of democracy, and I thank you for the privilege of seeing it.
(Signed) ELEANOR ROGERS COX,
8 W. 33d St., N. Y. Author and Poet.

Many times I felt like crying and many times the humor of it made me laugh. They are, as has been said, the most "moving" moving pictures.
(Signed) ELIZ. CHRISTIAN FOSDICK,
1 W. 67th St., N. Y.

The most remarkable impersonation and representation of the day so far as we know. The spirit is in direct sympathy with the times. Such a characterization is to be commended in the highest terms.
(Signed) WRS. FRED W. MEYER.
408 Riverside Drive, N. Y.

I was most deeply impressed with the pictures I have seen to-day. As I am 72 years old, I lived through the war record of Lincoln—and you can imagine how you have appealed to me. In whatever of influence or example I can be of service in extending the publicity of the pictures I saw at the Strand Theatre this morning, and of the others you propose, you may always command me.
(Signed) DR. APPLETON MORGAN,
Retired Lawyer; President N. Y. Shakespeare Club.
University Club.

Your presentation of Lincoln and his family life is the most tender and powerful picture drama before the public to-day. The "Call to Arms" is exceedingly timely. It ought to be presented everywhere at once. It will do more good than any amount of talk in showing President Wilson's present difficulties and secure sympathy for him in the trying times through which he is passing. I wish you great success with the Cycle.
(Signed) WM. BREWSTER HUMPHREY,
Executive Secy. American Indian League.
298 Manhattan Ave.

Fine! Wonderful! Truthful! Has "laughter akin to tears." Is the best enlistment argument before the public to-day. Many thanks.
(Signed) WILL N. HARBEN,
854 W. 181st St., N. Y. Author.

I never felt so great and human, and never was so touched as by the "Lincoln Cycle." It reached the bottom of my heart! Every human being ought to see this.
(Signed) P. BROUNOFF,
Composer and Lecturer.
147 W. 11th St., N. Y.

Your presentation of the Lincolns, "Tom" and "Abe" the President, is truly admirable, forceful and pregnant, and amusing to boot. I predict a colossal success for the Cycle if the other parts are up to the standard of this one, and there doesn't seem to be any reason why they shouldn't. It will, by its homely humor and pathos, get a grip on the public that will be powerful and lasting—and that spells success.
(Signed) JOHN FLANAGAN,
1931 Broadway, N. Y. Sculptor.

Mighty good and a certain success! I liked the second, "My Father," particularly. Congratulations!
(Signed) ADIN BALLOU,
160 W. 54th St., N. Y. Writer.

I thank you for the opportunity you afforded me in seeing the unique, artistic, highly interesting and instructive portion of the Lincoln Cycle. Like the April day itself, it shifted and changed from the sunshine of humor to the tears of sympathy and was in each phase perfection itself. Your own duality of character, both the father and his glorious son, was admirably depicted.
(Signed) EDWARD LAUTERBACH,
301 W. 108th St., N. Y. Lawyer.

The most interesting set or series of pictures I have ever witnessed.
(Signed) H. F. RENDALL,
Editor Motion Picture Dept., New York Review.
121 W. 39th St., N. Y.

It was most instructive, interesting, pathetic, patriotic and amusing.
(Signed) IRVING P. WHITINGTON,
859 Seventh Ave., N. Y. Physician.

Your pictures were perfect in their craftsmanship, true in their delineation, real in their humanity, most affecting in their tenderness, highly educational in their effect and grandly inspiriting in their lessons of patriotism. They will help us all lead up to it.
(Signed) FRANK A. BRYANT,
26 W. 40th St., N. Y. Physician.

I wish I could tell you of my delight in your wonderful Lincoln Cycle. I have never seen another motion picture that has moved me as much. It is perfect in every detail. I feel that not to have seen it would have been a sad loss to me. I thank you from my heart. I hope that it will be given so often in New York that every American will have a chance to see it many times.
(Signed)
VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER,
251 W. 101st St., N. Y. Author.

I witnessed your showing of the Lincoln Cycle. I am still under the spell of its wonderful artistry. You, sir, have made a work of art—subtle, convincing, well balanced, with happy blending of pathos and humor. And, best of all, the whole work is imbued with the spirit of sincerity that makes of the artistic potentialities beautiful actualities. As student and artist I welcome this truly worthy picture as one of, if not the finest expression of the silent drama. The Lincoln of memory or of imagination becomes before our eyes the real flesh and blood Lincoln as of our own day and generation.
(Signed) ARTHUR J. WESTERMAYE,
90 Nassau St. Author.

I wish to write to express my great admiration of the Lincoln pictures, and my earnest wish for the success of your undertakings. The pictures are wonderfully good from every point of view.
(Signed) MORNAY WILLIAMS,
27 Cedar St., N. Y Lawyer.

It is far more than resemblance, or make-up or clever acting. The real Lincoln seems to live again. The occasion was very impressive, and I hope that the pictures may be seen very widely, not only for their historic importance but for the great message which they bring.
(Signed) VIRGINIA ROBIE,
29 E. 29th St., N. Y. Artist and Author.

I attended your "Lincoln Cycle" at the Strand and think the production was in every way marvelous and highly educational.
(Signed) MISS W. A. LIGHTSTONE,
Principal Riverside School.
879 West End Ave., N. Y.

I was delighted with the exhibition. In the first place, I think it is supremely timely in this crisis of our nation to have presented to Americans the figure of a patriot, so patient, so human, and, withal, so great a statesman as Lincoln. This should be a mighty stimulus to every man, woman and child who is privileged to witness the pictures. In the second place, the educational value seems to me to be worthy of notice. I should certainly like to see the entire Cycle figuring in the public schools. Outside of the appeal to the eye, which impresses so much more than the details of the printed page, the impression is vastly greater. The composition seems to me to be excellent. The combination of pathos and humor is quite masterly.
(Signed) GEORGE W. GILMORE,
Editor "Homiletic Review," Funk & Wagnalls Co., 360 Fourth Ave., N. Y.

The picture should be shown in every town and village in the country as quickly as possible. It is calculated to arouse great enthusiasm; to stir the people of the United States to enter this, the greatest of crusades—the fight to recover ground more holy than was fought for eight or nine hundred years ago.
(Signed) COLIN CAMPBELL COOPER,
222 W. 59th St., N. Y. Artist.

Truly a most timely, interesting and instructive presentation of a great subject, with its pathetic and humorous veins. A brilliant and happy thought.
(Signed) MRS. R. F. GARDNER
Social Worker.
300 Lincoln Road, Brooklyn.

I do thank you for what to me was a "Soul Bath"; I knew Lincoln—met him when only a girl of fifteen.
(Signed) MRS. CORA FARIMBURG.

It made Lincoln a real true being to me and as such surpassed my ideal of him.
(Signed) MRS. S. STOWOOD MENKEN,
National Security League.
34 W. 52d St., N. Y.

The pictures are very interesting and of much historic value, and also at this particular time are of great service in arousing the loyalty and co-operation of the public with President Lincoln.
(Signed) W. B. PAYNE,
131 W. 10th St., N. Y. Educator.

A fine piece of work and most timely. It deserves great success. Wish we had more of this kind of pictures.
(Signed) WHITSON L. SAVAGE,
President Savage School for Physical Education.
308 W. 59th St., N. Y.

It will be an opportunity for the people of the present day to learn how mercilessly poor Lincoln was abused by the politicians and the self-seekers. I lived thru the whole period.
(Signed) H. L. WINGATE.
350 W. 23d St., N. Y.

A big boost to the "Wake Up America" movement.
(Signed) P. ROSENSON,
Garden Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.
740 Manhattan Ave.

A most timely performance—wholesome, sane and inspiring! It is worth a hundred spoken addresses.
(Signed) RABBI BARNETT A. ELZAS.
42 W. 72d St., N. Y.

Very interesting, fine humor and pathos; full of human as well as historical interest.
(Signed) STANSBURY HAGAR,
48 Wall St. Lawyer.

If I had a million dollars, I'd give a good part of it to put the picture in every town and hamlet in America—the best recruiting appeal I've seen or heard.

Get It First For Your House In Your Territory

A Pictorial Record of the World's Events That Are Making History

Released Every Week by the UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO., 1600 Broadway, New York—First Shipment, May 12, 1917

"UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS"

The announcement of the launching the Universal's new pictorial news weekly release will be hailed with joy by thousands of Exhibitors through the world; first, because of many Exhibitors' inability to secure the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY owing to the fact that it is already booked in their territory, and second, because it brings a brand new idea—that of a pictorial record and history of the world's events.

In considering the booking on long-time contract of "CURRENT EVENTS," get the fact firmly planted in your mind that "CURRENT EVENTS" has absolutely no connection whatsoever, in any way, shape or form with either the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY or the UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE. Each is entirely separate and independent in its field. The Universal Animated Weekly will continue as ever to bring the world's news first to thousands of theatres, while the Universal Screen Magazine will likewise continue to present in pictures each week the accomplishments and progress of the world in science, art, industry, inventions, etc., etc., exactly as before.

In "CURRENT EVENTS" each week will be shown those important doings throughout the world that will be recorded in moving pictures similar in method to the records of the world's events that are written down as history for future generations. Instead of posterity READING about the events at this time of the world's history, they will SEE in fascinating pictures all the important occurrences that transpire in our day and date.

The first issue of "UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS" will be shipped on May 12th. The handling of bookings on contract basis will be similar to the plan used by Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Screen Magazine. Thus Exhibitors who cannot now (because of territorial divisions) secure either the U Animated Weekly or the U Screen Magazine will be able to book "CURRENT EVENTS." Eastern Exhibitors who have seen the first release of "CURRENT EVENTS" pronounce it a long-felt want in the field of news pictorial weeklies. Book it NOW on a long time contract for your house while you have the first chance. Book through any Universal Exchange, or

Confidence Is Better Than Contracts

IN FIVE months Goldwyn, without a production on the market, but backed by the reputation of its owners, has invited and, we believe, won the confidence of American exhibitors.

W. C. Quimby, of the Jefferson Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "I approve of open bookings, but your stars are all of the first magnitude and, so far as I am concerned, I wish to contract in advance for all of them."

R. B. Wilby, a big exhibitor of Montgomery and Selma, Ala., writes: "In view of the fact that your rentals are to be based on regional conditions I hereby offer to contract for the service at whatever price you may afterwards determine upon."

G. J. Higgins, a Pennsylvania exhibitor, writes: "As soon as your Philadelphia exchange is open we will enter into an annual contract with you for Goldwyn Pictures in Shamokin. We will also play your productions in our Pottsville house."

Exhibitors in every section of America have written similar letters to Goldwyn. In the face of this splendid confidence Goldwyn expects to vastly increase exhibitor-confidence through the medium of its quality productions.

BIG WAR SPECIALS

Like "Uncle Sam's Defenders," "Fighting For France," and "A Daughter of War"

WILL PACK THEATRES

Right now while everyone is thinking and talking about war, Mutual Film Corporation is offering exhibitors some of the greatest patriotic pictures ever released. At any Mutual Exchange exhibitors can now book such subjects as "Uncle Sam's Defenders," "Fighting for France" and "A Daughter of War." "Uncle Sam's Defenders" is a series of six one-reel Mutual Featurettes. It shows just how Uncle Sam is preparing for war. It depicts cavalry and infantry in action, battleships at target practice, coast defense guns in action, the aviation service and just how all branches of Uncle Sam's fighting forces look when engaged in war.

"Fighting for France" is a five-reel subject presenting actual scenes of the great conflict now raging across the ocean. It will pack any theatre. "A Daughter of War" is a five-reel patriotic feature in which real history is presented in entertaining fashion. For its making whole regiments of men, troops of cavalry and batteries of artillery were required. Exhibitors everywhere will find these Mutual Specials ideal bookings. Any theatre manager can "do his bit" in aid of recruiting and at the same time turn a profit for himself, by presenting pictures of a patriotic nature like these. The great theatre-going public is eager to see just how our country is preparing for war. People will go by the thousands to the theatres which present films showing what is being done to get ready for war —how the recruits are trained for the tasks ahead of them. Bookings on these Mutual War Specials can be made at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

MARY MILES MINTER IN AN ODD ROLE IN "ANNIE—FOR—SPITE"

ONE OF the quaintest, oddest pictures ever screened is offered the week of May 12th by the Mutual Film Corporation. Mary Miles Minter is the star. James Kirkwood is the director. "Annie-for-Spite" is the title. The production was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal.

A Fred Jackson Story.

"Annie-For-Spite" is from the pen of Fred Jackson. Mr. Jackson is one of America's best known novelists. His stories are read by millions. The fact that "Annie-For-Spite," as published in the All-Story Magazine, has been read by hundreds of thousands of people will double the value of the attraction for the exhibitor. Now those who read the story will be anxious to see the picture. Miss Minter in "Annie-For-Spite" has one of the quaintest roles of her entire career. She plays the part of an ugly, homely little clerk of a big department store, who is picked out by a rich old lady as the heiress to all her millions. The old lady insists upon her beneficiary being homely, since she wishes to spite those who are expecting to inherit her fortune. Later Mary develops into such a beautiful little girl that the old lady finds her plan all going wrong, but the fortune goes to Mary just the same when the old lady dies. And then "Annie-For-Spite" does a most unexpected thing. Just what it is, will set audiences talking.

Directed by James Kirkwood.

James Kirkwood, who has directed other Minter-Mutual Pictures is again in charge of production and his latest effort fully equals those which have preceded it. "Annie-For-Spite" can be booked now at any Mutual Exchange. So can "Youth's Endearing Charm," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith," "A Dream or Two Ago," "The Innocence of Lizette," "The Gentle Intruder" and "Environment."

Mutual Films Are Favored by Women

The Better Film Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers' association has recently indorsed a great number of Mutual Pictures which they specially recommend as suitable for childrens' and family programs. By arranging to show these highly recommended pictures, any exhibitor can assure himself of the support of the leading club women in his town. Ask your nearest Mutual manager.

You Can Talk Rough Stuff Over a Telephone But Face to Face You Have to Deliver the Goods

All of which means that an exhibitor can't have anything put over on him in the way of talk when he is seeing it on his screen. When his own projection machine is humming with a picture, the time to talk is past. The picture does all that.

Now the answer is that the big talk for a Gaumont single-reel is being given by the picture itself. "More prints" come the orders from the Mutual. "More pictures like Gaumont single-reels" come from "Better Films" Committees. "More Gaumonts" say the exhibitors.

And the spectators who pay the bill are great Gaumont "fans." They know that they see real pictures, not "fillers." AND THEY ARE ASKING FOR M-O-R-E. Don't forget either, that the newspapers are mentioning Gaumont pictures by name, picking them out for comment just as they do five-reel features.

Ask any Mutual Branch about The Mutual Weekly, "Reel Life" and "Tours Around the World," the three great Gaumonts.

TRIANGLE

PROGRAM CONSISTENCY

Triangle producers are constantly striving to supply Triangle exhibitors with subjects having a consistent box office value, not one a month, not two a month, but every release.

Triangle features represent quality in every department. They do not depend upon any single factor to put them across. The plot construction must be interesting and original.

The direction must be of the type possible only to master-directors like Thomas H. Ince and Allan Dwan.

Members of the cast are selected because of their general fitness for their roles.

Settings, costuming, in fact everything that has to do with the physical construction of Triangle features must be beyond criticism. Last, but not least, photography and laboratory work must be mechanically perfect.

Triangle plays are photographed, acted and built by genius which has its personification in every director, author and player in the Triangle studios.

If you are not a Triangle exhibitor and therefore not familiar with the TRIANGLE IDEA, ask our nearest branch manager to show you why Triangle is supreme in production.

If you are a Triangle exhibitor, let your public know that you are showing Triangle pictures and just what that means.

MARGARET ILLINGTON

famous star of such stage successes as "The Thief," "Kindling," "Within the Law," etc., makes her screen debut under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky in the Paramount Picture, a gripping story of international politics with a background of war, and the unusual likeness of the daughter of a great general and a notorious dancer, is a great foundation for suspense and big scenes which hold the audience spellbound.

"SACRIFICE"

Charles Kenyon

the famous playwright who wrote "Kindling," Miss Illington's greatest stage triumph, wrote the story, which has been adapted for the screen by Beatrice DeMille and Leighton Osmun.

Released May 3rd

"HEART'S DESIRE"

takes its name from a rose bush by which little Fleurette, the flower girl, hopes to gain the favor of her landlord and instead she gains a charge of buckshot from his son's shot gun—all of which gives rise to a very entertaining and charming story of old Brittany.

"To travel is to possess the World"

Ask your exchange to show you a Burton Holmes Travel Picture. It's all right to talk about Quaint Japan, the Wilds of China, Queer Korea, The Marvelous Rocky Mountains — but that sounds like a scenic when these are actually personally conducted tours, in picture form, photographed cut, assembled, and titled, by Mr. Burton Holmes.

The most peculiar and useless hat in the world, the Parsee helmet. Brimless and stiff, made of oil cloth with shiny gold spots, it offers little or no protection against the Indian sun. It was forced on the Parsees by the Hindoos 1,200 years ago and is supposed to indicate the hoof of the sacred cow pressing on the head of the wearer.

One of the most fascinating stories ever screened. A handsome young rector of an ultra-fashionable church reads a newspaper report of his own death while on a vacation in the North woods. Indignant because his church appeals to the rich instead of the poor, he disguises himself as a laborer in order to aid them. A woman of the slums mistakes him for her missing husband. Together they carry on the work of aiding the people of the tenements. Love and happiness follow for them. Rapid action and beautiful scenic effects make this picture of Fate's playthings wholly delightful.

FOX

ELABORATE FILM FOR "FOX KIDDIE FEATURE"

World's Most Famous Child's Story Being Put Into Cinemas.

An elaborate photo-dramatization of the greatest child's story ever written, one by an author of international renown, has been put in work for William Fox by C. M. Franklin, of the Fox directorial forces on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Franklin, himself a leader in the handling of child players, has assembled a remarkable cast of starlets for the picture.

The settings for the production are among the most massive and unique yet built for photoplays. The film itself will be a "Fox Kiddie Feature," one of the series of subjects recently launched by William Fox, which has occasioned such favorable comment in the trade.

The company which is making the "Kiddie Feature" in question includes also many adult players of strong reputation in filmdom. Among them is Eleanor Washington, a direct descendant of the first President of the United States.

Exhibitors everywhere are praising the advent of the new addition to the Fox brand. "Precisely what we wanted"—"just the thing the industry has needed"—this is the tenor of scores of letters and telegrams.

Talk about romance!

If you want to see just how "Smiling George" Walsh, the gingery William Fox star, looked in all his athletic glory when he was a collegiate baseball and football player of note, go see the next film after "The Book Agent," in which he appears. "Smiling George" wears in it the self-same uniform he had at Georgetown University. He's handsomer than ever, too.

Word About Jewel Carmen.

Truth must prevail. It's wrong to say, as many film fans and critics do, that "Jewel Carmen is as dainty as a piece of Dresden china." The Fox star is daintier! Miss Carmen plays opposite William Farnum in "When a Man Sees Red."

EMPRESS OF FASHION IN AN EFFECTIVE SETTING

Has Title Role in New Picture, "The Slave."

Some of the most novel and effective backgrounds for motion picture interior settings have been arranged in "The Slave." Valeska Suratt, the Empress of Fashion, has the title role in this new William Fox screen drama. William Nigh is the director.

In many of the scenes, the wall decorations have been designed to accompany the particular costume which Miss Suratt wears at the time. In one part of the film she is shown in a silk gown covered with huge polka dots. The draperies against which she is posed, and even the white oak furniture nearby, have a similar design; so the whole "set" is beautifully blended.

JANE'S GUILTY OF TREASON

Jane Lee, the Fox Film starlet, who appears in "A Small Town Girl," is in grave danger of being indicted for treason. This offense the Constitution defines as "giving aid and comfort to

BARA'S CURIOSITY IS FULLY APPEASED NOW

Fox Artiste Melts $5,000 Pearl Earring for Scene as Cleopatra.

A woman's curiosity is never appeased. Miss Theda Bara, the world famous William Fox screen artiste, is not an exception to this rule. Just to satisfy her natural curiosity Miss Bara is now mourning the loss of a $5,000 pearl earring.

Miss Bara who is shortly to be seen in the stupendous photodramatic William Fox photoplay, "Cleopatra," the "Siren of the Nile," has a scene wherein she melts a wonderful pearl in a glass of vinegar to impress the very susceptible Antony with her extravagance.

Taking a wine glass she filled it with white vinegar and dropped the pearl earring into the fluid. With silent amazement Miss Bara watched the peerless pearl slowly melt in the white fluid. All that was left of her valuable bauble was the gold setting.

That Villainous Villain

Stuart Holmes, the famous, or infamous, William Fox villain, star of "A Broadway Sport," is so villainous that he can't even look a clock in the face. The result is that he has to tell time by an hour-glass.

FINISHING NEW FILM FOR WILLIAM FARNUM

Story Is Founded on Larry Evans' "The Painted Lady."

What will be the last film made in the West by that distinguished star, William Farnum, is now rapidly nearing completion. It will be released by William Fox under title of "When a Man Sees Red," and will be one of the best of the super de luxe specials.

The story of Mr. Farnum's new vehicle is an adaptation of "The Painted Lady," which ran in serial form in "The Saturday Evening Post," by the brilliant writer, Larry Evans. Frank Lloyd is directing the picture.

Mr. Farnum will be seen in the role of a ship's first mate. The part is of the kind which has earned for him the title of "The Samson of the Screen."

Pearson Fine Cook.

Virginia Pearson, star of "Wrath of Love," a coming Fox production, is an expert cook.

WILLIAM FOX RETURNS

William Fox is back in his New York offices again after a two-month stay in his Western studios at Hollywood, Cal. This was the noted producer's first vacation in years. While on the Coast, he organized a Home Guard which now has several hundred members.

Doris Pawn Fine Horsewoman.

No smelly automobile for Doris Pawn. The radiant William Fox player, soon to appear with George Walsh in "Some Boy," has just acquired a stable of blooded horses. She can ride "Indian saddle" as well as any rancher.

CAPRICE HAS RAGTIME

June Caprice, the sunshiny William Fox star, is screening her way to fame in ragtime. Although she was all "tattered and torn" in "A Small Town Girl," her newest Fox play, June says she prefers such clothes (in the films).

"HONOR SYSTEM" SETS RECORD

Twelve Thousand See It in One Day at Academy of Music.

A veritable diamond mine has been uncovered in opening up for picture house bookings the greatest motion picture, "The Honor System." Four days has this picture been released and the Strand Theatre, Newark, the Academy of Music, the Star, the Ridgewood theatres have played to business on the new cinemelodrama.

Two days of rain did not deter the crowds from standing in line for two and three blocks in order to get into the Academy of Music, where on Sunday twelve thousand people passed into the theatre.

FOX OFFERS SUPERB R. A. WALSH DRAMA

Youthful Genius Who Directed "The Honor System" Completes New Production.

R. A. Walsh, the young directorial genius who staged William Fox's cinemelodrama, "The Honor System," has completed another notable production. It will soon be released on the regular Fox programme under title of "The Silent Lie."

This is Mr. Walsh's first cinema offering since his work on "The Honor System." Miriam Cooper, who created the star role of the sheriff's daughter in the big ten-reel masterpiece of film art, again heads the superb cast which director Walsh always assembles. Other well-known players in "The Silent Lie" are Ralph Lewis, Charles Clary and Monroe Salisbury.

Dozens of deft touches such as distinguished "The Honor System" are seen in Mr. Walsh's new subject. The great snows around Truckee, Cal., forming the setting for a stirring story, are in themselves a wonderful attraction.

Just Like Barney Oldfield.

Wanda Petit, who plays opposite Stuart Holmes in "The Broadway Sport," a forthcoming Fox release, would make an ideal driver of a war ambulance. Not only is she fearless, but she takes an automobile apart as easily as a baby does a watch; but, what is more important, she can put it together again.

WILLIAM FARNUM DOING "BIT"

Will Turn Estate Into a Great Garden.

William Farnum is expected at the William Fox studios in New Jersey within the next week, after a year and a half's absence on the Coast. His next film, "When a Man Sees Red," is almost finished. He has already arranged to turn a large part of his beautiful estate at Sag Harbor, L. I., into a garden, as his "bit" toward meeting the food crisis.

Do You Just "P-A-Y"

IN less than ten years the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures has grown into the fifth largest industry in the United States.

At first a little point of light—a new form of entertainment of doubtful permanent value—its advancement has resembled the flight of a meteor across the sky.

When the "movie" showed indications of permanent qualities of entertainment beyond mere pictorial attractiveness, and actual dramatic and comedy interests began to develop and point to future possibilities, its rapid growth astonished the world.

Producers, distributors, exhibitors, spectators, promoters, capitalists, bankers, merchants and manufacturers—everybody in fact—became dazzled by the glare of its brilliant success and a scramble into the moving picture business began. Nothing like it had been seen since the days of the California gold rush in '49.

New producing companies were formed, new distribution centres called "exchanges" were established by them, "store shows" were set up over night, "losing" theatres were turned over to pictures and made money from the start, and new picture houses were built everywhere. And actors, who had turned up their noses at the silent drama, began to inquire the way to the studios.

IT was a case of hurrah from morning till night. Any picture that "moved" brought a good rental and made money for all; any scenario that could be made to hold together was accepted, any actor who could effectively show the white of his eye on the screen was engaged at big money, men who had but "held books" at rehearsals of dramatic productions were made directors at fat salaries, and a general orgy of competition set in to the tune of "Who Cares about Expense?"

This condition of general disregard of money value and commonsense business principles has dominated the entire moving picture industry during the past four years.

Competition has simply gone stark, staring mad. Salaries of actors and directors have been boosted to the level of kings' incomes, and productions have been made with solely the dollar mark of great expense, and not genuine dramatic value, as their standard of appeal to the public. Has the exhibitor profited in all this?

He and the people have been told that "Mother's Angel" cost $210,000 to produce and a mediocre picture has been exploited to the skies and booked at a big rental, when it did not possess one-tenth of the value as an entertainment of "Tad, the Tomboy," which did not cost $10,000 from 'script to screen. And you have struggled to pay the bill.

STUDY!!!
"THE PARALTA PLAN"

When You Are Told?

THE exhibitor, especially during the past three years, has been frequently told in a most impressive way, with his exchange manager's finger thrust through a buttonhole of his coat for emphasis, that "everything has gone up," that special feature productions cost more and more every time a new picture is made and rentals must continue to go up, too.

And the rentals have gone up, Mr. Exhibitor, to the point where but very few of you are even breaking even—to the point where over four thousand of you have been forced out of business during the past year.

Good pictures do cost a great deal more than they did a year ago, but if the exhibitor is to pay his share of this increased cost, he must have the wherewithal to do it. More people must see each picture, and under the Paralta Plan your rental charge remains the same for 1, 2 or 10 days, or for whatever length of time is necessary to accomplish this result. There is no increased charge for film rental for the extra days you show the Paralta Play. That's the only way out for the exhibitor; and the distributor must let the exhibitor have these increased box office receipts. He made them. They belong to him and under our plan of distribution he gets them.

THE Paralta Plan is founded upon a thorough knowledge of actual local working conditions. Our plan of distribution is based upon absolute equity made possible through nothing on earth but the elimination of WASTE. We simply turn a great portion of the present Waste into cash.

You realize—or you soon will, if you follow our statements of the results of our investigations made during the past two years—that a great burden of waste and extravagance is being shouldered on to you, and that the only standard of film rentals is what can be squeezed out of you. There has been no limit. You pay the freight. In your rentals you pay all the costs of every kind, both sane and insane, with generous production and distribution profits added. If you did not pay all this there would be no production—no distribution. The producer and distributor could not live.

Think it over, Mr. Exhibitor, and then send us your name and address. Read our literature and study this remarkable new idea of distribution. This plan will save you money!

A penny post card or the attached coupon will put your name on our mailing list.

Facts and Comments

WHY should the organized exhibitors of this great country and of this splendid industry allow themselves to be exploited by a small coterie of men, seeking only their own advancement? Is it not because only a few exhibitors, and these very often those most easily led, have heretofore taken an interest in League organization? When our bigger men in the ranks of exhibitors take a hand to protect not only their own interests but to help their smaller and weaker brothers, we will hear less of the self-seeking politician and less of the bunk and hot air of self-appointed leaders in the higher councils of the exhibitors' organization.

THE doom of the deposit system will soon be sealed if exhibitors' organizations follow the lead of the Kansas League. The exchangemen will be just as glad as the exhibitors if a satisfactory method can be envolved that will do away with a system that has been a constant source of provocation and friction. The irresponsible exhibitor who enters into a contract and then regards it as merely "a scrap of paper" and his brother who "jumps" to avoid payment of his just debts should be eliminated for the benefit of the great majority of responsible exhibitors who conduct their business in a businesslike way.

LINKING the moving picture with the saloon and liquor interests is the unfair and underhanded favorite plan of some ministers in attacking the moving picture. It is somewhat unusual, however, to find a newspaper aiding in slander of this sort. One of the papers in a thriving Pennsylvania community is following this plan in an evident attempt to curry favor with a number of its readers. The evident bias of the editor shows so clearly, however, that it nullifies to a great extent the effect of this campaign of vilification. "There are none so blind as those that will not see" and wholesale condemnation of the pictures by ministers and others who never see any is prejudice, ignorance and intolerance that is happily becoming less and less evident.

A SHINING example of how the exhibitor organizations are being manipulated for the specific personal benefit of the present National President are the psuedo resolutions that have been introduced and passed at a few of the exhibitors' gatherings. The wording of the second clause of the one engineered through the Oklahoma convention is typical; it is as follows:

"Resolved that we deplore the fact that certain trade papers have seen fit to attack Mr. Ochs." Just which trade paper or papers this is aimed at we do not know, but we would ask the Oklahoma exhibitors if they are aware of the fact that the National President has been attacking all the trade papers ever since the last national convention in Chicago and solely to advance his own personal trade paper, the launching of which was being planned at that time. We hardly think the mover and seconder of the Oklahoma resolution and those who voted for it would have done so if they knew, for instance, how the National President spoke of this paper at the meeting at Portland, Oregon. If they did then they were simply willing tools in a not very savory transaction.

LEGISLATIVE chicanery is the term that best fits the activities of Assemblyman Heber Wheeler in his advocacy of the motion picture tax measure now before the New York state legislature at Albany. From his performances up to the present it is evident that he has acquired almost no information regarding the business he seeks to tax, consequently he has no conception of an equitable rate of taxation. For the third time he has caused the schedule to be reduced in the hope that he may overcome the opposition raised to his pet measure by the motion picture men. This is conclusive proof that he does not know what he is trying to do; that the time and the people's money which he spent so freely on his "smelling expedition" was wasted utterly. As the matter appears now there is but one way for Assemblyman Wheeler to save his face: that is to withdraw his bill. Then, if the legislature still believes the motion picture business should contribute to the state finances after it takes up the burden of a federal war tax, let it appoint other than pottering politicians of ancient vintage to make a study of the motion picture trade and ascertain the facts. In the meantime great credit is due Senator Walters for his stand on the measure. It is to be hoped that he will be able to "deliberately kill" the bill in the judiciary committee, of which he is chairman. It is an ill-advised, poorly drawn and an equally unnecessary bit of legislation.

That People May Be Free

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IT MAKES no difference where a splendid man of lofty ideals is born, in Paris or Petrograd, in Berlin or Budapest, New York or Naples, London or Tokio, his nationalism must yield to rationalism the moment he begins to think for himself. A very large number of the men who have come to America from countries across the surging seas, where they were placed by accident of birth, have done so because of a belief in reasonable self-government rather than in submission to self-elected authority. Some such men are among motion-picture producers and exhibitors, and this is a time for them to support high principles, that the greatest good may be for the greatest number.

In one respect our democratic form of government is like the new art of motion-picture production—it is not to be judged by its faulty examples. Neither the new art nor the new form of government is a perfect thing—both are susceptible of great improvement—both have made many mistakes—both are in a state of evolution, but both are dear to the hearts of the people.

We are living under new conditions to-day, probably a necessary part of our progress as a nation. Over the fruitful plains of the West has been spread such a warm and comfortable blanket of prosperity as those who till the soil have never known before in any part of the world. The prosperous man is at his ease—he does not care to be disturbed—this fighting business is a nuisance to him—it may be all very well for those poor fellows in Europe, but why should we get out of the easy chair and shake ourselves? But men had to fight for what we enjoy, real men, who dared eliminate autocracy that this fertile land of ours might give opportunity to freedom lovers of all nations.

The debt we owe to parents we pay to our children, thus passing beauty of heart and mind from generation to generation. The debt we owe to the men who sacrificed their lives and property that this country might be liberty's refuge we must pay to posterity by supporting the principles of freedom for the sake of a world full of happier men, women and children to follow us, and we have an important part to play in the character of pictures we are to produce and exhibit during the war.

Among the vast audiences attending moving pictures day by day there are all kinds of people, differing in talent as well as in taste, yet all capable of being rightly impressed. An idea has long prevailed, particularly among theatrical people, that the audience is largely composed of dolts and dunces. It may be very true that mediocrity predominates among plain ordinary people, but that fact makes stronger the plea that they should be given equal opportunity with the more fortunate to know the truth. The film of the future can gain in principle without loss of entertainment. Let us voluntarily eliminate the weak and false.

The stories we are showing appeal powerfully to the imagination in the best examples—they may be made to exert a tremendous influence in the transformation of character—they can easily become a big factor in social evolution. Just at this moment those who fear forces which destroyed past civilizations are at work in our own. We expect them to affect tender women and children, but real men can afford to die for a principle—their immortality lies in the good they accomplish—our pictures should inspire courage and faith among all to whom they are shown. It is part of our manhood to stand unalterably for general education, equalization of opportunity for freedom and rationalism the world over.

By "Rationalism" I mean thinking for one's self, specifically that adherence to the supremacy of reason which enables us to govern ourselves in opposition to slacker submission to uncontrolled and unlimited assumption of authority on the part of self-elected monarchs. By "Freedom" I mean the right to achieve a comparative equalization of intelligence that we may enjoy as a people all the material resources of society and leave a beautiful heritage of compassionate justice for millions upon millions in the generations to come.

These are principles for which we are striving. These are principles to be set forth in great pictures so that the intelligence of our people may be the gainer. There should be a closer relation between the improvements of our civilization and this new medium of thought and feeling. To simply use this new and powerful art as we find it is not to appreciate its grand possibilities. That new medium is the result of composite scientific discovery, intended to advance us as a people. It is therefore contemptibly mean to merely profit by what has been done and not contribute to improvement.

"War is altogether terrible," says one of the most prominent Germans in New York. "War with Germany is to our citizens of German descent undoubtedly the saddest war conceivable. But if this war brings universal military training to the boys of America, it will be worth everything it can possibly cost. Such training would be worth any price we could be asked to pay. Democracy we want, and we will revolt as quickly as any one against irresponsibility of government, but democracy without respect for the government it creates is a most undemocratic thing. Never will German-Americans become partisans of Germany against the United States."

Here is the utterance of a man strongly attached to the land of his derivation, who accepts the situation with heart ache, yet with sound good sense. He cannot join the call for troops with entire justice to his own sentiments, but he is brave enough to openly announce his adherence to the self-governing idea which gave vigor and endurance to the country of his adoption. He may not agree with Americans in this specific issue, but his patriotism is all the finer that it can endure an emotional strain. The larger question of democracy completely dominates the smaller one of parentage. He is an American from principle.

The pictured story can do more than the printed essay to stir the finer sentiments of the American heart at this critical moment in our history as a nation. Its appeal is more general and closer to the heart of the people who need inspiration. The printed word too often addresses the intellect alone. The pictured thought takes a long route to the mind, that through the emotional nature, but it reaches its end with greater force that it has enlisted sympathy on the way. No matter what the great truth that is to benefit our people, it is more apt to drive out misery and expel ignorance through our natural affections than the most accurate statement within the resources of language.

Producers, exhibitors and all in interest can be of service to the nation sheltering them, protecting the lives and property of a hundred million progressive people, by insisting upon more elevation of thought and greater dignity of purpose in what is to be shown on the screen. There will be contemptible slackers in the older arts of expression—let us keep this young one wholesome and clean, an inspiration for sweet women and manly men.

Churches and Federations on Sunday Opening

By Rev. W. H. Jackson

DURING the last few months the writer has had unusual opportunities to come in touch with many leaders of religious and public thought. As a result he is able to chronicle a more definite condition of the relations as they now exist between many religious leaders and state federations. Beginning with a deep rooted prejudice, supported with a reasonable cause to complain, many clergymen found seemingly just ground to oppose the use of moving pictures on Sunday. The great advance made by the producers of the pictures has to a very large degree removed the prejudice, and almost if not entirely removed causes of complaint. The lowest possible estimate now formed by the churches is that of all possible Sunday attractions the moving picture is the one capable of being the furthest removed from harm, besides being the one—the only one—which can positively be made productive of good.

If the highest possible estimate of the effectiveness of the Sunday pictures is to be made, it can readily be shown that they can be equally well used either in or out of the churches, a fact possible with no other form of public attraction, and a fact to which the church is awakened.

The next result of the realization is that the ministers are now more largely using the pictures on Sunday, and where they cannot use them themselves, they are interesting themselves in the class of pictures which the exhibitors are showing and seeking a certain amount of co-operation—a relationship long ago advised in these columns.

Among the federations, the State Federations of Labor are everywhere without one single exception lined up in favor of the Sunday pictures. It is an important thing to be observed by all classes of leaders, that the universal opinion of the working classes is one of the first and most important to be dealt with and, while their opinion may not always be right, it is always indicative of a desire which must be satisfied in the best possible way—a way leading to that which is right.

In every legislative hearing the labor representative has always been an attractive and capable speaker, one who has always made good his claim on behalf of those he represented and who never failed to carry conviction with him. It is well known that legislative bodies are always ready to give the fullest possible aid to the working classes, and whoever has the temerity to be in opposition to them must have a more than ordinary cause to present; their universal support of the Sunday pictures has always had great weight.

The State Federation of Women's Clubs are passing through a series of trials and tribulations on account of the moving pictures. This mental conflict is really a struggle between parties, akin to that which is found in the various legislatures of the states, and which always has been and only can be abolished by the renunciation of prejudice, and the acquisition of another sort of knowledge which is peculiarly a moving picture knowledge. Wherever this moving picture knowledge is acquired there is an immediate change in favor of the pictures which very shortly becomes an enthusiasm.

In a recent conversation with the president of one of these State Federations of Women's Clubs the writer was told that that particular club had just decided to support the Sunday picture measure, and were formally acquainting the State Legislature of that fact with the expressed wish that the use of Sunday pictures be legalized. If those clubs which are still in the conflict stages would only seek advice and "moving picture knowledge" they would readily fall in line behind those which have already decided this problem; nevertheless it can now go upon record these clubs are very rapidly becoming the friends of the pictures under all circumstances. It is not surprising that these results can be made known. Federations stand for education and progress, likewise do the moving pictures. With one common aim they must meet somewhere; the Sunday question has provided the field of battle, but not to fight but rather to sign peace compacts.

Conventions Today and Yesterday

SAM SPEDON.

THOSE of you who have come into the motion picture field within the last two or three years can hardly appreciate the old days of the ballyhoo and brass band, when our conventions and expositions were fifty-seven varieties of exhibitors, producers, "movie" stars and fans; the days when the approaches to the exposition and convention halls, ball rooms and theaters were congested by a surging mass of humanity eager to get a glimpse of their idols and ideals.

Six years ago there were more exhibitors than there are now. Men from all walks of life swept into the business on the tidal wave of the moving picture craze and quick returns. Conventions and expositions were the get-together events, which everybody and more besides attended. The man who could flash the biggest bank roll, make the most noise and spill the most champagne could float almost anything. Souvenirs and novelties were like fireworks at an old-time Fourth-o'-July celebration. The writer knows. He helped them do it. It was part of his publicity work at the time. The memory of those big times still linger and so do the precedents they set. They made people think moving pictures a joke, an ephemeral fad with no substantial foundation or lasting quality. They brought into it a lot of undesirable elements we find it hard to get rid of.

Things have changed. We are now taking moving pictures and ourselves more seriously. We realize, some of us too late, that they have developed into an industry the fifth largest in the world. The whole world realizes the importance of the motion picture industry and we are expected to conduct it as becomes its importance, and as members and representatives of it we are expected to conduct ourselves in the same way. Our conventions are becoming dignified by a sincere and earnest desire to advance the industry to its proper place and give to it that distinction it deserves. They should be attended by representative men who should see that officers representative of the industry and its several branches are elected to fill the offices. Not men who pose as representative leaders and play peanut politics to hold the offices to keep themselves in the limelight or land a "job" to make some easy money.

The National Convention of the National Exhibitors' League of America will be called at Chicago on the fourteenth of July to elect officers and transact business. Have you given this matter serious consideration? Do it now!

Imprison Makers of Indecent Pictures

That Would Be the Finest Thing Industry Could Do, William A. Brady Tells Brooklyn Exhibitors

THE finest thing the men in the motion picture industry could do would be to send some man to state prison for making indecent pictures, declared William A. Brady at Coney Island on the night of Wednesday, May 2. With Rooseveltian vigor the veteran theatrical man was speaking as the official head of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. His sentiment was heartily cheered by the two hundred men present representing every branch of the industry in New York City.

WILLIAM BRANDT,
President Brooklyn Exhibitors.

The occasion was a testimonial banquet to the outgoing officers of the Brooklyn local of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. William Brandt, the progressive chief of the local, was toastmaster. Practically every exhibitor of Brooklyn was present. Every exchange in the city was represented. Among those at the speakers' table were William A. Brady, Walter W. Irwin, Nathan Vidaver, the Rev. Dr. Herman L. Martin, Commissioner of Highways Lindberg, Sheriff Riegelman of Kings County, William L. Sherry, Timothy A. Shea, counsel for the Children's Aid Society of Brooklyn; Lieutenant Eugene Roberts, formerly of the Twelfth Canadian Battery; Samuel I. Berman, of the Stanley Playhouse, Bensonhurst, to whose untiring effort much of the success of the dinner was due: Samuel H. Trigger, Rudolph Sanders, first vice-president of the local; H. Clark Mooney, second vice-president; William Bland, secretary; Samuel Lesselbaum, recording secretary; Robert Israel, treasurer, and Adolph Stockhammer, sergeant-at-arms.

The dinner was a success from every angle. The menu was exceptional. The speaking was of a high order and in the main had to do with the problems now confronting the industry in New York State. At the close of the speeches there was a vaudeville entertainment provided by Fally Markus. Among the performers were Hilda Schnee, Marie Laurient, Frank Sherman, Mathias Trio, Pierce and Burke, and Rippel and Fairfax. It was a good show, but it took on something of the nature of one-half of a two-ringed attraction. The opposing factor was Lieutenant Roberts, who as soon as the speaking closed was surrounded by a group of men varying from ten to thirty in number. The bunch was oblivious to the jibes of Monologuist Frank Sherman, who finally gave up the attempt to separate it.

President Brandt Toasts the Chief Magistrate.

"The exhibitors of Brooklyn welcome you here this evening and extend their most cordial greetings," said President Brandt as the cigars were lighted. "A little over a year ago the exhibitors of this great borough recognized the necessity of getting together for their mutual welfare, and so an organization was created to promote the interests of those engaged in exhibiting motion pictures in Brooklyn. We organized to reform abuses relatives to the exhibition of motion pictures, organized to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions, organized for co-operation and for the improvement of the entire industry, and, lastly, organized to promote a friendly feeling between all engaged in the trade.

"That we have not labored in vain is evidenced by the fact that not only is every branch of the industry represented here tonight by its most prominent men, but also there are here the most prominent men in the civic and political life of this borough. Today practically every theater of importance in this borough is a member of this organization. We are commencing to realize that we are a factor in the life of this community, and as such we propose to see to it that we are accorded just treatment, be it by religious, fraternal or political bodies. We are commencing to feel the power of our screens as a great aid to the cause of our friends, and with a virtual monopoly of the animated means of conveying messages to the quarter of a million persons of this borough who patronize our theaters every night, we are in a position to help those friends. In conclusion, I propose a toast to a friend of ours, the Chief Magistrate of the nation, President Wilson."

The toast was drunk standing. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and the diners vigorously helped it out.

Absurd to Attack the Industry, Says Irwin.

"It is a great privilege, for which the industry is indebted to the exhibitors of Brooklyn, to be able to sit down and talk man to man with the makers of the Legislature," said Walter W. Irwin. "It is an old maxim that the makers of kings are greater than the kings. Thank God, within a short time there will be no more kings. (Applause.) It seems absurdly stupid to attack an industry that means so much to the people. The good Dr. Martin, in saying grace tonight, testified to the social work that the motion picture is doing, to the fact that it is eliminating drunkenness, saving homes, making better husbands—and yet this industry is singled out from all the other means of amusements for an attack, which, if passed, would mean annihilation. It seems absurd that the Legislature should entertain a bill which is in direct contradiction to the report of the committee which formulated the bill.

"Every place we are attacked we find the same attackers. Primarily the Rev. Dr. Chase—and in mentioning him I do not speak with the slightest bit of disrespect. It is recognized from the arguments of Dr. Chase and Dr. Craft that they are either guilty of prejudice or else they do not know the voice of their own communities. If the great American people ever come to realize that the attacks all over this country upon us mean attacks upon their rights and that these attacks will hamper an industry so that it will not be able to meet their demands for improvement and education and entertainment the American people will quickly right the wrong.

William A. Brady.

"The screen is a means of expression that can throw the light upon the acts of public officials far better than can the newspaper. At the rate the motion picture is developing it is an absolute necessity that we have it as a means of education and entertainment primarily and also to inform the people of the facts of everyday life. The day is not far distant when the motion picture will be used much more than is the paper to inform the people of this country as to the manner in which the stewardship of their officers is being conducted.

"I am told tonight that an amendment has been made to the bill now pending at Albany so that excessive taxation will be eliminated, but, gentlemen, the question of censorship still exists. In other words, we are picked out as an outlaw business, discriminated against. We are singled out, while other amusements that are devoid of educational factors, with the exception of the stage, are allowed to go on without annoyance.

Mr. Irwin pleaded for a tax or license upon all business, if upon any. Speaking of the great new field that has been opened to the motion picture in Russia, he said in closing: "Probably no other medium will do so much for the welfare of Russia as the motion picture. It will teach all peoples that there is very little difference in human nature—that practically we all speak the same language."

Brady, the "Human Dynamo of the Industry."

Mr. Brady was introduced by President Brandt as "the human dynamo of the motion picture industry." In opening the president of the N. A. M. P. I. talked of the educational side of the motion picture. He protested against the efforts of those who would strangle a young industry, "the greatest educator." "That is what the Legislature of New York is contemplating, as well as the Legislatures of many other states," he said. "Because a few years ago many of the pioneers made large fortunes there is a belief that motion pictures represent gold mines, that you men are picking up twenty-dollar gold pieces in the street. If the Legislature would come down here and interview you exhibitors its members would find out that you are not picking up twenty-dollar gold pieces, but that you are devoting most of your twenty-dollar gold pieces to paying the salaries of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

"It seems to me that the greatest enemy of this industry is the man who with malice aforethought puts an indecent idea on the screen. The reason why your representatives when they talk to the Legislatures of New York or Pennsylvania or Illinois are treated like outlaws and second-story men is not because of themselves or the industry they represent, but because of the small percentage of men who are circulating indecent pictures. (Applause.) I have been providing entertainment in the United States for nearly thirty years, fully thirty years, and in the theater I have seen the indecent play come and go. I claim to be no prude. I have produced indecent plays, when I was a kid, but in this age of wisdom any man who would attempt to make an indecent picture is making a big mistake. In the long run he is injuring the industry, driving away his people and bringing disgrace upon himself. I say today as the president of the National Association that the finest thing this industry could do would be to send some man to state prison for making indecent pictures. (Applause.)

"If you do that, gentlemen of my industry, you will have a standing in the public eye, in the legislative hall, that is denied you now. The first essential when you enter a court-room is to come into court with clean hands, and when you come into a legislative hall you must come with clean hands. You must put your foot down and prevent that very, very small percentage of men in our business from making indecent pictures. The maker of motion pictures is the greatest enemy of the industry."

Mr. Brady took up the Sunday question, saying that all of his immediate family went to church on Sunday. Having attended church, he contended, no one had a right to deny them the privilege of attending a motion picture theater if they chose.

"I called the attention of the Legislature to the fact that in the state of New York there were four million good citizens who did not celebrate their Sabbath on Sunday," went on Mr. Brady. "I asked the Legislature why it did not close up on Saturday. These citizens have a right to go to motion pictures on Sunday if they choose. I claimed that it was discrimination on the part of the Legislature to force one set of people to celebrate Sunday as some other set of people decided they should celebrate it.

"You men and women have a gold mine in which you have only scratched the dirt. You don't know the game you are in. You don't know the chances you have got. I have got a boy in a prep school. If that boy came out of school tomorrow and had to pick out his path in life and I had a voice in the decision I would put him into the executive end of the motion picture industry, not into the producing end. I would put him into the greatest business in the world, a business of the greatest opportunity, with the greatest chances for the expansion of ideas, a business that is simply creeping at the present moment. Don't think it is only an entertainment, to make people laugh and cry. The chances are boundless, but we are tieing a loadstone about our neck when we talk about entertainment only.

"Take yourselves seriously and make your neighbors feel that you do. And remember that the dirty newspaper gets nowhere, the dirty picture gets nowhere. Suppress them, gentlemen." (Long continued applause.)

The Picture Back of the Trenches.

The next speaker was Lieutenant Roberts, formerly of the Twelfth Canadian Artillery, the first American to be released to work with the new United States Army. The lieutenant had spent eighteen months in France and had been through the Somme battle of last year. He spoke briefly, but there was a directness and an eloquence in it that accorded the lieutenant the closest attention.

"I am just back from eighteen months of hell," he said. "If you could see those boys come out of the trenches going back to their rest camps, just aching to be amused, you would realize the importance of the motion picture as it is today. It is the only thing that will take their minds from the work of cutting German barbed wire under fire and all the dangers that fall to a soldier in these days of war-making machinery."

Sheriff Pays Tribute to Brady.

"When I was asked to join you this evening and to talk to you I expected to listen, perhaps, to the perfunctory speeches such as we hear at ordinary banquets, but I tell you, gentlemen, I have never listened to a speech at a banquet that I recall that was so filled with impressiveness, such an absolute sermon, as was the speech of Mr. William A. Brady," said Sheriff Riegelman. "I wish that some of the men who are, as you say, endeavoring to strangle the motion picture industry and who stand in their pulpits on Sundays could have listened to that sermon, because there is more meat in what Mr. Brady said, more that spells progress to our civil, our moral and our educational life, than we could get in a dozen Sundays in all the pulpits in Brooklyn. I can see why this industry is successful, and I hope you will have the guidance of a man of his wonderfully clear vision for a long time to come. I will say this, that the moving picture industry cannot be strangled by this Legislature or any other Legislature.

"If the industry sticks to its purposes and presents clean, decent, moral pictures the future of the industry is unlimited. You gentlemen have a mission to perform, a field to fulfill; you form today one of the most important educational factors we have with us."

Shea Pleads for the Children.

"I think that the policy of repression in regard to the children's situation is wrong," declared Mr. Shea. "It seems to me that instead of a policy of repression we ought to have a policy of regulation." The counsel for the Children's Aid Society pleaded for a law regarding admissions that would be in conformity with the spirit of the times. He said the present law was sporadic, depending entirely upon the action of the police for its enforcement. He quoted a magistrate who had told him that he wanted his children to go to the pictures, that he considered them safer in the theater than in the streets. He urged the motion picture men to get behind a measure that would provide better for the amusement, relaxation and recreation demands of the children of the state.

Other speakers were Commissioner Lindberg and Samuel H. Trigger, president of the Manhattan branch.

The following telegram was received from Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell:

"Unforeseen circumstances prevent my presence. I regret this very much, especially in view of the co-operation always given my department and the rest of the city government by your association. Very best wishes for a splendid banquet."

The committee in charge of the banquet were William Hollander, chairman; Samuel I. Berman, M. W. Lane, William Rich and Charles Fisher.

BELL SLATED FOR PICTURE COMMISSIONER.

George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses in New York City, will be appointed State Commissioner of Motion Pictures if the Wheeler bill becomes a law. Governor Charles S. Whitman has sanctioned the appointment of Mr. Bell, while Assemblyman Heber Wheeler and all members of the committee which has spent three months in an investigation of the motion picture industry is in favor of Mr. Bell.

From an authoritative source, it was learned at Albany this last week that Governor Whitman has even gone so far in a closed conference as to suggest that the salary of the State Commissioner of Motion Pictures be placed at $7,500, or $500 over the figures originally intended. It is said that Governor Whitman had Commissioner Bell in mind at the time the suggestion was made and which resulted in the Wheeler bill being amended in the Assembly on Monday night. According to Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Bell is eminently fitted for the position and his appointment would be gratifying not only to all interests at Albany, but to the motion picture industry as well.

Wheeler Again Reduces Tax Estimates

By C. L. Grant

All Schedules Cut to Nominal Figures in Hope of Overcoming Opposition—Walker "Sunday" Bill Advanced in Senate

AMENDED for the second time within a week, the Wheeler bill now stands a fair chance of surviving at Albany, providing that it is reported out of the Senate Judiciary committee as seems likely as the result of changes that have been made during the last two or three days with that sole idea in mind. Even if the bill passes, its identity as a revenue producing measure has vanished, for in its latest revised form it cannot bring in more than $70,000 a year, a sum that dwindles into a mere insignificance when appropriations of a half a million or more are every day occurrences and bills are passed that are calculated to return millions to the state during the next twelve months.

The latest amendment to the Wheeler bill was made last Monday night when the author of the measure, after carefully going over the situation with Governor Charles S. Whitman and Senator Elon R. Brown and others, offered a provision which increases the salary of the proposed commissioner of motion pictures from $7,000 to $7,500 a year, and with a further provision that the age of all operators throughout the state, irrespective of the size of the communities in which they work, be fixed at 21 years. When the bill was framed and amended for the first time the age of operators was fixed at 21 years in the cities and at 18 years in the smaller places. A straight age is now to prevail throughout the entire state.

The motion picture industry certainly lost nothing by their trip and hearing at Albany two weeks ago. Instead they gained thousands and possibly hundreds of thousands of dollars by preventing the unjust taxation of the business.

License Fees Greatly Reduced.

When Assemblyman Wheeler and his associates first framed the bill, through the assistance of the State Bill Drafting Commission, they fixed the annual license fee of the producer at $300. This has now been cut to $5, a reduction of $295, while the fee that was to have been charged the distributor was also fixed at $300. This has likewise been cut to $5. In the original bill the exhibitor was to have been taxed a sum running all the way from $5 to $200, depending on the size of his house.

In its latest form the Wheeler bill now provides that the annual fee of the exhibitor shall be but $5, irrespective of the seating capacity of the theater. This, in a way, is figured as being far more equal than in the first instance, where there was absolutely no provision made for vaudeville houses and others of a like sort where frequently a short film is shown in connection with the regular program, yet that film would have either subjected the owner of the theater to the payment of a large tax or made him do away with that portion of his show, which to many is often the most enjoyable part of an evening. The tax which it is proposed to charge for the licensing of operators, namely $2, is the only one that remains unchanged and consequently unreduced.

Big Cut in Footage Tax.

The injustice of the first footage tax proposed by the Wheeler committee, and which brought forth such strong protest, that it has now been very materially reduced, is shown in a comparison of the original proposed tax, and the tax as it is now embodied in the bill which, if reported out of committee, will go to a vote at Albany during the next few days.

Original proposed footage tax.
Up to $2	¼ ct.
$2 to $3	½ ct.
$3 to $4	¾ ct.
$4 to $5	1 ct.
$5 to $6	1¼ ct.
$6 to $7	1½ ct.
$7 to $8	1¾ ct.
$8 to $10	2¼ ct.
$10 to $12	2¾ ct.
$12 to $14	3¼ ct.
$14 to $16	3¾ ct.
$16 and over	4¼ ct.

Present proposed footage tax.
Up to $2.50	1/10 ct.
$2.50 to $5	1/5 ct.
$5 to $7.50	3/10 ct.
$7.50 to $10	4/10 ct.
$10 and over	½ ct.

Assemblyman Wheeler in discussing his modified bill to a representative of the Moving Picture World, stated that it was figured that the measure, if passed, would return from $50,000 to $70,000 annually to the state, with the latter figure certainly the maximum.

"They cannot protest against the amount of the tax," said Mr. Wheeler with a smile, "for we have given them all they wanted and more too."

There is a little difference of opinion, however, between Assemblyman Wheeler and Mr. Thornton, the accountant who was present and spoke at the hearing, over the amount of positive print that is put out in this state during the year. Mr. Wheeler is emphatic that it will run about 35,000,000 feet, while Mr. Thornton takes the stand that it will be nearly 50,000,000. Assemblyman Wheeler in refuting Mr. Thornton's figures says that his estimate is based on the sworn statement of 37 of the big film producers of New York State, who gave the committee both the cost of the negative and the footage, leaving no guesswork to the committee, at least along that line.

Assemblyman Wheeler was asked if the big reduction in the license fees, as are now embodied in the amended bill, came as the result of an agreement with the Senate or some Senate body, with the idea that the bill would be passed, or at least be allowed to come out of committee.

"Partially" was Mr. Wheeler's rather non-committal reply.

Mr. Wheeler freely admits that the representative gathering of moving picture men practically sealed the measure's doom in its first form. Senator Henry Walters, chairman of the Senate Judiciary who has steadfastly opposed reporting the bill out of committee, was impressed by the statements of men such as William A. Brady, Martin W. Littleton, Mr. Irwin and others of a like calibre at the hearing. While no one denies that there has been and is money being made in the motion picture business, the idea of singling out that one industry from all the others and burdening it with a tax, which in the first instance, was heavy enough to cripple and crush many of the firms to earth, was to Senator Walters' idea of things, a wrong. He made no hesitation in saying so to others about the Senate Chamber.

Wheeler Has No Idea of Cost.

Just how much the new department, if it is ever created, will cost is a problem that neither Assemblyman Wheeler or any of his committee are even attempting to solve these days. First of all, they would like to see the bill reported out of committee, next they want to see it passed, even if it is in its present form, and after that, they say, it will be time enough to talk about the expenses of the commission. There is an interesting little item, however, in connection with Monday night's amendment to the Wheeler bill. That item asked for an appropriation of $50,000 to meet the running expenses of the commission for ten months. This length of time is specified as the state's fiscal year now begins on July 1st, and the Wheeler bill, if it is passed, becomes effective September 1st.

The Wheeler bill, when viewed from the committee's standpoint, has certainly had hard sledding during the last two weeks or so. No sooner did it become noised about that the bill was intended to tax all four branches of the industry to the limit, than men prominent in the industry got busy and did the best possible thing under the circumstances. They came to Albany and in a clear, forceful way presented irrefutable arguments that made themselves felt more than any similar arguments that have been presented at any hearing during the present session.

There is just one more viewpoint that can be taken of the Wheeler bill in its modified form. It may be passed at this session with license fees at the minimum figures, and then gaining a foothold, it may be brought before the Legislature next year by a measure which will serve to increase the fees to somewhere near the original figures.

What the Wheeler Fiasco Has Cost.

In securing the information which has been used in forming the ground work of the bill introduced on April 12, the Wheeler Investigating committee has spent about $12,200. The bill twice amended is still tied up in committee. While the exact figures of the committee's expenditures are still indefinite, the fact that Assemblyman Wheeler this week asked for an appropriation of $7,200 from the Legislative Contingent Fund to meet outstanding indebtedness clearly indicates that the original appropriation of $5,500 has been spent and as much more. At the close of each session outstanding bills of various committees are taken care of by such procedure. It is no uncommon thing for a committee to exceed its appropriation, in fact it is most common. For instance the Wicks committee, starting out with an appropriation of $25,000, has now asked for $30,000 additional out of which various bills will be met.

The amount which ex-Senator Harvey Hinman, counsel for the Wheeler committee, will get for his services is not being noised about the Capitol. Members of the committee say that they do not know what Mr. Hinman is to be paid. Undoubtedly, some definite figure has been agreed upon by Senator Hinman and Assemblyman Wheeler, for the $7,200 is supposed to take care of all bills.

It has come to light that there was a conference at Senator Mills' rooms a few nights ago at which Assemblyman Wheeler, Mr. Hinman, Senator Adon Brown and Senator Mills were among those present. It is understood that certain ones agreed to aid the Wheeler bill in getting out of committee and onto the floor if the license tax and the footage fees were materially reduced. After considerable discussion, this was agreed to. At the same time, it is said, that Senator Hinman informed those present as to the amount which he proposed to charge as counsel for the committee. That this is no small sum is generally conceded, for Senator Hinman is of a type that likes to be well paid for his services, and the fact that $12,000 will be needed to meet the committee's expenses, which have been low along other lines, furnishes additional proof.

WALKER PUSHES SUNDAY BILL ALONG.

The Senate at Albany worked up to the Walker Sunday Motion Picture bill last Tuesday and then proceeded to quickly sidestep the issue for bills on which there were no controversies. When the Walker bill was reached cries of "Pass it on," "Let it go over" and others sounded through the Chamber until it seemed that Senator James J. Walker was the only one present who was really ready to get down to business and have the fate of the bill settled, at least so far as the Legislature was concerned. Even if the Walker bill should pass at this stage of proceedings, it becomes a thirty-day bill and can be killed by the Governor during the next month.

When the Walker bill advanced in the Senate a few days ago Senator Elon R. Brown, the Republican Majority Leader, who was against the bill in its original form, wanted to know if anyone had moved for its advancement.

"Certain, it's moved," said Senator Walker, with much emphasis.

"This bill is the most important measure on the calendar and, in fact, it is the real movie bill. A million people in this State demand the passage of this bill," continued Senator Walker. "They are chiefly the working people who have small chance to see the pictures except on Sundays."

"In behalf of that million people the bill will be advanced," said Senator George Slater of Port Chester, who was presiding at the time.

"I'm with you," declared Senator Ogden L. Mills to Senator Walker.

Freuler Discusses Proposed War Tax

Believes It an Unjust Burden Upon the Motion Picture Industry—Ten Per Cent. Too High.

"THE war tax measure now before Congress, proposing a tax of ten per cent. on tickets of admission for theaters, is in my opinion likely to work an unjust burden upon the public and the picture industry," said President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, discussing war legislation at his Chicago office.

"At the distance I am not sufficiently informed of the conceptions which actuate the statesmen who drafted this measure to analyze them with assurance.

"It seems probable that they conceive the motion picture business to be infinitely more profitable than it really is in all its branches. I am sure that if they had the real truth before them they would find that a tax of ten per cent. is more than most picture theaters can bear and yet pay a reasonable profit.

"It is my hope and understanding that the purpose of Congress is not to put anybody out of business, but simply to raise war revenue. That being true, I fear that the ten per cent. motion picture theater admission tax will fail of its purpose, and at the same time strike a serious blow at the most wholesome, low priced popular pastime of the people.

"I must again turn back to my often repeated declaration that the motion picture is simply a form of publication, an expression of the press, a form of thought transmission using pictures instead of printed words. It has long been a theory of the people of the United States that the press was an important public servant. Everything possible in the earlier history of our country was done to encourage a free press, to encourage the dissemination of news and information, as the part of the education of a free people.

"I wish very much that this true view of the purposes and functions of the motion picture might be more forcefully borne into the minds of our legislators in all legislative bodies. I wish, too, that more of the members of our various judiciary factors of government might more clearly understand what this celluloid medium of expression really is.

"It is too often argued that the motion picture is purely an entertainment—it is practically always so treated by the governments, city, state and national. It is no more entirely a medium of entertainment than the typical newspaper, with its funny columns, its comic cartoons and advice to the lovelorn.

"The motion picture serves the people and their Government. It should not be a target for every "get the money" movement in state and nation. The picture's rights demand a degree of appreciation and conservation.

"I am sure that I am as patriotic and sincerely in support of the government as any citizen may be, but I am sure that the government may well consider a somewhat lighter tax upon the motion picture theater, if proportionate justice is to be had."

An Exhibitor's View

Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., Says It Should be Paid by the Theater Patron.

The futility of any attempt on the part of the exhibitors of the country endeavoring to defeat the tax to be imposed upon moving picture exhibitions in common with all other amusements is pointed out by Harry M. Crandall, of Washington, D. C., one of the best posted motion picture men in this section.

"Amusements cannot very well be considered necessities," said Mr. Crandall to the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, "and those who operate them must expect to pay a tax, in this case perhaps a heavier one than would otherwise be looked for, when the members of Congress are looking all over the field of activity to find the things the taxation of which will not bring about hardship. Now, according to my way of looking at it, and as the tax now seems inevitable, I think the exhibitors should all look upon it as being a proper move on the part of Congress, providing that they place the tax where it belongs—upon those who seek the amusement, not upon those who dispense it.

"To place a tax of ten per cent. on the gross receipts of the theaters upon the exhibitors would be a hardship that large members of them could not survive in a business way. There are so many now that do not make so large a percentage out of their business, and there are others that operate at a loss for considerable periods of time, of course later catching up, or they would not remain in business. To place a burdensome tax upon these would indeed be a hardship for them.

"The Government does not want to close up any theaters; to do so would simply have the effect of lessening the revenue to be derived from this source. If it is absolutely necessary to impose this tax then there is only one way to do so and guarantee the existence of the theaters. As will be remembered, during the Spanish-American War every check written by a business man or other individual had to have attached to it a revenue stamp before the check could be cashed. There was then written into the law a clause providing that these stamps had to be affixed by the maker of the check, and it was illegal for the banks to assume the expense of the tax. The motive for doing this was that if the banks were allowed to pay for the stamps, many of the smaller ones might find their overhead charges so great as to prevent them from operating at a profit, while, on the other hand, to attempt to make their customers bear the burden would result in discrimination against such banks, for these customers would immediately withdraw their patronage to the more prosperous institutions.

"Now," continued Mr. Crandall, "the same conditions will prevail at this time with respect to the theaters as prevailed in the case of the banks in 1898. If the stamp tax remains with the exhibitors to absorb there will be many of them driven from the field, if the amount of the tax is anywhere near ten per cent., for they now have to pay about all the taxes that the business will stand. If the exhibitors find it optional with them as to whether they or the public shall pay for the stamps the same results practically will obtain. My recommendation to Congress, should I get an opportunity to state my views, would be to adopt in connection with any tax that may be imposed a clause making it incumbent upon the visitor at the theaters, the ball parks, and other places of amusement, to pay the tax. That will insure a much larger collection for the Government because of keeping all of the places running, and will not, in the end, be much of a burden upon the payee."

HEARING ON WAR TAX BILL.

Lively Fight Expected in Congress Before Theater Revenue Measure Becomes a Law.

The Senate Finance Committee has just concluded to hold a series of "limited hearings" upon the proposed new revenue measure which the House Ways and Means Committee is promulgating. A great deal of dissatisfaction has arisen over the coming law, partly because of the manner in which the committee has sought to draft it.

The first move on the part of the committee was to appoint a subcommittee of five, including three Democrats and two Republicans, with instructions to bring in reasonable recommendations to the whole committee. Instead of doing this, a matter that would have been accomplishable in a day or two, this subcommittee set about writing the entire bill, utilizing about two weeks on that duty. The other members of the committee, finding that the subcommittee would not take them into their confidence, got the axe out and when the draft of the bill came before them there followed a very hot fight. But the full committee adopted the same tactics that the subcommittee did—put the lid down tight and refused to let the other members of Congress in on what they were doing.

Now, assurances are given that a second fight will commence when the bill comes up for enactment in the House, and later when it reaches the Senate it will practically be rewritten. As it now stands, it is believed that there is contained in the measure a proposal to place a tax of ten per cent. upon the gross receipts of all places of amusements. Whether the House of Representatives itself and later the Senate Finance Committee and the Senate will accept this proposal cannot be answered, but a scrap is expected in any event.

SUGGESTIONS IN ORDER.

The following announcement regarding "Baby Week" has been sent in to us which will no doubt be of interest to many of our readers. It is as follows:

National "Baby Week" is announced for May by the Children's Bureau and the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Hundreds of neighborhoods, towns and cities are preparing for more or less elaborate celebrations.

Other hundreds of communities will utilize earlier or later dates; indeed "Baby Week" this year will be almost a continuous performance. Seldom will the sun set and fail to rise again upon the opening of a "Baby Week" somewhere in the United States or the outlying possessions.

The Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C., will send a wealth of information and suggestion free of charge, including a selected list of motion pictures on infant welfare, milk and flies.

A special service is suggested to your readers who may know of available films on the above subjects. Frantic calls are being sent from all sections of the country for films which cannot be secured because of the conflicting demands.

If a reader knows of even a single unengaged print which is not hopelessly "rainy" will he please look up his local "Baby Week" committee, and at the same time notify the Children's Bureau at Washington and send word to the writer at 130 East 22nd street, New York City? E. G. ROUTZAHN.

"BIRTH CONTROL" BARRED FROM NEW YORK.

"Birth Control," the propaganda picture produced under the supervision of Mrs. Margaret Sanger, who obtained considerable notoriety as an exponent of the subject used as a title for her picture, will not be shown in New York City. License Commissioner Bell refused to permit the picture to be shown at the Park theater, New York, on May 6.

Commissioner Bell said that he based his action on many complaints received. He said an indication of the attitude of motion picture folk in general was the vote recently cast by the Brooklyn Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which organization unanimously disapproved of the film and agreed not to show it.

Mr. Bell said his action was not to be interpreted as the passing of judgment on the right or wrong of birth control propaganda. He feels that it is going rather far to classify a birth control film as theatrical entertainment.

Ex-Postmaster General Joins Vitagraph

Frank H. Hitchcock Elected to Directorate and Made General Counsel—Officers and Other Directors Also Elected.

FRANK H. HITCHCOCK, former United States Postmaster General, has been elected a director, chairman of the board of directors and general counsel of the Vitagraph Company of America. He became officially connected with the producers of Blue Ribbon features on Friday, April 27, when he was selected as a director. Mr. Hitchcock, at the annual meeting of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, held on April 23, was elected a director in that organization. V-L-S-E is the distributing organization for Vitagraph, and is owned exclusively by the latter.

Frank H. Hitchcock.

President Albert E. Smith, of the Vitagraph company, said of the association of Mr. Hitchcock with the company:

"Mr. Hitchcock is the very man we need. He is a trained business organizer of the very highest type. Any person even remotely acquainted with the motion picture industry knows that its greatest need is 'organization.' Not only am I glad to welcome Mr. Hitchcock as a business associate, but it is a pleasure to me to welcome him personally. Anything I might say regarding his work would be beside the question. That will speak for itself."

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director-general and one of the orginal organizers of Vitagraph, was equally enthusiastic over the acquisition of Mr. Hitchcock.

"He is just the man we have needed," he said. "His organization ability will make itself felt not only in the Vitagraph Company, but throughout the entire industry. The association of Mr. Hitchcock with the Vitagraph Company means that we will remain right at the head of the industry, intrenched there so strongly that we will be able to repel all attacks of competitors."

At the same meeting at which Mr. Hitchcock was elected a director of V-L-S-E other directors elected were: Albert E. Smith, Clendenin J. Rayan, Walter W. Irwin, J. Stuart Blackton and H. H. Vreeland. Following the election of the directors, officers were elected as follows: President, Albert E. Smith; vice-president, Clendenin J. Ryan; treasurer, general manager and secretary, Walter W. Irwin.

Mr. Irwin called the attention of the stockholders to the credit showing made by the exhibition patrons of V-L-S-E, which he considered rather remarkable and decidedly complimentary to the exhibitors. Of the gross business of the company for the year but three tenths of one per cent. is unpaid, and of this seventy-five per cent. is collectible, leaving the company with bad debts of less than one tenth of one per cent.

FILM PIRATE CONVICTED.

Herman Abramovitz, alias Herman Abrams, was convicted before Judge Robert E. Crowe, in the Chicago criminal court on May 2, on a charge of film piracy preferred by the Mutual Film Corporation. Abranovitz was found guilty of having received and sold three stolen Charlie Chaplin comedies, "The Count," "The Vagabond" and "The Fireman."

These films were abstracted from the vaults of the Mutual Corporation in Chicago last September, and were disposed of by Abramovitz to a film dealer in Omaha, who in turn sold them to McLean and Walters, proprietors of the Lyric theater in Sioux City, Ia.

The property was recovered in October by E. W. Stoddard, assistant general counsel of the Mutual, at Sioux City. Abrams was arrested and bound over to the Cook County grand jury, which indicted him.

H. O. Davis Resigns

General Manager of Universal City Retires—Highly Complimented by Vice-President Cochrane.

H. O. DAVIS, general manager of Universal City, has resigned from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and his resignation has been accepted by the board of directors. As an evidence of the regret with which the company has accepted Mr. Davis' resignation the following extracts from a letter to Mr. Davis are presented. The letter was written by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"This is a sort of good-bye letter in which I want to say, first of all, that I am mighty sorry we could not induce you to stay with the company and go on with your good work. It was only when you seemed to sigh for other worlds to conquer that I finally cast my vote with the others to accept your resignation.

"When I look back eighteen months and recall the unbusinesslike conditions that prevailed in our Western studios, and then draw a contrast with the present high class organization, I realize that you have accomplished the impossible, and I want to thank you and congratulate you not only on my own account, but on behalf of the company.

"The fact that you have actually reduced our costs so sharply in the very face of advancing prices on all sorts of labor and material is a great big thing; but a still bigger one is the fact that you have improved our quality so remarkably while chopping down the costs. You are leaving with a one hundred per cent. record of achievement. That's pretty fair."

Stereoscopic Motion Pictures

Exhibited by the Standard Films Industries, Inc., Proves Decided Advance Has Been Made in Picture Projection.

ON WEDNESDAY, May 2, an exhibition of stereoscopic motion pictures was given in New York City by the Standard Films Industris, Inc. Louis B. Jennings, president of the company, made an announcement before the exhibition, in which he stated that stereoscopic motion pictures were now an assured fact, and that the Standard Company had perfected a system which would make possible this eagerly sought method of projecting the photoplay. In order to permit the spectators to judge for themselves how much truth there was in his assertion, several hundred feet of film was run off, made up of bits from a number of different photoplays. Each section was shown twice. The first time by the old method; the second time after the film had been subjected to the new process.

At a first glance the only noticeable thing about the latter film was its greater clearness. A little careful study revealed the fact that this clearness was owing to an accentuated stereoscopic effect in the film. This is especially evident in what might be termed the minor distances—the wrinkles in a coat sleeve or the manner in which an eyeglass cord stands out from the surface back of it. The third dimension has, of course, always been in evidence on the screen, but not to the degree now made possible by the stereoscopic invention of the Standard Company.

President Jennings claims that ordinary film, after being treated to the new process, may be projected by any make of machine that has been provided with certain extra attachments.

JOSEPH HENABERRY ENGAGED BY FAIRBANKS.

Joseph Henaberry, who created the role of Abraham Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," who assisted D. W. Griffith in the producing of "Intolerance," and who recently completed an engagement as a Fine Arts director, has been selected by Producer John Emerson to serve in the capacity of first assistant. Emerson, who is under contract to produce the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft plays, is surrounding himself with a staff of men who have had considerable film studio experience. He has started work on the first Western scenes of "A Regular Guy," with Douglas Fairbanks in the name part, and pretty Eileen Percy in the opposite role, the second Fairbanks-Artcraft offering.

WILLIAM HUMPHREY AN IVAN DIRECTOR.

William Humphrey has been signed up as director by Ivan Film Productions, and is at present hard at work on a picture. Mr. Humphrey has played leads for twenty-five years, and has been a producing director for seven years. He states that his present picture will be the best effort of his life.

Producing Plans Announced by Jesse L. Lasky

Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Returns from Hollywood Studio.

RETURNING to New York from his first trip in six months to the Lasky Studios at Hollywood, Cal., Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of the photoplay producing in the four big studios, announces a number of notable forthcoming productions, engagements of stars and directors, and outlines a new system of motion picture producing, revolutionary in effect.

Mr. Lasky was away from New York about four weeks and spent much of his time in company with Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and in conference with the directors at the Lasky and Pallas-Morosco studios, as well as with stars. He discussed future productions with Miss Mary Pickford, who is completing her second picture under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, and with Douglas Fairbanks and John Emerson. Mr. Fairbanks, for his next picture to be released by Artcraft, has transferred his own producing organization from the East to the Lasky Studios.

"We are putting into immediate effect," said Mr. Lasky, "a plan of producing to fit Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's announcement made by Mr. Zukor last week, that commencing in August the Paramount Pictures Corporation will adopt the open-booking system of distribution. We recognize the fact that under such a system of distribution each picture and each star must be judged individually and not in co-ordination with other productions. To this new problem I have given a great deal of thought and we have adopted the following method of production, based on my conclusions: That photoplay producing is a fine art and not a manufacturing business, and that best results are obtained by individual expression and unrestrained development.

"Each director in our four studios will be absolutely independent to produce to the best of his efficiency and ability. I have had conferences with all of the directors and they have enthusiastically entered into the plan. With the discontinuance of a central scenario branch each director will have his own writing staff and the author will continue active work on every production until its conclusion, staying by the side of the director even when the film is cut and assembled. We have arranged for the directors to make the kind of pictures they like most to do and the kind they do best of any. This will absolutely abolish the old-time system of deciding arbitrarily upon a subject and insisting that it be made.

"At the Lasky studio, for instance, Cecil B. De Mille will work out and expand along the lines of producing which have made him internationally famous, tending to a combination of great dramatic and spectacular effects. Before I left he was steeped in the work of preparing for the first two of six 'De Mille productions' which will be released through Artcraft. Geraldine Farrer will be the star in his first two pictures under the new plan.

"George Melford will concentrate and specialize on Western drama. William C. De Mille, whom we have engaged as a director, transferring his abilities from the scenario department, will place special stress on dramatic stories much after the style of the David Belasco stage productions, as it was under Mr. Belasco's personal direction and supervision that he attained his greatest success in the dramatic field. Marshall Neilan, whose notable version of Robert Louis Stevenson's 'The Bottle Imp' is the most talked of subject in months, will develop his production along the lines of fantasy and beauty. Robert Leonard, as heretofore, will concentrate on the story of great heart interest and pathos. Mr. Lou-Tellegen's first directed picture was more than gratifying. Frank Reicher, by reason of his years of experience as an artist in European theaters, will devote himself to continental stories and productions.

"Milton E. Hoffman will continue in general charge of the Lasky studio business affairs.

"The same new principles of production will apply also to the Pallas-Morosco studio, of which Charles Eyton is manager. The directors now working there are Messrs. R. Thornby, W. D. Taylor and Donald Crisp.

"At the Famous Players studio in New York, of which Albert Kaufman is manager, Messrs. Hugh Ford, J. Searle Dawley, Joseph Kaufman and Robert Vignola will work along the lines guaranteeing their best individual efforts.

"Maurice Tourneur, who was engaged for a long period before I went West, and Francis Grandon will apply these methods to their production at the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Fort Lee, New Jersey."

Mr. Lasky said that in the future he will spend his time equally divided between the Eastern and Western studios, remaining about a month in each place. He also announces Whitman Bennett will be his assistant in charge of production. Mr. Bennett has been associated with Mr. Lasky for several years and has had wide experience in all branches of the film industry.

Mr. Lasky also said that the artists at work in the Western studios are enthusiastic over the possibilities of greater accomplishment under the new producing plans. He said he has re-engaged Theodore Roberts. Mr. Roberts will appear in support of the principal stars with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, his next picture being in support of Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in "What Money Can't Buy." Wallace Reid also has been re-engaged and will start work at once under the direction of George Melford. Fannie Ward's contract has been renewed.

"With the engagements mentioned, together with several made before I went West," said Mr. Lasky, "the roster of Paramount stars includes Petrova, Kathlyn Williams, Wallace Reid, George Beban, Vivian Martin, Louise Huff, Jack Pickford, Sessue Hayakawa, Ann Pennington, Mae Murray, Margaret Illington, Fannie Ward, Billie Burke, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick and Marguerite Clark.

"To the present Artcraft attractions, which include the photoplays starring Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, will be added Elsie Ferguson, Cecil B. De Mille-Geraldine Farrar productions and the forthcoming personally directed D. W. Griffith productions."

Bessie Barriscale Heads Own Company

Former Triangle Star's Pictures Will Be Distributed by Paralta—Three Directors to Produce.

BESSIE BARRISCALE, former Triangle star, announced the formation of the Bessie Barriscale Feature Company to a gathering of trade paper representatives and officials of Paralta Plays in the latter company's offices, on Tuesday, May 1. Miss Barriscale's pictures will in future be released through Paralta.

She will retain three directors. While engaged in one production with a director, the other two will be working out the details of the two pictures to follow. Miss Barriscale believes she will be able to produce from six to eight feature pictures a year.

Oscar Apfel will direct her first picture, "Rose o' Paradise." Her second production will be made under the direction of Raymond West, who will join her directorial staff in August. The third director will be announced later.

Miss Barriscale's productions will be made in the studio of her company at Hollywood, Cal. A new studio, with the latest and most complete equipment for the making of motion pictures, has been built expressly for her organization.

Paralta Plays, the distributing company, which has formulated an original co-operative plan for picture distribution, was organized by Carl Anderson, of New York, formerly connected with the Lasky-Paramount organization; Herman

Carl Anderson, Bessie Barriscale and Herman Fichtenberg.

Katz, well-known merchant of New York; Herman Fichtenberg, the New Orleans exhibitor, who conducts a chain of thirty-seven theaters in the South; Robert T. Kane and Nat. I. Brown.

The sole purpose of Paralta Plays is to furnish the service of three producing companies, or about twenty-four pictures a year, to exhibitors under more equitable conditions than they usually obtain their bookings.

Pathe Exchange Officers Re-Elected

At Annual Meeting Administration Policies of J. A. Berst Are Enthusiastically Endorsed—Record Business Reported.

THE annual meeting of the board of directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., was held at 25 W. 45th street, New York, on April 24. The officers were all re-elected as follows: Charles Pathe, president; J. A. Berst, vice-president; J. L. Madieu, treasurer; Paul Brunet, assistant treasurer, and A. E. Rousseau, secretary.

Mr. Berst was heartily praised for his successful managership during the past twelve months, and it was felt that to his untiring efforts and the wisdom of his policies is due the credit for the great strides made by the Pathe organization and the notable increase in business.

In this connection it may be said that never in the Pathe history has the amount of business done come anywhere near equaling that being done today. The Pathe program has been doubled in size, but the increased quantity of footage has been accompanied by an even greater increase in quality. Mr. Berst has been endeavoring and with marked success to give exhibitors confidence in the Pathe product by releasing only pictures of box office value. Coincident with this has also come a betterment in service until today complaints from exhibitors have reached a minimum. A business built upon the basis of value and service may be truthfully said to be built upon the solid rock.

By adopting the policy of box office value stars only, Mr. Berst has immeasurably strengthened the Pathe program. "Here today and there tomorrow" is true of Pathe stars in the past only. By engaging Mrs. Vernon Castle at a very high figure, Mr. Berst showed his recognition of the value to exhibitors of great names and his willingness to pay high for them. In Mrs. Castle, he confidently believes, Pathe has a star whose drawing power is surpassed by none on the screen. The phenomenal success of "Patria" and numerous letters from exhibitors bear him out in this.

Pearl White, another real box office star, has a tremendous following. Though she has been mostly used in serials, "Hazel Kirke" and "Mayblossom" proved her value as a Gold Rooster star also. Miss White is under a long term contract with Pathe.

Gladys Hulette has climbed the heights of fame with dizzying rapidity during the past year. She is not merely arriving, she has "arrived." The pictures in which she stars have a fascination and charm all of their own and are doing a big business for exhibitors. She also is signed up for a long term.

Baby Marie Osborne has no real rival in her field. She presents to the public the absolutely unique example of a five-year-old child with the facial charm, the poise, the talent and physical resources that enable her to carry the burden of a five-reel drama and do it as well as any veteran of stage or screen. The child is wonderful and her pictures wonderfully popular. She is assured to Pathe for a term of three years.

Mollie King, by reason of her excellent work in "Kick In" and "Mystery of the Double Cross," became entitled to a position in the carefully selected coterie of box office stars.

Florence La Badie has been identified with Thanhouser for several years. Many exhibitors book pictures on the strength of her name alone. "Saint, Devil and Woman," a Gold Rooster Play in which she starred, has proved to be a wonderful moneymaker. Miss La Badie is also assured to Pathe exhibitors for a long term.

Frederick Warde, first in "King Lear" and secondly in "The Vicar of Wakefield," proved himself a strong box office attraction, and as a screen star as able a player as he was on the stage. As a Shakesperian actor Mr. Warde today stands supreme. "Hinton's Double," the Thanhouser Gold Rooster play in which he stars, has received more flattering notices from the critics than almost any picture of the last twelve months. The inclusion of Mr. Warde's name in the list of Pathe's stars, is, therefore, a matter of gratification to Mr. Berst.

Harold Lloyd, the "Lonesome Luke" of Pathe's comedies, is today considered by competent critics to be one of the two greatest screen comedians in the country. The new two-reel comedies in which he stars are doing big business. Another comedy star will soon be seen also in the Pathe-Rolin comedies, "Toto," the famous Hippodrome attraction.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, under the direction of Mark M. Dintenfass, have proved their value as comedy stars. It is promised that the new Myers-Theby Comedies will be even better than the old.

Creighton Hale and Warner Oland have proved their worth in serials that have done a great business—Mr. Hale in the "Elaine" serials and "The Iron Claw," and Mr. Oland in "Patria." Each has been signed up by Astra on long term contracts to appear in Pathe pictures.

"The policy of having stars of box office value only and the securing of such a number of those who truthfully come under that category I consider one of the most important, if not the most important achievements of the past twelve months," says Mr. Berst. "We are making it easy for the exhibitor to book Pathe pictures, and do business with them."

Hodkinson Returns from West

Finds Enthusiastic Reception of New Triangle Plans During a Seven-Weeks' Tour.

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has returned to New York from a seven weeks' tour of the West in the interest of his organization. Mr. Hodkinson's itinerary included Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Spokane, Seattle, Portland and Los Angeles. The purpose of his trip was to get into personal touch with Triangle branch managers and the leading exhibitors of the west to acquaint them with the details of the new policies that are being put into operation.

The results of Mr. Hodkinson's campaign have already made themselves manifest in largely increased business and a better understanding between Triangle's producing, distributing and exhibiting units. The west, according to Mr. Hodkinson's investigations, which have been carried on over a space of ten years, is an exceedingly progressive section of the country, motion picture exhibitors having reached a high average level of achievement. It has, therefore, followed that their problems have in many respects become very sharply defined, and the president of Triangle says that the announcement of the new bonding system which he has perfected, together with the system of modified program booking, about to go into effect, has aroused great enthusiasm among western exhibitors.

Some of the most widely sought accounts on the Pacific Coast were signed by Mr. Hodkinson as a direct result of his personal presentation of the new constructive policies. Resolutions of endorsement of the bonding system have been passed by many of the strongest exhibitors' leagues in the west.

Before returning to New York, Mr. Hodkinson spent several days at the Triangle studios in Hollywood and the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City, aiding in the perfection of details of the consolidation of these plants under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. The president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, whose wide experience and lack of prejudice make him a real authority on such subjects, declares that the Ince organization represents the highest standard of efficiency that has yet been reached in the manufacture of motion pictures.

"Triangle has the ideas, the organization and the product," Mr. Hodkinson stated. "We are also getting the fullest cooperation from exhibitors. The result will be inevitable. We shall achieve success in the truest sense because we shall deserve it."

KERRIGAN PICTURES RELEASED BY PARALTA.

Close on the heels of the announcement that Bessie Barriscale had formed her own company and would release her pictures through Paralta Plays, Inc., Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, announces that his corporation has secured control of the releases of the J. Warren Kerrigan Production Company. Production work on the Kerrigan features will begin about June 1, when Mr. Kerrigan will reach Los Angeles. He is at present on the last leg of his tour of the principal cities of the country.

As with the Barriscale company, the Kerrigan organization will make about eight or ten pictures a year. He, too, will employ three directors. The names of the directors of the Kerrigan pictures will be announced when he reaches Los Angeles.

Wholesome Film Company

New Corporation Formed to Produce High Class Subjects—Headquarters in Chicago.

"WHOLESOME FILMS" are soon to be presented to the country. The plans just completed in Chicago provide for an extensive distributing organization with branches in all principal cities. M. J. Weisfeldt, for many years with the Mutual Film Corporation and well known to the trade, will be general manager of the Wholesome Film Corporation and have direct supervision of its activities.

The aim of the new corporation is to present pictures that are wholesome in every way, fit for the best of theaters and all classes of audiences, yet without being intrusively educational or hinting of propaganda. The stories to be used for Wholesome Films are to be the best obtainable from American authors, strong and virile, yet wholesome in theme and presentation. "In other words," announces General Manager Weisfeldt, "we will censor our pictures in the manuscript, so that the finished pictures on the Wholesome program will be all the name implies.

"We have already contracted for the literary services of some of America's most popular authors, as well as the motion picture rights to the works of a greatly beloved writer, recently deceased. By having constantly in mind the idea of wholesomeness, we will be able to offer a program of good, clean entertainment absolutely devoid of all sex taint or the sensationalism that keeps active the censor boards of the country. In a few weeks we will have a very important announcement to make to the exhibitors of the country."

The general offices of Wholesome Film Corporation will be Consumers Building, Chicago. The other officers are A. M. Allen, president; Milton Daily, vice-president, and F. W. Stanhope, secretary and treasurer.

Goldwyn Convention Exhibit

Special and Extensive Arrangements Being Made to Give Attractive Display at Chicago.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation will be an active participant in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Exposition in Chicago, July 14 to 22, and has taken space for its headquarters on the main aisle of the Coliseum, immediately facing the entrance of the big convention hall.

The Goldwyn display will be designed by three noted painters and scenic artists: Hugo Ballin, Robert Edmond Jones and Everitt Shinn.

Goldwyn officers and stars will be in attendance, and a cable received yesterday from Mary Garden, who is now in Paris, brings the news that she will return to America in time to take part in the exposition as Goldwyn's chief representative. Mae Marsh and Madge Kennedy are expected to stop work in the Fort Lee studios long enough to devote several days to the convention.

The management of the Goldwyn booths will be intrusted to the Chicago branch executives, supplemented by members of the Goldwyn general staff from the East.

Goldwyn will have its official day at the exposition and Miss Garden is planning a surprise for her thousands of admirers in Chicago, who will welcome her return there as a heroine of the screen.

Members of Goldwyn's art and technical staffs will journey to Chicago to give personal attention to the installation of the company's exhibit.

Newark Theater Managers Hold Testimonial

Successful Benefit at Broad Street Theater, Newark, N. J.—All Houses Represented.

THE Theater Managers' Association of Newark, which was organized February 2, 1917, held its first testimonial April 22 at the Broad Street theater, Broad and Fulton streets. A program of ten feature acts from the various local vaudeville houses, augmented by several feature comedies supplied by the moving picture houses, was thoroughly enjoyed by the large crowd which attended the benefit performance. The affair was a success both socially and financially, and if this initial attempt may be taken as a criterion, then the future certainly augurs well. The membership of the organiation comprises the managers of the largest showhouses in Newark. The present officers are: President, Thomas W. Miner, of the Empire theater; vice-president, Dr. R. G. Tunison, of the Lyric theater; secretary, R. J. O'Crowley, Jr.; treasurer, Morris S. Schlesinger, of the Broad Street theater.

The committee that arranged the testimonial consisted of John B. McNally, chairman; William B. Putnam, M. S. Schlesinger and Thomas W. Miner, ex-officio. The entertainment committee included Lewis R. Golding, Louis J. Fosse, Eugene Meyers, George W. Jacobs and Dr. Tunison.

A souvenir program was distributed to the attendants at the theater. This program was liberally supported by the theatrical people of Newark. All the houses of note in the community were represented in its advertising columns. The local association is affiliated with the United Managers' Protective Association, which maintains headquarters in New York. So far as information could be obtained, the organization is the only one of its kind in the State of New Jersey.

Brownie Vernon

WITHOUT further ceremony than a brief announcement of the transition in trade-paper paragraphs, "Agnes" Vernon recently passed from the annals of picturedom to forthwith reappear as "Brownie" Vernon, the change being made without Miss Vernon missing a scene or skipping a turn of the Bluebird camera man's crank. Miss Vernon was christened Agnes, but is best known to her associates and acquaintances as "Brownie," for, despite her beautiful blonde locks, her big, brown eyes are so dominant that she has been called "Brownie" ever since childhood.

Brownie Vernon.

Miss Vernon came close to being a Christmas present, for she was borning in an Oregon village Dec. 27, 1896. The Vernons moved to Chicago while Brownie was still a little girl, and next shifted to Los Angeles two years ago, when Brownie joined the colony of picture makers at Universal City. Her screen experience has been limited exclusively to appearances in Universal products in various lines, until she joined Bluebird last Autumn.

As Franklyn Farnum's leading lady Miss Vernon has been a valuable asset to Bluebird, incidentally advancing her personal popularity to an extreme degree through her charming "screen manners" and native beauty. Early last November devotees of Bluebird first saw Miss Vernon in "A Stranger from Somewhere." A little later she again appeared with Franklyn Farnum in "The Man Who Took a Chance," and still later was seen in "The Clock" with Mr. Farnum.

Now comes the announcement that week of June 4 the Farnum-Vernon combination will be presented by Bluebird in "Bringing Home Father," a comedy-drama based on a story by H. O. Davis. Later on in the Summer Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon will drive "The Car of Chance," a feature made from Waldemar Young's story. In all of her Bluebird appearances Miss Vernon has been directed by Wm. Worthington.

FOX RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

After a two-month stay in his Western studio at Hollywood, Cal.,—his first visit to his own plant, his first vacation in years, and his first trip west of Buffalo in his life—William Fox has returned to New York.

His eight weeks of close contact with the players and the productions in the making have made him more enthusiastic than ever over the photoplay industry, present and future.

"I am frank to confess," Mr. Fox laughed, "that I learned the picture business had several angles of which I knew little which were worthy of study and development. I think I may claim that plans have been laid for some remarkable screen subjects in our Hollywood studios."

Mr. Fox announced that William Farnum, who is to come East, has almost completed the new super de luxe feature on which he is working, and that he expects that the distinguished star will arrive in this city within the next fortnight.

Catalogue of Educational and Selected Pictures

Released Between January 1, 1917 and March 31, 1917.

Compiled by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS list of educational and selected pictures released between January 1, 1917, and March 31, 1917, does not include the various news pictorials issued from week to week such as the Hearst-Pathe News, the Animated Weekly, the Mutual Weekly and Selig-Tribune. Included in this catalogue will be found a list of dramas, comedies, comedy dramas and melodramas of the more wholesome type, and adaptations of literary works, all of which have been selected with a view to lessening the difficulties of moving picture exhibtors and others who are striving to improve the general character of the moving picture theater program. There will also be found information regarding the addresses of the manufacturing and distributing companies mentioned herein and the location of the different productions through their brand names.

Some Industrial Films

Camilla Donworth of the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation Throws Light on Question of Industrial Film Distribution.

THOSE WHO were privileged to listen to what Camilla Donworth, saleswoman for the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation had to say at an exhibition of industrial films held in the Joseph Miles projection room at 220 W. 42nd street, on Thursday evening, April 26, learned considerable that they did not know before. They learned that the distribution of industrial moving pictures is an art in itself, and that previous to the making of the picture with which you intend to advertise your goods you must be perfectly certain what you want to say, how you are going to say it, and to whom you are going to say it. They learned that many of the films made for advertising purposes are distributed through clubs and Y. M. C. A.s and that many of these films such as "The Story of a Loaf of Bread," which gives a detailed illustration of how the business of making the thousands of loaves of bread which the Ward bakery turns out daily is carried on, have gained a wide distribution through the moving picture theaters of the country.

The first picture which Miss Donworth showed her little audience, which, by the way, was made up principally of persons interested in National Advertising, was "The Story of a Loaf of Bread" to which we have already referred. This picture consists of three reels of film, and covers in detail every feature of the bread industry as it exists in the Ward bakeries. In this film we first see a shipment of flour on its way from the great flour center Minneapolis to the east. We are then taken into Ward factory flour storeroom which accommodates 25,000 sacks of flour at one time. After taking a look about the storeroom we witness the starting of the flour on its way to the bread mixer, and thence we go to that department where the measuring of ingredients is done. The mixing of the dough in machines the emptying of the dough when thoroughly mixed into a huge receptacle where it is set in a room of a certain temperature and humidity to raise, the kneading and cutting of the dough into loaves of various weights, the shaping of the loaves, and the dropping of the finished loaves into their respective pans ready for the oven by means of an automatic machine are interesting sights. We also witness the entry of the loaves of bread to the baking ovens also by automatic means and marvel that from the moment the flour is placed in the hopper on its way to the mixing room not a human hand touches a single ingredient nor a loaf of bread. Even the wrapping of the bread in waxed paper is done by machinery.

The making of the Ward Company's bread is only a part of the interesting material which this film contains. The Minneapolis flour mills also come for a share of attention, and starting in the wheat fields, which, by the way, have been photographed with a view to retaining the color values which has actually been accomplished, we follow the trail of the wheat through the mills to the flour period. We then are taken to delightful western dairy fields where we ramble a few moments with the cattle which make possible the manufacture of the condensed milk used in the Ward Bakeries.

"The Pyrene Manufacturing Company" is the title of the second film exhibited by Miss Donworth. This film embodied a little story in which a young mother started out one morning on a shopping tour, and came in contact with a Pyrene agent, from whom she purchased several containers of Pyrene for the purpose of keeping her little flock safe from danger of fire. On returning home she finds that the nurse has carelessly left a gas jet lighted near a window where the curtains are being blown by the wind, and her children are only by the merest chance saved from death. The use of Pyrene extinguishes the fire. Other instances are also shown in the picture where Pyrene has been instrumental in saving both lives and property.

"Roasting and Blending Coffee" was the third film shown. This was intensely interesting and showed the methods adopted by Austin Nichols & Company.

The third picture, not exactly related to the foregoing examples, covered the duties of "The Pennsylvania State Police." It is learned through the film that this body of police have served for eleven years, and have in that time traversed five million miles of country. The story of accomplishment told in the film is a plain-spoken one and was shown at Albany in behalf of the establishment of police service in the unprotected parts of New York State.

Miss Donworth is to be congraulated on the entertaining and instructional values of this exhibition of industrial films which presented in a new light this class of film, and the methods used in its distribution.

Educational Value of Lincoln Cycle

Benjamin Chapin Gives to the Public a Series of Films Which Are An Idealization of the Character of Lincoln and a Lesson to the Mothers of the Nation.

ALREADY a review of the Lincoln Cycle has appeared in the columns of the Moving Picture World, and the public has learned from different sources of the unusual values of this series of pictures. In these pictures Benjamin Chaplin has with the touch of one whose labor is that of love striven to portray the spiritual and physical character of Abraham Lincoln as it really existed. And it is not too much to say, from what we know of the history of the humblest and noblest of presidents, that he has succeeded beyond the hopes of most of us.

In the Lincoln Cycle there are seven parts of two reels each. Only four of these have as yet been exhibited, and are entitled respectively, "My Mother," "My Father," "Myself," and "The Call to Arms." We believe that these pictures follow accurately the lines of American history of that period; and while the anecdotes of Lincoln's boyhood and later life are creations of Mr. Chapin's brain which have been fashioned in order to throw what are known to be the Lincoln characteristics into bas relief, we feel that they could not be dispensed with in the sustaining of the dramatic values with which the pictures teem.

The Lincoln pictures teach beyond historical truths the value of love, kindness and gentle persuasion rather than force in dealing with the child. They show that the sterling characteristics natural to the boy Lincoln were fostered in early youth by his mother, and that the precepts laid down by her were those upon which was founded the success of his wonderful career, that from her he imbibed that humanity and sense of justice which, combined with other strong characteristics were instrumental in bringing about one of the greatest emancipations of history.

These pictures should be exhibited in every educational institution throughout the country. No American boy who is wont to worship at the shrine of great men can withstand the convincing persuasion of the pictures that liberty and justice is the right of every man born into the world. He will be inspired also to a greater patriotism. He will more fully realize the meaning of that great word Union, he will resolve when he has seen these pictures to stand more firmly than ever for the cause of justice and freedom. He will also find in the example outlined in this portrayal of the character of Lincoln added impetus for the cultivation of moral stamina.

"Money—Old and New." (Paramount-Bray).

IN NO. 66 of the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph will be found an interesting description of how old bills are laundered and turned out to the public again crisp and clean. We are also shown how the bills too mutilated to be of further use are destroyed, after an operator seated at a press has cut large round holes in stacks of them at a time at the rate of $50,000 a punch. In the vaults of the New York Sub-Treasury, we learn from the picture, there are stored at the present time nearly a billion dollars in gold and as much of this came from European countries it has required most careful examination. Each coin is carefully tested to determine its genuineness, and it is an interesting sight to see these skilled men handling newly received foreign shipments. The speed and accuracy with which a man goes through a bag of gold is astonishing and a spurious coin never escapes detection. An interesting and well-illustrated subject.

"A Tabloid Bungalow." (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life No. 52" we learn how space is saved in a modern bungalow. In the one shown in the picture we see a bed which can be rolled into a closet during the day making it appear like a writing desk. Again we see one which when pulled out converts the space back of it into a bathroom, and another which is disguised during the day as a kitchen cabinet. This is said to be a development of life in California.

"The Sun Cure." (Paramount-Bray).

Scenes photographed at the J. N. Adam Memorial Hospital at Perrysburg, N. Y., will be found in No. 66 of the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph. Here we see how children afflicted with tuberculosis of the bones are treated by Heliotherapy or "Sun Cure." The keynote to this treatment is the exposure of the body to the luminous or short length rays of the sun. These rays act as a stimulant to the whole nervous system and give a resistant strength to the muscle fibers and skin, enabling them to defend the body against the inroads of disease. We learn through the picture that exposure of the body to these rays must be done gradually, with extreme care to guard against too sudden changes. As the strength of the child returns he is allowed to play in the sunshine without any clothing on him save a breechclout and a pair of shoes. The same treatment is given even with the thermometer registering below zero.

"Learn to Swim." (Universal).

In the eighteenth number of the Universal Screen Magazine will be found some useful suggestions with regard to swimming. We are by subtitle warned of the danger of not being able to swim, and it is suggested that all children learn the art. The picture deals principally with children, and demonstrates proper arm movements, how to float with neck, head and body rigid with hands outstretched and palms down. Instruction in diving is also given, using the "Bull-frog method."

"A Lesson in Wood Carving." (Paramount-Bray).

In No. 66 of the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph will be found valuable instruction in the art of wood carving. In this picture Madam Freda Van Emden, a native of Friesland in Northern Holland, shows what can be done with a chisel and a couple of knives in converting a surface of plain wood into a thing of beauty. First a design made with charcoal on a piece of paper is traced on a piece of tracing paper. This is then transferred to the object to be carved and the artist is ready for work. It is interesting to watch her deftly chipping and cutting the design into the wood.

"The Red Clay Workers of Barbados." (Mutual-Gaumont).

This is an interesting subject found in "Reel Life No. 552." Here we see the clay workers whose ancestors have followed this industry for generations gathering the red clay of which the pottery which comes from the Barbados is made. It is interesting to watch the workers mxing the clay with water putting in a sand binder, kneading the clay and afterward modeling it by hand on a revolving disc into artistically shaped bowls. After the bowls are dry they are sprinkled with black sand to give them a glaze and placed in kilns to bake. Scenes showing the huts of the red clay workers on Chalky mountain are attractive.

"The Orang" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

Raymond Ditmars has made an interesting study of the orang in this picture introducing considerable comedy into the scenes in which this human looking animal's characteristics are exploited. In the picture we see him eating his meals, using a table napkin after eating, drinking from a bottle, and sitting in a chair "all dressed up and no place to go." Some clumsy episodes in connection with the use of ordinary furniture are amusing.

"Florida to Louisiana with H. T. Tinklebottom" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

Henry Thadeus Tinklebottom is still moving along in his little old last year's car according to latest film accounts. In this picture we see him come to grief on his way to Louisiana in the mildly speaking mud roads. Pulled out of the mud by a pair of mules hitched to a farmer's wagon he continues on his way, and meets some diving cows. At Mobile, Ala., Henry Thadeus feels himself quite an important personage, is met by "a brass band and everything," but later has the wind taken out of his sails when he discovers that a mardi gras is in progress and that the celebration is not in honor of his arrival after all. We must not forget to mention the surprising stunts of the "little old last year's car" on the beach in Florida. The car runs about on the sand in a circle until Henry Thadeus is quite at a loss to know what the performance means. Finally she gets her bearing and starts off down the beach at so brisk a pace that her driver has to make a run for it in order not to be left behind.

"Warsaw, Poland" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The views of Warsaw, Poland, which are contained in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 26" were photographed before the war, but are none the less interesting on this account. One of the interesting sights in this picture is the bridge which spans the Vistula River, and which is of historic and commercial importance. The palace in the Lazienki Gardens, and also scenes in these beautiful gardens are shown. The Villanow Palace, the residence of the former kings of Poland, and the statue of John Sobieski who saved Europe from the Turks in 1683, bison roaming about the Bielovoge forest, and the Cossacks practicing horsemanship are other attractive features of the picture.

"From Goteborg to Christiania" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Views in and between the Scandinavian cities Goteborg and Christiania will be found in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 26." The docks at Goteborg are first shown, and the monument to Gustavus Adolphus. The market is also an interesting sight. The trip to Christiania via steamer is followed by views of Christiania, where the harbor is large but is ice-bound three months in the year. This picture gives a good idea of this part of Scandinavia.

"The Valley of the River Lot" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The valley of the river Lot is in France, and the views of it which are shown in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 26" give an excellent idea of this part of France. The town of Cahors dating back to before the Roman Conquest is interesting. In the older portion of the town the streets are narrow and dingy, so we learn from the picture. A view of the town from Mount Cyr is attractive, and also the Valentine Bridge a structure of the 14th century. The views along the valley are beautiful, showing roads hewn in the mountainside. The English Pass and the village of Cirq-Lapopie are also shown.

"Life in the Soudan" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Senegal on the West Coast of Africa comes in for a share of attention in "Reel Life No. 52." A war dance by natives, a man playing on a xylophone, a jeweler at work, and also a shoemaker and a tailoress are seen. We are also shown the Senegalese weaving and washing clothes, which latter is done by beating the clothes with sticks. There are also to be seen Senegalese school children reciting a lesson. Here attention is drawn to the fact that the children have their heads partly shaven. This is an interesting subject and well illustrated.

"Pekin, China" (Pathe).

In this film are shown scenes in and about Pekin, China. The beggars going out in tub boats to meet incoming steamers in hopes of getting alms is an unusual sight. They carry with them bags fastened to the ends of sticks in which to gather the alms thrown to them. Scenes of interest in Pekin give an insight into the street life of the city. A good release finished with an animated cartoon.

Salisbury-Beach Pictures

The Eighth and Final Instalment Exhibits Scenes Among the San Blas Indians—Shown at Rialto.

THE FINAL instalment of the Salisbury-Beach pictures, which have been exhibited weekly at the Rialto, will be found quite as interesting as the first. The Rex Beach party after considerable parley were allowed to land on the San Blas islands, the domain of probably the most ancient tribe of Indians in existence. The picture tells us that the San Blas boys remain unclothed until the age of thirteen or fourteen, that the lower limbs of the females are tightly bandaged for a period of their lives, and that the female San Blas has no voice in the choice of a husband. It is interesting to note that the San Blas men when dressed for an occasion wear small Derby hats which have been introduced at some time or another by white traders. These hats are all of a size and give their wearers a grotesque appearance. A canoe race by the Indians is amusing, especially as those about to win the race do not seem to understand the game and stop to wait for the others. Much can be learned of this interesting tribe of red men from this picture.

WALTER EDWIN SIGNED BY VAN DKE.

Walter Edwin, known as one om the most competent and artistic directors of the present time, has just been signed by the Van Dyke Film Corporation, releasing on Art Dramas Program, to direct Jean Sothern.

Mr. Edwin's first picture with the star is entitled "A Mute Appeal." In this production Miss Sothern is supported by Donald Cameron, a leading man with an immense following all over the country. Most of Mr. Cameron's successes were made with Vitagraph, with whom he remained for a number of years. The company under Mr. Edwin left Monday morning for Shohola, Pa., where exteriors of the picture are to be made.

CAMERAMEN GET A LOOK IN.

Of interest to cameramen will be the fact that the Cinema War News Syndicate is inaugurating a plan of giving credit to the photographer of news matter on the screen. The main title of every view will be shown with a card at the bottom, "By Cameraspondent John J. Doe." This is only following out the magizine and newspaper practice of giving credit to the author of a contribution of any kind. By it the photographer turning in the best work will eventually become nationally famous, just as the contributor appearing most often in the Saturday Evening Post becomes nationally known.

THREE FAMOUS PLAYERS FOR ART DRAMA.

Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation releasing on Art Dramas program, has just signed contracts whereby three of the most important players in filmdom will appear in his next production, which is entitled "House of Cards."

Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, will play the leading female role. Frank Mills, known for his star work on the stage and in films, appears opposite; Kittens Reichert, the cleverest and most popular child actress on the screen, completes the trio.

Dominating the Brazilian Market

Continued Growth of American Film Popularity in South America—Putting Taxes on Tickets

Sao Paulo, Brazil, April 4.

FOREIGN productions have so nearly completely disappeared from Brazilian competition that it requires considerable search to find anything but American-made films. Occasionally a French play may be seen, and now and then an Italian film comes on, but generally speaking the market knows nothing but American-made "fitas." A bit of enterprise on the part of managers in advertising big productions has lately succeeded in filling the seats at every performance.

In some cities the "fathers" have seen in the moving picture theaters a chance to increase taxes by putting an impost on cinema tickets. In this city the tax amounts to about 2¼ cents, which at first the public was compelled to pay, but later the managers have paid the imposition for the public. The idea of taxation here is to get all the traffic will stand, without considering whether the thing taxed is a luxury or a necessity. In the case of regular theaters the public pays the tax, which is graduated according to the value of the ticket. Another hit at progress was a rule that forbade throwing programs about the streets. This hit the printing offices, but resulted in a saving for the managers of the cinemas. One big company owning several theaters cut out the "interior program" altogether, simply printing its day's program in the largest daily paper in the city. Since all the people who patronized cinemas did not read that journal, the plan had to be abandoned. To publish programs in all the papers would have been impossible.

Helen Holmes' "Girl and Game" Repeating.

If one had to pick out the film that has won the biggest success in this city, the choice would fall on the series "The Girl and the Game," Helen Holmes' wonderful portrayal. This film has gone through all the houses once and is now repeating. As a matinee feature it is a winner with the children. The mere projection of the title brings out a big round of applause.

The Universal "Liberty" film, with Marie Walcamp, shown under the name of "A Fatal Inheritance," is just beginning. The first run started in the Pathe Palacio, and the mere mention of "Eddy Polo" brought out a big noise from those who remembered the work of this artist in "The Broken Coin."

"The Million Dollar Mystery" starts in a few days, and the people of this city are due to see something that will bring them to appreciate the serial idea.

Among the big films running in Sao Paulo may be mentioned "The Man From Nowhere," King Baggot; "Daredevil Kate," Miss Virginia Pearson; "Zaza," Miss Pauline Frederick; "The End of the Trail," William Farnum; "Is Any Girl Safe?" "The Power of Virtue," "The Man From Bitter Root," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Kalem's "Shenandoah," "The Unwelcome Mother," "The Evil Women Do," "Peg o' the Circus," Kalem's "Money," "Little Miss Happiness," "Somewhere in France," with Miss Clara Kimball Young and Paul Capellani, the latter a big favorite here; "The Masked Woman," "The Unattainable," Pathe's "New York," "The Secret of the Swamp," "Romance of Billy Goat Hill," "The Usurper," "The Slave of Lucifer," "The Pit," etc.

"Civilization" Doing Big Business.

The Harper Film Corporation, bringing the famous Ince production "Civilization," cannot complain of poor business in this city, since the theaters showing the film have been turning people away at every performance. At one theater more than 15,000 people saw the piece in three days. The Companhia Cinematographica Brasileira, which held the rights of Sao Paulo, ran the film for the benefit of the press, and the opinions printed the next day helped to swell the attendance. The first day of the run the film was shown in three halls at the same time, allowing half an hour of a lead between starts. The Central ran it in its two halls, side by side, and the Royal started in third. The film has hit the high spots for attendance, and this in spite of the fact that prices were doubled. The piece has still a long run ahead of it in this city.

The Companhia Cinematographica Brasileira invited the press and public men before inviting the public to see and "Where Are My Children?" and in signed statements the learned men recommended a study of the subject. The opinion of O Estado de S. Paulo, the most influential paper in the city, may be said to reflect the general feeling. It said in part: "As usual in American pictures, the inspiration of the film is based on a rigorous principle of morality, and the unfolding of the theme constitutes a beautiful page of healthful instruction to the public."

The Gazette said: "There are scenes which we would hide from the eyes of Brazilian women were it not that the film treats of the annihilation of the sacred sentiment of maternity."

The same company went to the trouble of having the Interocean Film Company's "Purity" passed through the eyes of press and public men before inviting the public to see and believe. The subject was seen by thousands of people, and the charms of Miss Audrey Munson continue to draw crowds.

Albert Rosenwald, of Rio de Janeiro, representing the Fox Film Corporation, finds business great enough to come to this city frequently. He reports continuously growing success in all parts of Brazil for his house.

Oliveira & Company have started a weekly paper, Revista dos Cinemas, devoted to the picture houses and its patrons. Success became so great in a single month that the firm found it necessary to enlarge its printing plant in order to handle its business. The paper carries illustrations of all the popular favorites, and is sure to grow in importance.

One Way of Financing a Business.

The manager of one of the big American houses would like to express his opinion of Brazilian laws, which are notorious for their lack of protection to ordinary business. In one case the manager of a motion picture house of relatively little importance made a contract to handle the films of the house not mentioned by name. For a time he lived up to terms, but later he failed to return films, thus making trouble for other houses which had advertised certain films for certain days. It turned out that he started a little business of his own out of the city, handling only the films he failed to return. The manager of the New York house "started something," but never received one of the films. In this as well as other businesses a man may make a contract, but there is no reason to believe he will keep to his word if he does not want to. Before the law his word is better than that of the foreigner, and the latter may well say there is no justice in some countries.

The first picture play of the Famous Players will be that of Miss Mary Pickford, in "Tess of the Storm Country." Some of the work by that artist with her own company is also being advertised for early production in this city. Miss Pickford's work has been very highly appreciated in Rio de Janeiro.

The World Film Corporation as a producer put on several pictures featuring Miss Kittie Gordon, and the plays have been well received.

The first Fox film featuring Miss Nance O'Neil will be "The Enchantress."

The picture of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," featuring Robert Warwick, was a joke so far s translations were concerned. Hardly a title was correct, and the faults were multiplied in having several kinds of type faces. These defects marred what was otherwise a fine production.

Great preparations have been made to start the famous "Million Dollar Mystery" in Sao Paulo, and reports from Rio de Janeiro say that the success gained by the film has been enormous. The first run will be given in the Sao Paulo theater here.

Coming pictures include "From Broadway to a Throne," "Saving the Family Name," "The Black Hand," "The Sign of the Cross," etc. Features for the near future include pictures showing Miss Cleo Madison and Edmund Breese and also Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," which latter play has been seen here by Italian and French actors several times.

Steve an Educator.

STEVE FARRAR, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., sends in a press clip along with his latest throwaway. He adds that he slips something of the sort to the daily paper now and then and thinks it is doing some good. It assuredly does do a lot of good, and incidentally it shows Steve up as a writer of colloquial style. If he wrote the story himself, he has been hiding his talents. There is nothing about the Casino, or about Steve, in the story. It deals with temperance and the screen in a chatty way. One paragraph runs:

"Ten Nights in a Bar Room" was once considered a wonderful play because it taught such a temperance lecture, and whenever the play hits town every white ribbon woman turned out with her entire brood of boys, so they could witness the awful effects of liquor, but the picture show reels of today have 'Ten Nights in a Bar Room" backed into the corner and yelling for help.

An old blear-eyed souse who would rotten-egg a temperance talker will sit all evening in a picture show and watch his old pal John Barleycorn being whipped to a fare-you-well, and he will pay ten cents for the privilege of seeing the hooks thrown into his old friend, and that ten cents represents a drink that his friend the bartender didn't sell him.

There are thousands of picture shows filled to overflowing every night and in all of them you will see men with their wives and children spending an entire evening enjoying themselves instead of spending their evening and their money in a saloon and when they return home from the show, after seeing one of the "horrible example" plays, where Old John Barleycorn ruins the girl, makes a thief of the father, a murderer of the son and a suicide of the mother, they go home wondering down deep in their minds if it isn't about time to vote against booze!

This is not a model of classical English, but it is written to reach home folks, and there is a lot of philosophy in the article, of which this is about a quarter. Sometimes it pays better to get stuff like this in the paper than it does to run items that starts off with "John Smirk, our popular and enterprising manager"—— Steve is coming strong.

Mr. Decker's Latest.

Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, has a couple of new stunts. One of them is shown by this clipping:

If there are any boys under 12 years of age that cannot afford to spend 5c. to see Enid Bennett in "The Little Brother" next Tuesday, March 20, Manager Decker will allow them to see this show absolutely free at the matinee after school. It is no disgrace to be poor, but it is awfully unhandy. Therefore any boy that cannot afford 5c. to see this play, will, if they will come and give us their name and tell us mama or papa did not have the nickel for them, we are going to pass them in free, but, remember, only at the matinee, after school. This is a play that every boy should see, and by seeing it the amount of good it will do for every boy is of untold value. Now, remember, when we speak of the value of this picture for boys, we don't mean that it is a kid's picture—not by any means—this picture will interest all classes and ages and especially the middle or society class of adults should see it. So don't pass it up—it is one of the best pictures on the Triangle program.

Frank Montgomery used to work this scheme, though he made it more general. Instead of getting out free tickets for a new house he would announce that he had a story so good he wanted everyone in town to see it, and a wink to the doorkeeper was as good as a ticket. We have not seen it used for some years, and yet it is a good scheme for making talk. Mr. Decker is still using the pupil's pass idea because it works so well. Any public school pupil who reaches a weekly average of 85 per cent. is admitted free to specified performances. It helps a lot to keep up the average of scholarship in the town and so the parents approve the scheme—and the house.

Got in Quick.

J. E. Guinn, of the New Majestic, Alto, Texas, sends in a postcard he recently sent out, with this explanation:

Ten minutes after the flash came over the wires, the afternoon of the nineteenth instance, that the United States had declared war against Germany, and before the details of the situation had become known, I had my copy of the following ad on the press. (See enclosure.)

I bought 500 of the enclosed government postal cards, and as you can see I had them printed in typewritten type, thereby making it more personal, addressed them in ink and mailed them.

The first line in capitals is what they fell for, thinking it was an official notice from the government.

The card itself is reproduced here, not because it can be used in the same form again, but because it gives a hint which may be adapted to some other occasion. The use of the greeting, "Dear Friend," is apt to hurt the suggestion of an official communication, and to gain this effect the greeting should have been omitted entirely. In the same way the subscription should have been dropped, were the official aid sought, but in general the card was well handled.

Alto, Texas,
March the Nineteenth,
Nineteen Hundred Seventeen.
Dear Friend:—

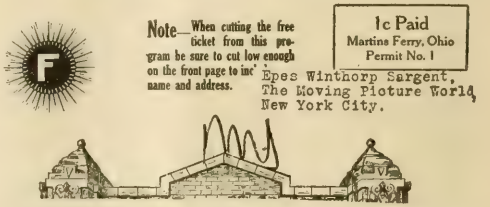
YOU MAY BE CALLED TO ARMS ANY MOMENT!! This is rather startling news, isn't it? A flash came over the wires this afternoon to the effect that the U. S. had DECLARED WAR on Germany! In a week or month many of us may not be alive, so let us enjoy life while we HAVE life. Meet me at the New Majestic tomorrow night at 8:00 and enjoy one of the greatest extravaganzas ever presented to the American public, "THE BLACK CROOK," and forget war and strife, that awful incarnation of souls across the sea, which is threateningly near to us. Hoping that you will join the army of theatergoers with me tomorrow night, I am

Your friend,
Jerry.

But in handling any war stuff from now on, be careful. Don't be flippant or jesting, for it is too serious a matter. Do not make statements too extravagant or too incendiary. Mr. Guinn is startling without giving offense. Follow his example.

For the Mailing List.

The Fenray, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, sends in a new wrinkle on keeping the mailing list alive. The first issue of each month carries a free ticket for one on the second page. The Fenray Index is mailed out under a permit, without envelope, the addresses being printed on the cover, as shown in the cut. The free ticket is on the back of the postoffice permit and is so planned that it takes in the address slip.



F
Note—When cutting the free ticket from this program be sure to cut low enough on the front page to inc' name and address.
1c Paid
Martins Ferry, Ohio
Permit No. 1
Epes Winthorp Sargent,
The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

This slip serves as a check on the mailing list and it also serves another purpose in that it brings the program recipient to the theater and gets him started right. The ticket is merely a box reading:

Exchange at the Box Office for Regular Admission Ticket.
Not good after April 30, 1917,
Nor on De Luxe Days.

This is set right into the editorial page, the head for which is moved down to make room for it. It is run only the first week of each month and the ticket is held good for that month only, barring special days. The house has started the Quotation Quest, originated by the Rowland and Clark houses. A new wrinkle is the rayed F, shown in the cut. One of these is set into each box of the program to set it apart from the foreign advertising; an idea worthy of being copied. It might be noted that the Fenray uses strip addresses. These are typewritten on strips of paper 2¾ inches wide, cut apart and pasted onto the front page. This is not as good a scheme as the stencil, but until the list grows large enough to demand such a mechanical device this is about the best substitute, as the lists can be prepared in advance and two or more written at the same time with the aid of carbon paper.

Another Organ.

A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., is getting out a four-page house organ, the first issue dating from the first of the year. He had a capital idea in the second issue—a column to be given to the public in which to tell of plays coming to the Queen and seen elsewhere, but after a single issue the idea was dropped. The sheet would look better if a smaller body type were used, even though the size of the page were cut down in proportion. Twelve point in a thirteen em column looks too large. It works better on the front page, where it goes clear across the page. Inside the proportion is poor. Each day is dated and the announcements run under the date, which serves as a heading. It might work better to reduce the size of the date and set the title in large type for a head, using the main title where there is more than one. The front page is sound house talk, not flamboyant, but sane and forceful arguments. For instance, he says that "Service is not our motto but our solemn duty." That's a new way of looking at it, and one that will impress the reader more strongly. He introduced the "family ticket" with an improvement. On Thursday evening he has some cartoon comedies that appeal especially to children, and announcing that he wants the parents there to keep them in line, he offers a special rate of twenty-five cents a family of mother, father and as many children as remain single and live at home, provided that they come before seven and leave after the first show. To test out the demand for "The Battle Cry of Peace" he ran a coupon to be signed by those willing to pay a fifty-cent admission. That there was a demand is shown by a later announcement that a special matinee would be given to which school children will be admitted at half price. The fifty-cent tickets were sold before the film was booked. And lastly here is something useful for those who cannot book all the advertised features:

> Often some one, prompted by the reading of the manufacturer's advertisement in some magazine, requests us to book a certain picture.
> We are always glad to have our patrons request the booking of a good picture, especially one that they have seen and that is really good because that person usually talks to friends and neighbors, and in that way helps us to advertise the picture. BUT remember the manufacturer advertises in the various magazines for the sole purpose of creating a desire in you to see the picture advertised, while we must guard against getting a picture that fails to be what you expect it to be from both the manufacturer's advertisement and ours, even though the house is filled to the roof. In other words, we can't afford to show a picture at the Queen that we know will be a disappointment; that we know will not come up to your expectations, and the vision you have had of it when reading the magazine advertisement.

It goes on to take up a specific instance, citing other managers to show that the picture, though well advertised, was not a success with the public. This last may not be a wise scheme, but the portion quoted is useful in these days of so many nationally advertised films.

And will Mr. Middleton please tell us what a "tacky" party is. Ten "tacky" girls and their sweethearts were to be given free admissions on a certain evening with a special prize to the "tackiest" dressed couple.

With a Memo.

The McKinley Square Theater, New York City, gets out a vest pocket four pager, only 2 by 3⅝ inches, and yet manages to have a whole page for memoranda by days as well as the program announcements. The space is small, but even if a person does not use the blank pages there is more of a disposition to hold on to a memorandum book, and the device serves its purpose. The page is merely broken with rule and labeled by days in four-point Gothic.

On the Q. T.

M. W. Larmour, of the new Queen theater, Waco, Texas, sends in some stuff gotten out for the opening and his first house program. The intial announcement is three eights, rather well done. This is chased by an advertisement appearing elsewhere in the same issue.

NEWS IN THE ADS!
Yes, there is news in the adds—news that is timely and worth while. For instance, one of today's ads tells of the opening of the New Queen Theatre, Saturday, March 17. Look for it.

and which is reproduced here as a suggestion to others. It can be used to call attention to any special announcement, and is particularly useful in a large edition carrying many pages of advertising. The house cipher shown is used on all the printing, even to the passes. A novelty is a small folder, a strip of paper 2½ by 5 inches. The side not shown is printed on all three pages with a four-line letter "Turn over." When the first page is lifted one of these "Turn overs" still shows with the fist pointing to it. When this is opened the fist serves to attract attention to the announcement of the opening and the third division encourages the reader to fold it again and make the same slip do duty more than once. The general idea is not new, but this is cleverly planned. The best touch is the suggestion that the sting be passed along. Even if the same man is approached several times, the idea has a cumulative growth. The program is a five by six, eight pages, with two changes a week, giving plenty of space for foreign advertising without intruding upon the program space proper. Each change is given nearly a page, and the names of the stars are neatly boxed in the upper left hand corner of the announcement. Cover page is given over to announcement and an elaborate time table, giving the showing time of each section of the continuous performance. There is an editorial page, a page of underline and a half page advertisement of the house cipher, with a cut and "This monogram is our stamp of approval. When you see it in an advertisement you may know that our reputation stands behind it." It is well put together. About the only suggestion to offer is that a page be taken for really interesting chat of the players to supplement the house page.

Got Out a Special.

The Red Cross Committee of Patchogue, N. Y., decided to raise funds for war supplies and arranged with Earle L. Holmes, of the Star, to run "The Eagle's Wings" for their benefit. Mr. Holmes arranged for a "Special Red Cross Edition" of the local paper, a twelve-page sheet with some local news, a lot of local advertising and plenty of readers and advertising for his own shows in addition to the benefit feature. Naturally the big attraction gets the front page, first column, with some patriotic material to give the other heads to fill, and the house also gets a long reader for another attraction on that page. It gets about three more pages scattered through the issue, with considerable original text and some well-chosen boiler plate. Patchogue is a comparatively small town out on Long Island, but it makes a noise like a city theater when it comes to special issues.

Now is a good time for any exhibitor to hook up with the numerous local committees and not only do his bit but make it pay a profit as well. Care must be taken not to make the personal advantage too apparent, or resentment will follow praise, but like Mr. Holmes you can get a lot of good advertising without also getting goats if you work carefully and bear in mind that the primary object of the enterprise is to make the benefit profitable. Don't wait for the committee to come to you. Go to them, and go to them with a proposition that gives them all the best of it. Don't try to do better than to get your expenses back, and if you have the nerve contribute the expenses as your share and charge that to advertising. It will be the best advertising you ever bought and the cheapest as well. But pick your beneficiary carefully. Do not pick one committee when it is evident that there will be two or more in the field. Select some enterprise in which the entire town is interested.

A Make-Up Oddity.

The Victoria, Buffalo, N. Y., has something new in a recent issue. The program is in blue ink on cream paper and will not reproduce, but the general idea is an "ear" on each title. The titles are set in eighteen point and centered on the page, as usual. To the left is a three-line ear in six point; just a few words of attraction. Vivian Martin, for example, is described in the three-line ear as "The Sunbeam Player in a Sunbeam Play," and another attraction is "A Mad Film Race for Love and Honor." It does not make a handsome layout, but for a time or two it will attract attention. Then it can be dropped for something else. It will work, of course, only on a rather wide measure. In this case the page is twenty-seven picas wide and the ears are all under five picas, set flush with the left hand margin of the type page. We wonder in what dictionary the copy writer found "featurette."

Cut Outs.

The American Feature Film Co., of Boston, sends in an odd four-page throwaway. We do not know whether it is original with this exchange or not, but the idea is worth passing along. The sheet is a five by eight. The first page is apparently a police "Reward" circular for a woman who stars in the attraction advertised. A window is cut on this page to let through a cut on page three. Opening up the sheet shows the description of the film, but the attention has already been riveted by the front page, which carries nothing other than the straight text. Most cut outs are printed on very heavy paper or card, but this works well on a fair quality of book paper, which is a fact worth remembering.

Practical Anniversing.

R. E. Falkinburg, of the Majestic, Lexington, Neb., makes his first anniversary the birthweek of a new program paper. He writes this is his first offense, but that it has made talk in the town because it is the first house organ. He wants to know how to better it. About the only thing he can do is to write a little more copy and then talk to the printer earnestly and from the heart. The copy is all right. He won't be doing much better six months from now, but the make-up is poor. It looks like an amateur sheet. It is a nine by twelve four-pager, with three thirteen-em columns to the page, no column rules. This means a very loose make-up, with wide margins and wide spaces between columns. To help along there is too little copy and there are six or eight lines of space between stories, this space broken only by a short dash. On the front page two of the three columns are headed by Triangle trade-mark cuts and the third is a ten point full-face single line. Below the date line there is only one line there is only one line larger than a twelve point on the entire front page. The headed story is the appreciation for the year's patronage and is headed merely "An Appreciation." We would appreciate, under any circumstances, in at least an eighteen point letter, and where there were no other headed stories on the page we would make it a double column head with three or four banks. Those trade-marks might be moved over into the head, where the ears now are. This would bring more color to the head. The ears now read, "Majestic's First Birthday" and "Growing With Lexington." This might be combined into a running line over the top of all to read "The Majestic—growing with Lexington, and growing fast," or some such appeal to local pride. For regular work there should be a two-column head on the first and second columns devoted to the chief attraction of the week or, better still, to a running story of the week's films that will run down the column and make a good turn into the next. This heading should be changed each week. The top bank should be a two-line sentence in eighteen or twenty-four point. The next bank should be about four lines in single column width, twelve or fourteen point bold, and the last bank should be two or three lines. Then for the third column there should be a single column head to match the type used in the other head, and a short story to run down that column. Other stories should carry ten point bold heads, or ten point one-line banks, with a second two-line bank in eight point bold. Having a running story on the front page for all the films will permit the program itself to be held to the second and third columns of page three, with reading matter on the first column. Page two should carry a double column editorial head and at least a column and a half of editorial, either house talk or mixed house talk and local comment, with some squibs to fill out the second column. The third can run underline or foreign advertising, preferably the latter. The back page can carry underline, foreign advertising and notes to fill. Cuts less than column width should be framed to fill the space, yet not so heavily as to detract from the cut itself. Leading out the body type will save cost, but give a paper rather too light in appearance. If there is machine work an eight point on a nine point slug will be better than eight point opened with two point leads. If the question of expense enters, and it is not practicable to have more copy set, have what has been set brought close together and then fill in with a stock ad to fill, in preference to leaving an inch space between the paragraphs. Mr. Falkinburg writes attractive copy, but not enough of it. With the only sheet in town he has no competition to fear, but we take it that he wants to get out a paper so good that it will still be good when others come along. He is planning a style show and he should clean up with that.

The Elmwood.

The insert for a late Elmwood (Buffalo) program is a small box containing

I. O. U.
Myself
Nan Baldwin

It is a good line to use for novelty advertising for "The White Raven." Inside the continuation is, "Did she keep her word? Find the answer by seeing Ethel Barrymore in 'The White Raven.'"

About Change.

Stage and Screen, the organ of the three theaters in Bath, Maine, has been going right along and is now in its third volume. From a recent issue we clip a reader on having change that can be used by any house. Print it in your program or on your throwaway stuff. It will even work on the screen in condensed form.

> Having correct change when you buy tickets frequently saves time and annoyance. If you bring along a bill of large denomination don't blame the cashier if she keeps you waiting or gives you silver in change, for remember that the receipts at a theater are largely in silver, most people preferring to bring the correct amount rather than to be subject to the delay occasioned by "breaking bills."

No one likes to get nearly five dollars worth of silver in change, but at times the supply of bills will run out and they must take what they can get. A word about having the change will often help, and this is phrased very tactfully.

Rich Words.

The Victoria, Buffalo, always interesting for its opulence of announcement, introduces one bill with the text:

Second Spring Excursion Into
The Land of Romance.

And a triple bill is headed, "A Great Triumvirate of Plays." The press agent spends a lot of time preparing his copy. He doesn't slap down the first thing that comes into his head. Look at some of these and try and do as well:

> A play for big fathers and little mothers! It has touches of sadness but the bursts of brightness overwhelm them. It is the story of a woman who wedded not wisely and who in seeking to correct her grave mistake blundered even more, and fain had to seek solace in Godly solitude. It is a drama that awes you, and yet gives you something to feed your entertainment appetite.
> It is good to see! It makes the world look as if you were looking through glasses of sunshine hue, instead of creepy blue ones. Coney Island meets Fifth Avenue. Peppery Irene Fenwick is the Coney Island dancer who plunges into New York society. Owen Moore has one of the fun parts. Between the two they spill laughter until the flood carries you away to Happyland.
> The cast alone assures you a magnificent attraction. But even forgetting that feature, "Panthea" stands out as the most virile, the most astounding film play ever built. Scenically it is magnificent, artistically mounted and perfectly acted. The scene is in Russia, the land now feeling its first freedom. The theme is much like the condition now existing there. It deals with the treachery and slavery of old Russia. It shows you how a woman turns a nation upside down.

Of course, it must be remembered that merely fine writing must not be the aim, but fluent phrase that is both explanatory and interesting. At the start it takes a little time to write this material properly, but soon the trick will be caught and then it becomes easy. Unless you can do this sort of thing really well, it would be better to stick to plain phrases, for nothing is more silly than florid words unbacked by an idea.

Too Crowded.

The Cinderella, St. Louis, sends in its throwaway and four-page folder. Both are too full of type. We reproduce a portion of one of the throwaways. The folders are almost as bad. The job should be taken away from the present printer and given to one who knows how

Two Good Hints.

The second issue of the Shamrock Picture Talk, the house organ of the Shamrock, Atlanta, Ga., is as good as the first, though there is a hint that the editor, like George E. Carpenter, is going to drop into poetry when he has time. The first paragraph we borrow has to do with the pictures used in the lobby display. Evidently the house buys instead of rents and then uses the pictures as prizes for names with which to build up its mailing list. It reads:

> Still more news for the children: We've got quite a few photographs of stars and scenes from Triangle pictures that we used in our lobby decorations. William S. Hart and Dorothy Gish and Douglas Fairbanks and Norma Talmadge and a few more are in 'em. You children can have them to put up in your room or paste in your scrap-book, or something.
> But, let's see. They're not enough to go around. So as long as they last we'll give them to the children who bring us the names of ten of their friends all written neatly on a sheet of paper. Write the names yourself, of course, and dot your i's and cross your t's and give us a list that your teacher would mark 100 per cent. The neatest lists get the pictures.

The other is some new text for the last show, and the hint that you can start for the theater after the company has proved boresome will be welcome but only after the company has forgotten the item.

> For the benefit of any one who doesn't happen to be familiar with our daily schedule, we'd like to mention that our last show of the day begins as late as 9:15 to 9:30.
> So of an evening when it's a little too early to go to bed and you're restless and can't find anything good to read, remember you can always drop down to The Shamrock for an interesting hour.
>
> Or if you're out calling (or being called on, as the case may be), and the conversation begins to drag distressingly an hour before it's polite to say goodnight, it would be quite a timely inspiration to mention that there was an extra good picture on at The Shamrock that you hated like the mischief to miss.
> A whole show after 9:15 to 9:30. It's worth remembering.

Both items will prove useful. We are watching the house with interest, for we think that the new managers are going to make a hit of it. One of the new ideas is to turn the house over to a local charity for a day, getting in a class of persons to whom the local picture theater is a real novelty.

Two Reel Comedies.

THERE is promised an overproduction of two-reel comedies. Four or five of the old one-reel favorites are to be raised to two reels and most of the new producers are going to offer twos. There is no such thing as a two-reel comedy, but that does not figure. Comedies are made in two-reel lengths because the second reel costs but little money. It is merely a matter of more scenes with the same people, properties and wardrobe, unless the Keystone style is followed, and this is not practicable for program comedies. The second reel can be put on for from fifteen to twenty-five per cent of the cost of the first reel. It is sold for double the money a one-reel brings. Naturally the proposition sounds attractive enough to the business end, and no one thinks of starting in to make one reels now.

If you attempt to write these two reelers, it is well to remember what we wrote when the two reel comedy was first spoken of. There is no such thing. To preserve a proper acceleration of movement the comedy must either start too slowly to be interesting or else, working at proper speed, the second reel must be built up with melodrama or extravaganza, which is merely another name for comedy melodrama (not to be confounded with comedy-drama). You start in with comedy, but you must end up with stressed action or fail of a climax. It is, of course, not absolutely impossible to invent a comedy that shall hold interest for two reels, but it is almost impossible; so much so that it is to be accepted as a rule that you must work over into the second reel with extravagant ideas and stressed action to harmonize with the rapidly increasing speed. You can use either straight melodrama or burlesque drama, but something of this sort you must employ.

Writing for Stars.

It is good advice to say "Write stories that are generally suitable." We give the advice to others and follow it ourselves, but the increasing use of stars seems to be leading to the special script and presently authors must write their stories with a particular person in mind. One editor, for example, writes: "It is absurd for anyone to offer me a plot not written with Blank and Blank in mind, because they have such unique personalities that unless a play is specially written for them it will not suit." The names of the players might be replaced by the names of a dozen or more paired or trio stars with equal truth, and yet there is not so much difference, after all, in a story written about Jones and Brown and one written for Black and White. It may be that Jones and Brown are the extremes of height, like Ham and Bud, or a character and a straight comedian, or a fat and a thin man, like the old Plump and Runt, but unless the story essentially hinges upon this matter of size it is possible for a skilled writer to evolve plots that will suit a fat and a thin man as well as a tall and a short man. The plot will be the same, but the development of the story will perhaps be different. In writing for stars it is a better plan to get out a generally useful idea, but to develop this idea especially for the studio to which the idea is first offered. If this studio does not accept, hold the plot but after the details to suit a second or a third or fourth company, writing a new form of the story for each submission until the idea sells. A really good story is a good story no matter by whom played. Of course, it would be ridiculous to send a dromio story to Ham and Bud, because they could not procure doubles, but a story of the rival lovers might be made to fit either Ham and Bud or an Irish-German team. The business will be different, but the idea will remain the same. It will be good practice to begin now to study plot handling. Most practical writers already know how elastic a plot may be. They know that much can be done with a single idea. It is merely a matter of study and experiment, but a veteran can take a story with a Marguerite Clark lead and get one to fit Fatty Arbuckle, if he goes about it right. Take "Miss George Washington," for example. Broaden the farce and it will suit Mr. Arbuckle as well as it did Miss Clark. Just a demonstration, hunt up that synopsis and see how well you can change it over. You may be surprised at the facility with which it may be done.

Of course, it means more work to change a story each time it is sent out, but you must work harder for your money these days. Be prepared to.

Keystones.

Someone wants to know who writes the Keystone comedies It would be better to ask who doesn't, for Keystone plays are not written by an individual but evolved by a troupe of trained "gag men." These men think up good business. One gag may lead to another or they may take the more or less related gags evolved in conference by several writers, combine them and then frame a story around the stunts. The plays are turned out much as the old Weber and Fields burlesques were done. A series of ideas are originated—or remembered—and a more or less coherent plot woven around them. The average Keystone is not the work of a single mind, but the joint product of several men. For this reason it is impossible for an author to write a Keystone and hope to sell it. There is not enough there.

Clips Down.

If you live in a town where letters are postmarked by machinery, place the script in its envelope so that the paper clip is at the bottom. There is less danger that the cancelling machine will tear the container. All post offices so equipped have rubber stamps reading "Damaged by the cancelling machine," and they make frequent use of it.

You Can Quit.

If you do not like the way the business is being run, there is nothing requiring you to continue. If you do stick, don't act as though you had the right to demand that the business support you. It is a gamble, and a poor one just now. Unless you are willing to gamble, look for something more certain. But it will pay to wait, if you can afford to.

Practice Work.

Don't spend all of your time writing plays, or trying to. Even after you have started to sell, give a part of your time to practice. Take an idea and see how many variations you can give the theme. Look at it from all possible angles and then work from those angles. In time you will arrive at a point where you will not write out the first development of a story that suggests itself but will spend time selecting the best of several developments. The really successful author is the man who never stops studying until he lays down his work forever. He is always giving thought and time to improving his technique. The true workman in any line is never content with what he has done. He wants to do better. And better work comes only through practice and study and not through either alone.

Each to His Trade.

Miss Anita Loos, script writer for Douglas Fairbanks, recently lectured the members of the Cinema Composers of Columbia University. She spoke for an hour and a half and advanced many novel theories, perhaps the most striking being her contention that women are better fitted to realize the drama than to create it. She also advanced the argument that the leader was of utmost value in photoplay work, and suggested in effect that the action could be used to advantage merely to lead up to a succession of clever titles. Titles never yet covered a lack of action, but as Miss Loos is particularly clever at writing leaders her preference is natural, if incorrect. A title is often useful in pointing up a comedy situation, but the comedy situation must be there waiting. It cannot merely be action, it must be comedy situation. Hector Turnbull also spoke to the Composers at a recent session.

Another One.

There is another "agent" loose, and he is in a peck of trouble by his own confession because every day he has "urgent requests" from the Motion Picture Producers and "I cannot meet half the demand simply because I cannot find available material." Then he goes on to urge the come-on to send a story with a five-dollar fee. For this he critcises the story, and when the changes have been made he tries to market it and charges ten per cent. If the Post Office inspectors catch him making those cracks about "urgent requests" he'll take a trip to Atlanta and will not have to pay his own railroad fare, either. Motion picture producers are not pestering the agents for stuff. They are too busy throwing them out of their offices. Some of these days we are going to take our gun down and go hunting some of these sales frauds.

Sometimes the stories you write and do not offer for sale are what really sell the stories you get checks for.

Only the Best.

Kipling does not offer for sale everything he writes, which is why he is so well paid for what he does offer of his best.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Double Travel Ghost.

Rhode Island makes the following inquiry:

> Will you please answer the following questions: (A) What will cause a double travel ghost in both directions, practically at the same time? (B) Can a moving picture machine be connected to a two-phase or a three-phase system; if so, how would it be connected and what apparatus can be used between the line and the arc, assuming the systems to be 110 volts?

Double travel ghost could be caused by worn gears, but in that case it would never be in both directions at the same time. If the ghost occurs in both directions at the same time, then either the shutter blade is too narrow or too narrow for the position it occupies with relation to the objective lens, meaning by this its distance from the lens. This latter condition may often be remedied by either changing the position of the shutter by moving the lamp house further back, which has the effect of narrowing the light ray in front of the objective lens. (B) Every time I think they have asked me everything under the blue canopy of heaven, some deep dyed villain comes in with a brand new one. Now I never thought of this particular thing before, but I don't see in reason why you could not connect in on one phase of a three phase system, though it might raise the devil with the balance of the circuit. I would have to look that matter up, and I am away off down here in New Orleans dictating this to a perfectly lovely lady. If my frau could only see me now, I would get my back hair pulled loose, I suppose, and you can readily understand, under the circumstances, I could not undertake to bend my colossal intellect to the consideration of a problem of this kind.

More Trouble.

Carl Schmidt, operator, New Uhlm, Minn., describes his trouble as follows:

> The intermittent movement on one of my 6-A machines is unsteady. Several months ago I adjusted the same for circumferential plate in the sprocket, with excellent results. About three weeks ago the sprocket again developed too much play, and I again adjusted it. It ran smoothly for a day, and then commenced to work irregularly. Some times when looking at the sprocket, when in motion, the teeth appear to shake up and down, and at this time there is a quivering, vertical motion in the picture. This movement in the sprocket is regular, and seems to synchronize with about every two frames. In other words, every other picture seems to move too much or not enough. Increased tension will not stop the trouble. At times, however, the sprocket is absolutely steady, with only an occasional jump. This motion develops only at certain speeds. The sprocket is steady when the machine runs about 50 and 70 per minute. Perhaps I haven't taken up enough of the play, but the sprocket on the other machine has more lost motion and is steady. I have had the sprocket set so that the play could hardly be felt, but under this condition when I turn the flywheel by hand there is a slight binding. Would this do any damage? It cannot be felt when the machine is turned by the crank.
> I also have experienced trouble with the valve in the upper magazine. In the left side is a groove in line with the path of the film. Crooked reels have a tendency to push the film inward against this groove, and when poor patches and edge cracks pass they frequently get caught, thus tearing the film apart. I partly remedied this trouble by putting a washer under the brass collar on the top reel spindle; but even with the reel held out in this fashion there is sometimes trouble where a reel is in extra bad condition. I have a G. E. rectifier which is hooked to the house circuit when it really should be on separate mains from the transformer. The tap for varying amperage is on the second one of the six on the regulating reactance. I dare not increase the amperage, because it will interfere with house wiring and cause sparking at different places, such as wall fans, radiators, fans and motors on the machines; have burnt out light meters by increasing amperage, and have been compelled to run on the low tap. I am, however, not satisfied with my light. From the D. C. side to the machine table switch I have No. 8 wires, and these wires get warm. They are too small, but the manager has refused to furnish wires of proper capacity. The department is indeed helpful and interesting.

It is odd that your manager refuses to get new wires. However, that is up to him, because he is paying for them anyhow, and probably has already paid out sufficient money to have installed several sets of wires. You see, the heating of those wires is consuming power, and that power consumption is being registered on the meter precisely the same as is the current which actually reaches the arc. With larger wires (No. 6) you could get the same screen result with less current, or get a better screen result with the same amount of current. Friend Manager is making a mistake which is rather costly, but if he is willing to pay the bill, why I suppose that is his business. As regards the intermittent of your machine, it is quite evident that it is badly worn and ought to be replaced. There are two ways to proceed: one is to have the Nicholas Power Co., No. 90 Gold Street, New York City, loan you a mechanism to use while you return your machine to them for a thorough overhauling. The other alternative is to purchase a complete framing carriage, install it in place of your present framing carriage, and send the old carriage back for repairs. The better way is, however, to send in the whole mechanism and have the job done right. The reason your intermittent appears to shake is because it is not stopping all the time in the same place. Just why this effect should be present at certain speeds, and not present at other speeds, I do not know. It is a lead pipe cinch, however, that the movement is very badly worn into and unfit to be run any longer.

As to the rectifier: why don't you connect on ahead of the house meter, having the company install a special meter for the rectifier? This will not in the least affect your house lights, assuming that the wires from the transformer to the point where the rectifier leads connect are large enough to carry the combined current necessary to supply the house lights and the projection arc. If they are not large enough, then it is up to the power company to install wires of larger capacity. The reason your motors spark when you use higher amperage is probably found in the fact that, due to house mains of insufficient capacity, or a house meter of insufficient capacity, there is heavy voltage drop, which dims your house lights and alters the speed of the motors, thus altering the curve of the magnetic lines of force, and therefore the sparkless point at which the brushes are presumed to be set.

Excellent.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., says:

> Here is a little stunt I think worth while sending in. It is a glass fibre eraser which is now handled quite generally by stationers. I find it to be a most excellent instrument for scraping the stub ends of a film to be spliced.. The eraser scrapes the film quickly and thoroughly. It is especially effective in digging in and around the sprocket holes. It beats a knife or razor blade by a good long ways, and gives the cement a chance to get a firmer hold on the celluloid. Also it scrapes off a uniform and minimum amount of the celluloid, and thus does not weaken the splice, as scraping with a knife all too often does. The emulsion should first be removed in the usual way by moistening.

The instrument consists of a sort of metal pencil, with a flat end from which protrudes a mass of fine spun glass. These strands are shoved down and out, as they wear off, by means of a screw head at the top of the instrument. Operators who wish to properly roughen the celluloid so that there will be a perfect splice will find the instrument is all that Brother Martin claims.

From Australia.

K. E. Fleming, chief operator Wondergraph theater, Adelaide, South Australia, sends in the following interesting letter, accompanied by several photographs, which will, I believe, prove to be decidedly interesting to United States and Canadian operators. Friend Fleming says:

Dear Brother Richardson: This is my first offense, but I feel I must write you a few lines in appreciation of the excellent work you are doing for operators. The mere fact of my living at the other side of the world has not prevented me from studying your department, and many are the points I have learned, and am still learning from it.

I presume you would be interested in knowing the conditions under which we work in this country. (You bet we are.—Ed.) Projection here is much the same as it is in other countries, with one exception, viz: big pictures, and their attendant difficulties. When I say "big pictures" I mean just what I say. I am showing a 32 foot picture at 175 foot throw, with a 22 foot drop. In showing a dark film we often go as high as 120 amperes, but this offers no difficulty, as the plant is fitted and wired to give the operator anything he calls for—I saw to that.

Enclosed find a few photographs which will explain themselves. There is one attachment I have never heard of in any other theater than ours, and that is the "gate cooler." In the summer time our shade temperature often reaches 112 Fahr., so that you can readily understand running a film at normal speed past a condensed light ray from a 120 ampere arc, in such high initial temperature, means quite some considerable curl. To overcome this we have a small air compressor, running continuously and supplying cool air in a jet at the film gate. This not only keeps the gate cool, but is the best fire preventive I know of—not that we have any fires, dear me no—but one never knows.

The light regulation is another neat fixture. Immediately in front of the operator the shunt regulator is placed; also six switches which control steps in the resistance, which latter is placed outside the operating room chamber, so as to increase the resistance in circuit.

This state, South Australia, is, as yet, the only one to adopt a law providing compulsory examination of operators, but we hope to see other states follow suit. The standard here is fairly high. I am enclosing copy of regulations under which the licenses are issued. The Board of Examiners consists of the government inspector and two leading operators. Thus far this arrangement has given every satisfaction. In looking over the photographs don't imagine that all the theaters out here have plants like this one. We are told by those qualified to know, or, at least, who should be qualified to know, that our outfit is quite up-to-date, and, by the way, the whole works was designed and installed by our own staff. In closing I wish you the compliments of the season. Long may you be spared to carry on the good work, but for goodness sake be careful of that go-devil. I have one myself, therefore I know.

The photographs show one of the most complete theater electrical plants I have, up to date, looked at. The man in Figure 3 is Brother Fleming, chief operator, in charge of this large, up-to-date plant, projecting a 32-foot picture with 100 to 120 amperes of current, yet (get this, some of you swelled-up sapheads) he studies the projection department, although he is located literally on the other side of the world. By so doing he proves himself to be a progressive, up-and-coming, man, because he is not satisfied with the large fund of knowledge he must already possess, but lets no opportunity slip of accumulating more.

And, would you believe it, Friend Fleming, we have, in these United States, men who, while they could no more handle that plant of yours than they could handle the engines of a battle ship, turn up their noses at text books, projection departments, or anything else which would tend to teach them something, thus advertising to the world the fact that there was plenty of bone on hand the day the Creator made their heads.

That is some operating room, Brother Fleming. The only possible criticism I would make would be that the lamp house vent pipes might have been joined and carried outside the room, then by insulating them you would not only stop all radiation of heat, but would also convey the gas formed by volatilization of carbon.

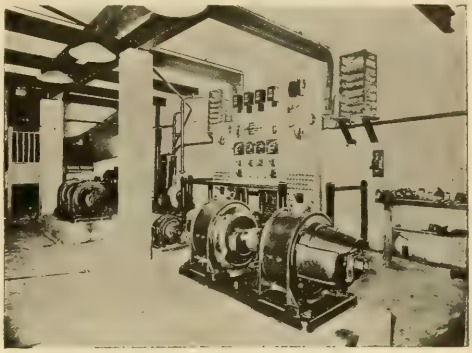

Illustration 2.

To my mind the projection of such huge pictures is pure, unadulterated foolishness. I most emphatically don't believe in it. There can be but little enjoyment in such a picture unless you are seated a long distance away from it. I would not myself outrage my eyes by sitting within less than 50 to 75 feet of a 32 foot picture. And, more than this, every defect in photography is magnified, as, also, is every movement of the film due to mechanical imperfections in either the projector or the film itself. Then, too, there is that 120 ampere stunt. What percentage of additional light do you think you get after you pass the 60 ampere mark? (I take it for granted you use direct current. Of course, if you are using alternating that is something else again.) You know, Brother Fleming, that the spot is a photograph of the crater, and the crater diameter is magnified at the spot as many times as the distance, in inches, from the crater to the optical center of the condenser is contained times in the distance, in inches, from the optical center of the condenser to the film, which means, in effect, that with such a huge crater you are literally compelled to pull your arc away back from the condenser, use very short focal length condenser lenses, with largely increased spherical abbration in consequence, or have a spot of huge size. I cannot figure where you gain practically anything in effective light at the screen after you pass the 80 ampere mark. It seems to me impossible that you can do so, though you do gain enormously in heat, which makes it difficult to avoid condenser breakage.

The regulations which Brother Fleming sends in are as follows:

REGULATIONS UNDER "THE PLACES OF PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT ACT, 1913."

At the Executive Council Office, at Adelaide, this fifth day of March, 1914.

Present—

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor.
